structures of other Christian groups lack divine sanction. Many traditional Christians see this stance as placing Latter-day Saints outside the Christian family as defined by some confessions of faith and accepted ordinances.

Further, Latter-day Saints claim that God spoke and manifested himself not only to persons of biblical times, but also to the people in the Book of Mormon, and that he continues to speak to his people through REVELATION today. Thus, Latter-day Saints are not always viewed as “biblical Christians,” when that term requires the belief that the canon of scripture is complete in the Bible. To the Mormons, God is still a God of continuing revelation, which means that credal and confessional statements are not final. No one confession, or even all of them together, can fully comprehend the dynamism of God. He is to be heard and his words are to be recorded as he gives continuing divine guidance through revelation. Hence, the LDS canon is open; the Doctrine and Covenants becomes an official, open-ended locus for revelations that affect the whole Church; and revelations continue to come to the living prophets, seers, and revelators of the Church, to be communicated to the members.

Latter-day Saints hold that Christians in the broadest sense are those who base their beliefs on the teachings of Jesus and who have a personal relationship with him. Within that definition they recognize Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, Protestant, and Latter-day Saint Christians, with the understanding that Latter-day Saint Christianity is the restored fulness of Christ’s gospel. The lives of Latter-day Saints are their affirmations of their Christian faith. As President Brigham YOUNG stated, “If we are not Christlike we are not Christian” (Watson).

Traditional Christianity often defines Christian affiliation as the acceptance of certain beliefs and dogmas. Because Latter-day Saints do not accept certain extrascriptural dogmas—especially those bearing the philosophical overlay of much post-New Testament Christian teaching—some in other churches feel that Latter-day Saints cannot be Christian. They are not “orthodox” in this sense. But for the Mormon, right beliefs (orthodoxy) and right behaviors (orthopraxy) are those congruent with the revealed mind and will of the Lord. Some of the misunderstandings between traditional communities and the Latter-day Saints arise from this issue: whether Christians must first believe traditional, especially credal, dogmas in order to live “correct Christian lives.”

An inclusive definition of Latter-day Saint Christianity is in the Book of Mormon: “And we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins” (2 Ne. 25:26). Christ and his atoning sacrifice have been the undergirding message of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints from its inception. Christ has been the central message of all the latter-day PROPHETS and APOSTLES. They understand that Old Testament prophets anticipated him, New Testament apostles preached and testified of him, Book of Mormon prophets heralded him, and the Doctrine and Covenants presents his word to this generation. Jesus Christ is the living Lord of the Church. Apart from him there is no salvation.

President Spencer W. KIMBALL said, “There can be no real and true Christianity, even with good works, unless we are deeply and personally committed to the reality of Jesus Christ as the Only Begotten Son of the Father who bought us, who purchased us in the great act of atonement” (Kimball, p. 68). He also expressed the hope that all would come to realize that every LDS prayer, hymn, and sermon is centered in the Lord Jesus Christ. “We are true followers of Jesus Christ; and we hope the world will finally come to the conclusion that we are Christians, if there are any in the world” (Kimball, p. 434).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gealy, F. D. “Christian.” In The Interpreter’s Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1, pp. 571–72. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Grundmann, Walter. “Chiro.” Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, Vol. 9, pp. 27–580. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964–1974.
- Kimball, Edward L., ed. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Watson, Eldon J., comp. Brigham Young Addresses, Vol. 4, p. 5 for July 14, 1861. Unpublished, March 1980.

ROGER R. KELLER

---

CHRISTMAS

Christmas is the holiday when Latter-day Saints and other Christians celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ. This epochal event, seen in vision by ancient prophets, heralded the entry into mortality of the Son of God, the JEHOVAH of the Old Testament, and the promised Messiah. Even though Latter-day Saints believe that the birth of Jesus actually occurred in the spring of the year (D&C 20:1; see APRIL 6), they observe the December celebration when, more than at any other time of year, the Christian world unites in remembering Christ's birth and practicing his teachings of love, charity, self-sacrifice, and tolerance.

Most Latter-day Saints include some of the traditions, games, decorations, music, and food associated with the Christmas customs of their homelands in their family celebrations. Such items as Christmas trees, stockings, gifts, and greeting cards add to the beauty of the holiday and are not discouraged. But the recommended focus is religious. The Church encourages family closeness, concern for neighbors, thoughtfulness for fellow workers, renewal of friendships, and acts of Christ-like love, giving, and celebration. Appropriate sermons, lessons, songs, and programs are presented in Sabbath services during the Christmas season. Latter-day Saints are cautioned that holiday shopping, decorating, and festivities should not obscure the remembrance of Christ nor hinder the quest for peace on earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Packer, Boyd K. "Keeping Christmas." In BYU Speeches of the Year, 1966–1967. Provo, Utah, 1967.

MARY ELLEN STEWART JAMISON

---

CHRISTOLOGY

Christology is the theological study of the human and divine natures and roles of Jesus Christ.

It developed soon after the death of the apostles in the first century, as conflicting teachings arose over the proper understanding of Christ. Christology served both as a response to heresies and as a development of a systematic theology that orthodox Christians could accept. Eventually these teachings were discussed in councils and formulated into CREEDS, for instance, at Nicaea (A.D. 325), Constantinople (A.D. 381), and Chalcedon (A.D. 451). These creeds insisted upon a full communion of Christ's divine and human natures, as opposed to the teaching that he was either divine or human, or part one and part the other. In every sense, the councils concluded, Christ is God and of the same substance (homooousios).

Various Christologies competed in the early Christian church. Docetists taught that Jesus Christ only seemed to suffer on the cross, since he only appeared to have a body. Modalists taught that there is only one God in three modes; Arianism, that there are three persons united in purpose. Nestorianism insisted upon two separate wills in a dyadic unity, while Apollonarianism taught that Jesus' human body was inhabited by a divine soul.

Over the years, others have insisted that Jesus Christ is merely the ideal man for humanity, since Jesus often called himself "the Son of man." They have felt that he seldom drew attention to his divinity, as Albert Schweitzer argues in his famous Quest of the Historical Jesus (1911).

Some modern Lutheran theologians believe that Jesus was not simultaneously on the earth as a human and in heaven as God. Under this view, Jesus was divine in the PREEXISTENCE but gave up his godly status and divine properties, except moral attributes, and took upon himself flesh and became a man. This is called the "kenotic" theory.

John Hick, a British philosopher-theologian, feels that Christianity should return to the earliest Christology, the "grace" theory, which teaches that Christ was transformed into a being sharing the divine properties by being infused with his Father's grace.

Although the term "Christology" is not frequently used by Latter-day Saints, the doctrine of the Church can be described in the following manner: Jesus Christ descended from his high pre-existent station as a God when he came to earth to die for mankind's sins (see JESUS CHRIST: FIRST BORN IN THE SPIRIT; CONDESCENSION OF GOD). He was JEHOVAH come to earth in a physical body as the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh (see JESUS CHRIST: ONLY BEGOTTEN IN THE FLESH). While on earth he was still God, but he received from his Father "grace for grace," as do God's other children (D&C 93:12; see JESUS CHRIST: MINISTRY OF). The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants speak forcefully of the divine sonship of Christ and also of his humanity (Mosiah 15:2–3; Alma 6:8; 11:38; 13:16; 34:2; 3 Ne. 11:7, 28:10; D&C 93; see JESUS CHRIST, FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP).

Like Jesus Christ, all mortals live in a state of humiliation, but through the mediation of the Christ they may progress to a state of EXALTATION (see DEIFICATION; GODHOOD). There is no ultimate ment, and the promised Messiah. Even though Latter-day Saints believe that the birth of Jesus actually occurred in the spring of the year (D&C 20:1; see APRIL 6), they observe the December celebration when, more than at any other time of year, the Christian world unites in remembering Christ's birth and practicing his teachings of love, charity, self-sacrifice, and tolerance.

Most Latter-day Saints include some of the traditions, games, decorations, music, and food associated with the Christmas customs of their homelands in their family celebrations. Such items as Christmas trees, stockings, gifts, and greeting cards add to the beauty of the holiday and are not discouraged. But the recommended focus is religious. The Church encourages family closeness, concern for neighbors, thoughtfulness for fellow workers, renewal of friendships, and acts of Christ-like love, giving, and celebration. Appropriate sermons, lessons, songs, and programs are presented in Sabbath services during the Christmas season. Latter-day Saints are cautioned that holiday shopping, decorating, and festivities should not obscure the remembrance of Christ nor hinder the quest for peace on earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Packer, Boyd K. "Keeping Christmas." In BYU Speeches of the Year, 1966–1967. Provo, Utah, 1967.

MARY ELLEN STEWART JAMISON

---

CHRISTOLOGY

Christology is the theological study of the human and divine natures and roles of Jesus Christ.

It developed soon after the death of the apostles in the first century, as conflicting teachings arose over the proper understanding of Christ. Christology served both as a response to heresies and as a development of a systematic theology that orthodox Christians could accept. Eventually these teachings were discussed in councils and formulated into CREEDS, for instance, at Nicaea (A.D. 325), Constantinople (A.D. 381), and Chalcedon (A.D. 451). These creeds insisted upon a full communion of Christ's divine and human natures, as opposed to the teaching that he was either divine or human, or part one and part the other. In every sense, the councils concluded, Christ is God and of the same substance (homooousios).

Various Christologies competed in the early Christian church. Docetists taught that Jesus Christ only seemed to suffer on the cross, since he only appeared to have a body. Modalists taught that there is only one God in three modes; Arianism, that there are three persons united in purpose. Nestorianism insisted upon two separate wills in a dyadic unity, while Apollonarianism taught that Jesus' human body was inhabited by a divine soul.

Over the years, others have insisted that Jesus Christ is merely the ideal man for humanity, since Jesus often called himself "the Son of man." They have felt that he seldom drew attention to his divinity, as Albert Schweitzer argues in his famous Quest of the Historical Jesus (1911).

Some modern Lutheran theologians believe that Jesus was not simultaneously on the earth as a human and in heaven as God. Under this view, Jesus was divine in the PREEXISTENCE but gave up his godly status and divine properties, except moral attributes, and took upon himself flesh and became a man. This is called the "kenotic" theory.

John Hick, a British philosopher-theologian, feels that Christianity should return to the earliest Christology, the "grace" theory, which teaches that Christ was transformed into a being sharing the divine properties by being infused with his Father's grace.

Although the term "Christology" is not frequently used by Latter-day Saints, the doctrine of the Church can be described in the following manner: Jesus Christ descended from his high pre-existent station as a God when he came to earth to die for mankind's sins (see JESUS CHRIST: FIRST BORN IN THE SPIRIT; CONDESCENSION OF GOD). He was JEHOVAH come to earth in a physical body as the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh (see JESUS CHRIST: ONLY BEGOTTEN IN THE FLESH). While on earth he was still God, but he received from his Father "grace for grace," as do God's other children (D&C 93:12; see JESUS CHRIST: MINISTRY OF). The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants speak forcefully of the divine sonship of Christ and also of his humanity (Mosiah 15:2–3; Alma 6:8; 11:38; 13:16; 34:2; 3 Ne. 11:7, 28:10; D&C 93; see JESUS CHRIST, FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP).

Like Jesus Christ, all mortals live in a state of humiliation, but through the mediation of the Christ they may progress to a state of EXALTATION (see DEIFICATION; GODHOOD). There is no ultimate disparity between the divine and human natures; Joseph SMITH asserted that mankind is of the same species as God, having been made in God's image (theomorphism) and being eternal, with unlimited capacity (TPJS, pp. 345–46). One early LDS leader proclaimed, "As man now is, God once was. As God now is, man may be" (Lorenzo SNOW). Latter-day Saints speak of man as a god in embryo and of Jesus Christ as mankind's elder brother. A favorite LDS children's hymn is titled "I Am a Child of God."

Latter-day Saint doctrine can be understood to have appreciation for Christ and applications for man that go beyond traditional Christology. It is LDS teaching that all the Father's children possess the potential to strive toward the same godhood that the GODHEAD already has; because in their humanity there is a divinity that is progressing and growing according to the faith, intelligence, and love that abound in their souls. Like the attribute of perfection, divinity is not a static absolute but a dynamic progression (see ETERNAL PROGRESSION).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Raymond E. "Christology." In The New Jerome Biblical Commentary, ed. R. Brown, J. Fitzmyer, and R. Murphy. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1990.
- Hick, John. "An Inspiration Christology for a Religiously Plural World." In Encountering Jesus: A Debate on Christology, ed. Stephen T. Davis, pp. 5–22. Atlanta, 1988.
- O'Collins, Gerald. "Jesus." ER 8:19–23.

GARY P. GILLUM

CHRISTUS STATUE

Replicas of the Christus statue by Danish sculptor Bertel Thorvaldsen (1768–1844) are located in several LDS VISITORS CENTERS. These white carrara marble statues of Christ, with his hands outstretched, inviting all to come to him, help present the central doctrine of the Church: that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God and the Savior and Redeemer of the world.

The first such statue acquired by the Church was a gift of Stephen L Richards, First Counselor to President David O. McKay (1951–1959). In 1966 this heroic-size (11 feet, 1 inch) Christus was placed in the North Visitors Center on TEMPLE SQUARE in Salt Lake City.

The second Christus was commissioned for display in the Church's pavilion at the New York World's Fair (1964–1965) and was sculpted by Aldo Rebachi of Florence, Italy. It was intended to help visitors understand that Latter-day Saints (or Mormons) are Christians. This statue was later placed in the Visitors Center on the grounds of the Los Angeles Temple.

Christus, by Bertel Thorvaldsen (c. 1965, Carrara marble replica of 1821 original, 3.36 m), in the North Visitors Center, Temple Square, Salt Lake City. Thorvaldsen's statue of the resurrected Christ helps present LDS belief in Jesus Christ, the son of God and redeemer of the world. It stands in a rotunda before a mural of the universe to show that "by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created" (D&C 76:24).

Additional Christus statues are currently located at visitors centers adjacent to temples in New Zealand; Hawaii; Mexico City; Washington, D.C.; and Mesa, Arizona.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Marshall, Richard J. "Mormon Pavilion at the New York World's Fair . . . A Progress Report." IE 68 (Apr. 1965):290–97, 334–35.

disparity between the divine and human natures; Joseph SMITH asserted that mankind is of the same species as God, having been made in God's image (theomorphism) and being eternal, with unlimited capacity (TPJS, pp. 345–46). One early LDS leader proclaimed, "As man now is, God once was. As God now is, man may be" (Lorenzo SNOW). Latter-day Saints speak of man as a god in embryo and of Jesus Christ as mankind's elder brother. A favorite LDS children's hymn is titled "I Am a Child of God."

Latter-day Saint doctrine can be understood to have appreciation for Christ and applications for man that go beyond traditional Christology. It is LDS teaching that all the Father's children possess the potential to strive toward the same godhood that the GODHEAD already has; because in their humanity there is a divinity that is progressing and growing according to the faith, intelligence, and love that abound in their souls. Like the attribute of perfection, divinity is not a static absolute but a dynamic progression (see ETERNAL PROGRESSION).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Raymond E. "Christology." In The New Jerome Biblical Commentary, ed. R. Brown, J. Fitzmyer, and R. Murphy. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1990.
- Hick, John. "An Inspiration Christology for a Religiously Plural World." In Encountering Jesus: A Debate on Christology, ed. Stephen T. Davis, pp. 5–22. Atlanta, 1988.
- O'Collins, Gerald. "Jesus." ER 8:19–23.

GARY P. GILLUM

CHRISTUS STATUE

Replicas of the Christus statue by Danish sculptor Bertel Thorvaldsen (1768–1844) are located in several LDS VISITORS CENTERS. These white carrara marble statues of Christ, with his hands outstretched, inviting all to come to him, help present the central doctrine of the Church: that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God and the Savior and Redeemer of the world.

The first such statue acquired by the Church was a gift of Stephen L Richards, First Counselor to President David O. McKay (1951–1959). In 1966 this heroic-size (11 feet, 1 inch) Christus was placed in the North Visitors Center on TEMPLE SQUARE in Salt Lake City.

The second Christus was commissioned for display in the Church's pavilion at the New York World's Fair (1964–1965) and was sculpted by Aldo Rebachi of Florence, Italy. It was intended to help visitors understand that Latter-day Saints (or Mormons) are Christians. This statue was later placed in the Visitors Center on the grounds of the Los Angeles Temple.

Christus, by Bertel Thorvaldsen (c. 1965, Carrara marble replica of 1821 original, 3.36 m), in the North Visitors Center, Temple Square, Salt Lake City. Thorvaldsen's statue of the resurrected Christ helps present LDS belief in Jesus Christ, the son of God and redeemer of the world. It stands in a rotunda before a mural of the universe to show that "by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created" (D&C 76:24).

Additional Christus statues are currently located at visitors centers adjacent to temples in New Zealand; Hawaii; Mexico City; Washington, D.C.; and Mesa, Arizona.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Marshall, Richard J. "Mormon Pavilion at the New York World's Fair . . . A Progress Report." IE 68 (Apr. 1965):290–97, 334–35.

Sheridan, Luise. "Bertel Thorvaldsen: Creator of Christus." IE 67 (Apr. 1964):272–75, 307.

Top, Brent L. "Legacy of the Mormon Pavilion New York World's Fair." Ensign 19 (Oct. 1989):22–28.

FLORENCE SMITH JACOBSEN

CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES)

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has established educational programs throughout the United States and in some ninety other countries to provide an effective combination of religious and secular education to its members. The primary aim shared by these programs is to assist students in gaining an understanding and personal witness of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ at the same time as they pursue their secular studies. Latter-day Saints are taught by their leaders and their scriptures to seek after truth in every sphere.

CES comprises the various educational programs of the Church. BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY, BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY—HAWAII CAMPUS, RICKS COLLEGE, and LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE provide higher education balanced with religious instruction for students attending these Church-owned institutions. SEMINARIES offer weekday religious instruction for high school students, and INSTITUTES offer similar instruction for college students attending non-LDS colleges and universities. Extensive adult and continuing education programs with headquarters at BYU provide educational opportunities for those not officially enrolled in the formal institutions. In addition, the Church maintains a few elementary and secondary schools in less developed nations.

EDUCATIONAL PHILOSOPHY. Since the early days of the Church, leaders have placed a strong emphasis on education. The Prophet Joseph SMITH, in discussing the PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE, consistently stressed learning. He said that one of the fundamental principles of Mormonism is to "receive truth let it come from where it may" (WJS, p. 229). Revelations given to Joseph Smith state that "the glory of God is intelligence" (D&C 93:36) and that "whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection" (D&C 130:18). Other revelations further emphasize the importance of both religious and secular learning:

Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly . . . in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home, things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms [D&C 88:78–79].

Brigham YOUNG, the second president of the Church, advanced the same concept, teaching that "all wisdom, and all the arts and sciences in the world are from God, and are designed for the good of His people" (JD 12:147). These ideas and scriptures have become the foundation of the educational philosophy of the Church (see EDUCATION: ATTITUDES TOWARD EDUCATION).

HISTORY OF EARLY EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS. As the Saints moved to Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, they established elementary and secondary schools in each settlement. SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS were organized for adult leaders beginning in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1833. In 1840, a university was established in Nauvoo. During their trek to the Rocky Mountains the Saints conducted elementary classes in the temporary camps. In the fall of 1847, just three months after the first company of PIONEERS arrived in the SALT LAKE VALLEY, schools were organized. Three years following, in 1850, the UNIVERSITY OF DESERET was founded. (In 1892 the territorial legislature changed the name to the University of Utah.)

Beginning in 1875, the Church established ACADEMIES throughout the intermountain United States and some in Canada and Mexico to provide elementary and secondary secular and religious education. To coordinate the programs and growth of the academies, a General Church Board of Education was organized in 1888, consisting of selected Church leaders. Karl G. Maeser was named the first superintendent of Church schools, a position that later became the Commissioner of Church Education. By 1907 the Church Board of Education was responsible for the administration of some thirty-five academies.

About 1890, with the increased availability of free public high schools, attendance at Church academies declined. Some closed their doors, and others were reorganized as junior colleges. By 1931 only Juárez Academy in Mexico remained as

Sheridan, Luise. "Bertel Thorvaldsen: Creator of Christus." IE 67 (Apr. 1964):272–75, 307.

Top, Brent L. "Legacy of the Mormon Pavilion New York World's Fair." Ensign 19 (Oct. 1989):22–28.

FLORENCE SMITH JACOBSEN

CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES)

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has established educational programs throughout the United States and in some ninety other countries to provide an effective combination of religious and secular education to its members. The primary aim shared by these programs is to assist students in gaining an understanding and personal witness of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ at the same time as they pursue their secular studies. Latter-day Saints are taught by their leaders and their scriptures to seek after truth in every sphere.

CES comprises the various educational programs of the Church. BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY, BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY—HAWAII CAMPUS, RICKS COLLEGE, and LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE provide higher education balanced with religious instruction for students attending these Church-owned institutions. SEMINARIES offer weekday religious instruction for high school students, and INSTITUTES offer similar instruction for college students attending non-LDS colleges and universities. Extensive adult and continuing education programs with headquarters at BYU provide educational opportunities for those not officially enrolled in the formal institutions. In addition, the Church maintains a few elementary and secondary schools in less developed nations.

EDUCATIONAL PHILOSOPHY. Since the early days of the Church, leaders have placed a strong emphasis on education. The Prophet Joseph SMITH, in discussing the PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE, consistently stressed learning. He said that one of the fundamental principles of Mormonism is to "receive truth let it come from where it may" (WJS, p. 229). Revelations given to Joseph Smith state that "the glory of God is intelligence" (D&C 93:36) and that "whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection" (D&C 130:18). Other revelations further emphasize the importance of both religious and secular learning:

Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly . . . in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home, things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms [D&C 88:78–79].

Brigham YOUNG, the second president of the Church, advanced the same concept, teaching that "all wisdom, and all the arts and sciences in the world are from God, and are designed for the good of His people" (JD 12:147). These ideas and scriptures have become the foundation of the educational philosophy of the Church (see EDUCATION: ATTITUDES TOWARD EDUCATION).

HISTORY OF EARLY EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS. As the Saints moved to Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, they established elementary and secondary schools in each settlement. SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS were organized for adult leaders beginning in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1833. In 1840, a university was established in Nauvoo. During their trek to the Rocky Mountains the Saints conducted elementary classes in the temporary camps. In the fall of 1847, just three months after the first company of PIONEERS arrived in the SALT LAKE VALLEY, schools were organized. Three years following, in 1850, the UNIVERSITY OF DESERET was founded. (In 1892 the territorial legislature changed the name to the University of Utah.)

Beginning in 1875, the Church established ACADEMIES throughout the intermountain United States and some in Canada and Mexico to provide elementary and secondary secular and religious education. To coordinate the programs and growth of the academies, a General Church Board of Education was organized in 1888, consisting of selected Church leaders. Karl G. Maeser was named the first superintendent of Church schools, a position that later became the Commissioner of Church Education. By 1907 the Church Board of Education was responsible for the administration of some thirty-five academies.

About 1890, with the increased availability of free public high schools, attendance at Church academies declined. Some closed their doors, and others were reorganized as junior colleges. By 1931 only Juárez Academy in Mexico remained as an academy. At that time the Church began transferring its junior colleges to state governments. However, it retained Ricks College in Rexburg, Idaho, and Brigham Young Academy in Provo, Utah, which developed into Brigham Young University.

As an increasing number of LDS youth began to attend public secondary schools, Church leaders recognized the need to provide a religious curriculum to complement regular secular studies. In 1912 the Church began building seminaries on Church-owned property adjacent to public high schools, where students could take a daily class in religion. Some public districts released students for an hour for this purpose; other students attended early morning classes before school started. To facilitate the religious training of students attending non-LDS colleges and universities, the Church established institutes of religion adjacent to college campuses beginning in 1926. The success of seminaries and institutes resulted in the spread of these programs to many parts of the world.

ORGANIZATION. In 1989 the Church Board of Education decided to decentralize the administration of all CES programs and the position of commissioner was abolished. Direct administration of Brigham Young University, Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus, Ricks College, and LDS Business College was taken over by the boards of trustees legally established for each institution. These boards all have the same membership as the Church Board of Education. They are comprised of the First Presidency and other General Authorities and officers of the Church as assigned, including specifically the presidents of the two women's AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS. By virtue of their assignments to each of these boards, these officers serve each institution concurrently. Also, the operation of seminaries, institutes of religion, religious education in adult and continuing education programs, and the operation of elementary and secondary schools of the Church is guided by the general Church Board of Education.

CHURCH SCHOOLS, SEMINARIES, AND INSTITUTES. Members of the Church are encouraged to take full advantage of public education opportunities where available. However, in some areas where there is a high concentration of members and few public education opportunities, the Church Board of Education has established elementary, middle, or secondary schools in which both secular and religious instruction is offered. Some 9,300 students attend Church schools located in Mexico, Kiribati, Fiji, Tonga, Western Samoa, and New Zealand. While serving as Commissioner of Church Education, Neal A. Maxwell explained the objectives of these schools: "Literacy and basic education are gospel needs. Without literacy individuals are handicapped—spiritually, intellectually, physically, socially and economically. Education is often not only the key to the individual member's economic future, but also to his opportunities for self-realization, for full Church service and for contributing to the world around him—spiritually, politically, culturally and socially" (Annual Report, 1971).

Where public education is readily available, CES offers seminary and institute programs to supplement secular education with religious teachings. During the 1988–1989 school year, 255,361 high school students participated in seminary, constituting 55 percent of all eligible LDS youth. Institute enrollment was 125,534—54 percent of those eligible. Courses in seminaries and institutes center around the reading and study of the Old Testament, New Testament, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants and Church history, and Pearl of Great Price. The teachings of these courses emphasize the reality of a living God, the resurrected Christ, the visitation of heavenly beings in restoring the gospel and Church of Jesus Christ to Joseph Smith, the continuing nature of revelation, the teachings of living prophets, and the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT. Students in seminary and institute are taught that personal religious knowledge can be obtained by seeking individual revelation, living the principles taught by Christ, and witnessing the results of doing the will of God.

The CES Salt Lake office is responsible for maintaining the quality of the curriculum and teaching staff of seminaries and institutes. Full-time teachers within the United States and Canada are required to have a bachelor's degree and to participate in an intensive training course at BYU or at one of the approved institutes. The training procedure varies somewhat in areas outside the United States and Canada where there are fewer Church members.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Arrington, Leonard J. "The Founding of the L.D.S. Institutes of Religion." Dialogue 2 (Summer 1967):137–47.

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound, pp. 264–75. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Bennion, M. Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Berrett, William E. A Miracle in Weekday Religious Education. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Buchanan, Frederiek S. "Education Among the Mormons: Brigham Young and the Schools of Utah." History of Education Quarterly 22 (Winter 1982):435–59.
- Chamberlin, Ralph V. The University of Utah, A History of Its First Hundred Years 1850 to 1950. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- French, Calvin V. "Organization and Administration of the Latter-day Saint School System of Free Education, Common School Through University at Nauvoo, Illinois, 1840–1845." Master's thesis, Temple University, 1965.
- Monnett, John Daniel. "The Mormon Church and Its Private School System in Utah: The Emergence of the Academies, 1880–1892." Ph.D. diss., University of Utah, 1984.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "Utah's Educational Innovation: LDS Religion Classes, 1890–1929." Utah Historical Quarterly 43 (Fall 1975):379–89.
- Tuttle, A. Theodore. "Released Time Religious Education Program of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Master's thesis, Stanford University, 1949.

WILLIAM E. BERRETT

CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN

The church of the Firstborn is Christ's heavenly church, and its members are exalted beings who gain an inheritance in the highest heaven of the celestial world and for whom the family continues in eternity.

In the scriptures Jesus Christ is called the Firstborn. He was the first spirit child born of God the Father in the premortal existence and was in the beginning with God (John 1:1–5, 14). Christ also became the Firstborn from the dead, the first person resurrected, "that in all things he might have the preeminence" (Col. 1:18; Acts 26:23; 1 Cor. 15:23; Rev. 1:5). Even as the FIRST PRINCIPLES and ORDINANCES, including baptism in water and the reception of the Holy Ghost, constitute the gate into the earthly Church of Jesus Christ, so higher ordinances of the priesthood constitute the gate into the church of the Firstborn. To secure the blessings that pertain to the church of the Firstborn, one must obey the gospel from the heart, receive all of the ordinances that pertain to the house of the Lord, and be sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE in the celestial kingdom of God (D&C 76:67, 71, 94; 77:11; 78:21; 88:1–5; TPJS, p. 237).

Revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH supplement those of the New Testament to indicate that the church of the Firstborn consists of those who have the inheritance of the Firstborn and become joint-heirs with Christ in receiving all that the Father has (Rom. 8:14–17; D&C 84:33–38; see HEIRS OF GOD). The Lord said, "If you keep my commandments you shall receive of his fulness, and be glorified in me as I am in the Father; . . . I . . . am the Firstborn; . . . And all those who are begotten through me are partakers of the glory of the same, and are the church of the Firstborn" (D&C 93:20–22). The church of the Firstborn is the divine patriarchal order in its eternal form. Building the priesthood family order on this earth by receiving sealings in the temple is a preparation and foundation for this blessing in eternity (see GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM).

When persons have proved themselves faithful in all things required by the Lord, it is their privilege to receive covenants and obligations that will enable them to be heirs of God as members of the church of the Firstborn. They are "sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise" and are those "into whose hands the Father has given all things" (D&C 76:51–55). They will be priests and priestesses, kings and queens, receiving the Father's glory, having the fulness of knowledge, wisdom, power, and dominion (D&C 76:56–62; cf. 107:19). At the second coming of Jesus Christ, the "general assembly of the church of the firstborn" will descend with him (Heb. 12:22–23; JST Gen. 9:23; D&C 76:54, 63).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS, Vol. 2, pp. 8–9, 41–49. Salt Lake City, 1973.

IVAN J. BARRETT

CHURCH GROWTH

See: Vital Statistics

CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, THE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the official name of the Church established on April 6, 1830, at Fayette, New York, under the

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound, pp. 264–75. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Bennion, M. Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Berrett, William E. A Miracle in Weekday Religious Education. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Buchanan, Frederiek S. "Education Among the Mormons: Brigham Young and the Schools of Utah." History of Education Quarterly 22 (Winter 1982):435–59.
- Chamberlin, Ralph V. The University of Utah, A History of Its First Hundred Years 1850 to 1950. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- French, Calvin V. "Organization and Administration of the Latter-day Saint School System of Free Education, Common School Through University at Nauvoo, Illinois, 1840–1845." Master's thesis, Temple University, 1965.
- Monnett, John Daniel. "The Mormon Church and Its Private School System in Utah: The Emergence of the Academies, 1880–1892." Ph.D. diss., University of Utah, 1984.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "Utah's Educational Innovation: LDS Religion Classes, 1890–1929." Utah Historical Quarterly 43 (Fall 1975):379–89.
- Tuttle, A. Theodore. "Released Time Religious Education Program of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Master's thesis, Stanford University, 1949.

WILLIAM E. BERRETT

CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN

The church of the Firstborn is Christ's heavenly church, and its members are exalted beings who gain an inheritance in the highest heaven of the celestial world and for whom the family continues in eternity.

In the scriptures Jesus Christ is called the Firstborn. He was the first spirit child born of God the Father in the premortal existence and was in the beginning with God (John 1:1–5, 14). Christ also became the Firstborn from the dead, the first person resurrected, "that in all things he might have the preeminence" (Col. 1:18; Acts 26:23; 1 Cor. 15:23; Rev. 1:5). Even as the FIRST PRINCIPLES and ORDINANCES, including baptism in water and the reception of the Holy Ghost, constitute the gate into the earthly Church of Jesus Christ, so higher ordinances of the priesthood constitute the gate into the church of the Firstborn. To secure the blessings that pertain to the church of the Firstborn, one must obey the gospel from the heart, receive all of the ordinances that pertain to the house of the Lord, and be sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE in the celestial kingdom of God (D&C 76:67, 71, 94; 77:11; 78:21; 88:1–5; TPJS, p. 237).

Revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH supplement those of the New Testament to indicate that the church of the Firstborn consists of those who have the inheritance of the Firstborn and become joint-heirs with Christ in receiving all that the Father has (Rom. 8:14–17; D&C 84:33–38; see HEIRS OF GOD). The Lord said, "If you keep my commandments you shall receive of his fulness, and be glorified in me as I am in the Father; . . . I . . . am the Firstborn; . . . And all those who are begotten through me are partakers of the glory of the same, and are the church of the Firstborn" (D&C 93:20–22). The church of the Firstborn is the divine patriarchal order in its eternal form. Building the priesthood family order on this earth by receiving sealings in the temple is a preparation and foundation for this blessing in eternity (see GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM).

When persons have proved themselves faithful in all things required by the Lord, it is their privilege to receive covenants and obligations that will enable them to be heirs of God as members of the church of the Firstborn. They are "sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise" and are those "into whose hands the Father has given all things" (D&C 76:51–55). They will be priests and priestesses, kings and queens, receiving the Father's glory, having the fulness of knowledge, wisdom, power, and dominion (D&C 76:56–62; cf. 107:19). At the second coming of Jesus Christ, the "general assembly of the church of the firstborn" will descend with him (Heb. 12:22–23; JST Gen. 9:23; D&C 76:54, 63).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS, Vol. 2, pp. 8–9, 41–49. Salt Lake City, 1973.

IVAN J. BARRETT

CHURCH GROWTH

See: Vital Statistics

CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, THE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the official name of the Church established on April 6, 1830, at Fayette, New York, under the

- Backman, Milton V., Jr. The Heavens Resound, pp. 264–75. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Bennion, M. Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Berrett, William E. A Miracle in Weekday Religious Education. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Buchanan, Frederiek S. "Education Among the Mormons: Brigham Young and the Schools of Utah." History of Education Quarterly 22 (Winter 1982):435–59.
- Chamberlin, Ralph V. The University of Utah, A History of Its First Hundred Years 1850 to 1950. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- French, Calvin V. "Organization and Administration of the Latter-day Saint School System of Free Education, Common School Through University at Nauvoo, Illinois, 1840–1845." Master's thesis, Temple University, 1965.
- Monnett, John Daniel. "The Mormon Church and Its Private School System in Utah: The Emergence of the Academies, 1880–1892." Ph.D. diss., University of Utah, 1984.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "Utah's Educational Innovation: LDS Religion Classes, 1890–1929." Utah Historical Quarterly 43 (Fall 1975):379–89.
- Tuttle, A. Theodore. "Released Time Religious Education Program of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Master's thesis, Stanford University, 1949.

WILLIAM E. BERRETT

CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN

The church of the Firstborn is Christ's heavenly church, and its members are exalted beings who gain an inheritance in the highest heaven of the celestial world and for whom the family continues in eternity.

In the scriptures Jesus Christ is called the Firstborn. He was the first spirit child born of God the Father in the premortal existence and was in the beginning with God (John 1:1–5, 14). Christ also became the Firstborn from the dead, the first person resurrected, "that in all things he might have the preeminence" (Col. 1:18; Acts 26:23; 1 Cor. 15:23; Rev. 1:5). Even as the FIRST PRINCIPLES and ORDINANCES, including baptism in water and the reception of the Holy Ghost, constitute the gate into the earthly Church of Jesus Christ, so higher ordinances of the priesthood constitute the gate into the church of the Firstborn. To secure the blessings that pertain to the church of the Firstborn, one must obey the gospel from the heart, receive all of the ordinances that pertain to the house of the Lord, and be sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE in the celestial kingdom of God (D&C 76:67, 71, 94; 77:11; 78:21; 88:1–5; TPJS, p. 237).

Revelations to the Prophet Joseph SMITH supplement those of the New Testament to indicate that the church of the Firstborn consists of those who have the inheritance of the Firstborn and become joint-heirs with Christ in receiving all that the Father has (Rom. 8:14–17; D&C 84:33–38; see HEIRS OF GOD). The Lord said, "If you keep my commandments you shall receive of his fulness, and be glorified in me as I am in the Father; . . . I . . . am the Firstborn; . . . And all those who are begotten through me are partakers of the glory of the same, and are the church of the Firstborn" (D&C 93:20–22). The church of the Firstborn is the divine patriarchal order in its eternal form. Building the priesthood family order on this earth by receiving sealings in the temple is a preparation and foundation for this blessing in eternity (see GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM).

When persons have proved themselves faithful in all things required by the Lord, it is their privilege to receive covenants and obligations that will enable them to be heirs of God as members of the church of the Firstborn. They are "sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise" and are those "into whose hands the Father has given all things" (D&C 76:51–55). They will be priests and priestesses, kings and queens, receiving the Father's glory, having the fulness of knowledge, wisdom, power, and dominion (D&C 76:56–62; cf. 107:19). At the second coming of Jesus Christ, the "general assembly of the church of the firstborn" will descend with him (Heb. 12:22–23; JST Gen. 9:23; D&C 76:54, 63).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS, Vol. 2, pp. 8–9, 41–49. Salt Lake City, 1973.

IVAN J. BARRETT

CHURCH GROWTH

See: Vital Statistics

CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, THE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the official name of the Church established on April 6, 1830, at Fayette, New York, under the direction of the Prophet Joseph SMITH. It is commonly referred to as the Mormon Church because of its belief in the Book of Mormon, and members are often called Mormons or Latter-day Saints. Originally chartered with six members, the Church has grown into an international organization encompassing millions of members in many countries in the world.

From 1830 until 1838, members of the Church referred to it as “The Church of the Latter-day Saints” or “The Church of Christ.” On April 26, 1838, the official title of the Church was given by revelation: “For thus shall my church be called in the last days, even The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints” (D&C 115:4).

Each phrase in this name is significant. “The Church of Jesus Christ” indicates that Jesus Christ stands at the head of the Church, and that his gospel, teachings, and divine AUTHORITY constitute the fundamental basis of the Church. The term “Saints” is in accord with New Testament usage connoting a member of the covenant group (Acts 9:13, 32, 41; Rom. 1:7; Phil. 1:1; see LATTER-DAY SAINTS.) It has no direct relationship to the connotation of “saints” as used in Roman Catholic or Orthodox traditions. The term “Latter-day” indicates that the Church was restored in the last era of human history prior to the second coming of Christ and also distinguishes today’s Church from the “Former-day” organization established by Christ during his mortal ministry in Palestine. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a divinely restored embodiment of the original Church of Jesus Christ, and the appointed guardian of its doctrine, authority, and divine mission (see ORGANIZATION: CONTEMPORARY).

The Church is the kingdom of God on the earth, a divinely established institution through which God accomplishes his purposes pertaining to the salvation of his children. President Spencer W. KIMBALL suggested that the Church has three primary objectives to help people come unto Christ, sometimes identified as its three principal missions. The first is to proclaim the gospel to all mankind. The Church does this through a large missionary force, as well as through the efforts of individual Church members. The second mission is to perfect the Saints, which includes teaching them the gospel of Christ, administering the essential ORDINANCES OF SALVATION, and assisting them in a lifelong process of repentance, discipleship, and preparation for eternal life. The third mission of the Church is redeeming the dead, making it possible for generations of the deceased, who had no opportunity to accept the gospel in mortality, to receive the truths and ordinances of salvation. This work is accomplished by proxy ordinances performed in the temples of the Church. It leads to Church encouragement of family history research. Later, Church Presidents may alter or add to these missions as directed or inspired by the Lord.

The Church is also a society of believers to provide a framework for cooperative effort, mutual support, and temporal assistance as needed. The bonds of love among the Saints are a vital prerequisite to the accomplishment of the Church’s purposes and are identified in the scriptures as one sign of the true church of God (John 13:35; see SIGNS OF THE TRUE CHURCH). Latter-day Saints regard themselves as the “covenant people” of the Lord, heirs to the ancient covenant between God and Abraham, and, by birth or adoption, members of the house of Israel. The Church is the instrument through which God is gathering the dispersed tribes of Israel in the latter days in accordance with his promises to Abraham and other biblical PROPHETS.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is distinguished from other Christian

Go Ye Therefore and Teach All Nations, by Grant Romney Clawson, after a work by Harry Anderson (1973, detail from a mural in the Church Office Building, Salt Lake City, Utah). Jesus Christ is the head of the Church. Here he sends his disciples to go “and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost” (Matt. 28:19). Courtesy Floyd Holdman.

One of the main functions of the Church is to proclaim the gospel. As of March 1991, about 44,000 full-time missionaries were teaching the gospel in 257 missions throughout the world.

churches in several fundamental ways. Most of these differences stem from the Church's essential belief in continuing revelation. Thus, Latter-day Saints accept the Holy Bible as the word of God, and also accept the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price as scripture and as standard works. They accept the calling of modern prophets and APOSTLES, beginning with Joseph Smith, and continuing to the present. LDS doctrines regarding the nature of the Godhead, the plan of salvation, vitality of priesthood authority, and the interpretation of scriptural prophecies also differ in various ways from those of the Roman Catholic, Orthodox, or Protestant branches of Christianity. Latter-day Saints emphasize religious freedom and tolerance. The Church does not typically participate in formal ecumenical activities; however, it is committed to cooperate with other religious, civic, and educational organizations in advancing common moral and social purposes (see INTERFAITH RELATIONS).

The Church is governed by priesthood authority. The term "priesthood" among Latter-day Saints refers not only to the body of men who hold ecclesiastical offices in the Church, but also to the actual authority or power given them by ordination to the priesthood. There are two divisions within the priesthood, a lesser or Aaronic Priesthood, and a higher priesthood or Melchizedek Priesthood. All worthy male members of the Church from age twelve onward are ordained to the priesthood, normally holding offices within the Aaronic Priesthood from ages 12 to 18, and offices in the Melchizedek Priesthood thereafter. Offices in the Aaronic Priesthood include: DEACON, TEACHER, PRIEST, and BISHOP. The Melchizedek Priesthood offices are ELDER, HIGH PRIEST, PATRIARCH, SEVENTY, and apostle.

The Church sees itself as organized after the basic pattern of the first century Church of Christ and in accordance with a series of revelations to Joseph Smith (D&C 20 and 107; A of F 6). Successive Presidents of the Church have refined the organization to meet changing needs and demands of an expanding international organization but have not altered the fundamental structure of the Church as it was first organized. The Church is presided over by a president, who generally has two counselors; together with him, they constitute the First Presidency of the Church.

A second governing body, the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, consists of twelve men called to be "special witnesses of the name of Christ in all the world" (D&C 107:23). The Quorum of the Twelve collectively holds in latent form the same priesthood authority as the President of the Church, and in the event of his death is the body that governs the Church and installs a new president. Members of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles are regarded and sustained by vote of Latter-day Saints as PROPHETS, SEERS, AND REVELATORS, receiving direct revelation from Jesus Christ. These brethren are assisted by members of the quorums of the Seventy and the Presiding Bishopric.

The quorums of the Seventy, each consisting of up to seventy men, have special responsibility for missionary work and also supervise Church activities in geographic areas under the direction of the Twelve. The Presiding Bishopric is responsible for the temporal affairs of the Church, including finances, records, buildings, and administration of the Church welfare services program. All these men are designated by Latter-day Saints as General Authorities because their authority extends over the entire Church. The headquarters and central administrative offices of the Church are located in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The President of the Church receives revelation from God that relates to the whole Church, but all leaders and members are entitled to divine inspiration within the scope of their responsibilities and regarding their personal lives. Such revelation helps bring UNITY and common purpose to the Church, making it like a living organism, the “body of Christ” (1 Cor. 12:12–28; Col. 1:18).

General Authorities preside over the Church throughout the world, overseeing those who administer geographical units known as wards, stakes, regions, and areas. A stake is a cluster of wards, a region is a group of stakes, and an area is a group of regions. A ward is a congregation of Saints, usually numbering between 200 and 600 members. Wards are usually organized according to geographical boundaries, and all members living within those boundaries belong to the same ward. A ward is led by a bishop who serves usually about five years and is called from among the membership of the congregation; under the direction of the bishop, the ward is usually staffed entirely by its own members. Several wards together, usually no more than ten, constitute a stake, led by a stake president, also called from among the members of the stake. The term “stake” was given by revelation (D&C 101:21) and is linked to Old Testament imagery of Zion as a great tent upheld by lengthened cords and stakes (Isa. 33:20; 54:2). In areas where Church population is too small for wards and stakes to be formed, it is administered through missions, districts, and branches. While the main function of missions is to proclaim the gospel, in some areas of the world they also administer smaller units of the Church known as districts, which are made up of branches, usually consisting of fewer than 200 members. Branches can also exist under stakes if the units are too small to constitute a ward.

Within the wards and branches of the Church, there are specialized auxiliary organizations intended to meet specific needs of groups within the Church. They provide important support to the quorums of the priesthood. The largest of these is the Relief Society, the women’s organization established in 1842 under the direction of the Prophet Joseph Smith. It provides cultural, social, and spiritual enrichment to the women of the Church and also renders compassionate service to families in need, hence the name Relief Society.

Other auxiliaries of the Church are the Primary, responsible for the instruction of children under the age of twelve; the Young Men organization, for young men between the ages of twelve and eighteen; the Young Women organization, for young women of the same age group; and the Sunday School organization, which administers Sunday instruction in gospel doctrine to youth and adults.

Local officers and teachers throughout the Church receive no financial compensation. Formal training is not required for holding positions in the Church, nor is there a ministerial career track of any kind (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). An individual receives a calling, like a formal invitation, to serve in a specific position by Church authorities responsible for that unit of the Church; such callings are believed to be made under divine inspiration.

Regular worship services in the Church are conducted in individual wards. Members of the ward meet together each Sunday for a general worship service known as SACRAMENT MEETING. The sacrament, or the Lord’s Supper, is administered, ward business is conducted, hymns are sung, and members of the congregation give inspirational talks on gospel subjects. Members also meet each Sunday in smaller priesthood or auxiliary groups. In all, formal Sunday meetings may last up to three hours. Latter-day Saint communities are involved in an entire way of life, and a typical family is likely to spend many hours each week in Church-related activities, meetings, and service (see MEETINGS, MAJOR CHURCH). Regular CONFERENCES—ward, stake, regional, area, and general—provide continuity and association with the larger community of the Church.

The twenty-eight-story Church Office Building in Salt Lake City, Utah, shown here in an aerial view from the southeast, at the time it was dedicated on July 24, 1975. The maps of the world, in relief on the building, signify this as the world headquarters of the Church.

The Washington Temple was dedicated in 1974. As of 1990, there were forty-four temples, where Church members participate in ordinances necessary for their own exaltation and for the salvation and exaltation of others who have died without these ordinances.

Latter-day Saints regard the family as the basic unit of the Church, and of society, and emphasize the sanctity of marriage and the importance of family ties. Mormons believe that marriage and family relationships can continue beyond this life into the eternities, that men and women are equal in the sight of God, and that the blessings of the gospel revolve around the family.

Observers in the past may have regarded the Church as largely a western U.S. phenomenon, or at least as an American church. However, as of 1990, nearly 40 percent of the members lived outside the United States. Church growth internationally has been rapid since the end of World War II, especially in Latin America, the South Pacific, Australia, and parts of Asia and Africa. This growth has been perhaps the greatest challenge facing the Church in recent decades. By the end of 1990, nearly 50,000 members were serving as missionaries for one to three years, the majority outside the United States. This missionary corps, becoming skilled in many languages, imparts a cosmopolitan dimension to the contemporary Church.

To the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Lord described The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as "the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased" (D&C 1:30).

BRUCE DOUGLAS PORTER

---

CHURCH NEWS

The Church News is a weekly supplement to the daily Deseret News of Salt Lake City, Utah. It reports the worldwide happenings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Coverage includes official Church announcements, appointments, conferences, and activities. Regular features are: Messages of Inspiration, Church News Viewpoint, LDS Calendar, current gospel study information, Mormon Forum on timely topics, and This Week in Church History. A staff of reporter-photographers travels worldwide to report on Church events and people. They are

The Washington Temple was dedicated in 1974. As of 1990, there were forty-four temples, where Church members participate in ordinances necessary for their own exaltation and for the salvation and exaltation of others who have died without these ordinances.

Latter-day Saints regard the family as the basic unit of the Church, and of society, and emphasize the sanctity of marriage and the importance of family ties. Mormons believe that marriage and family relationships can continue beyond this life into the eternities, that men and women are equal in the sight of God, and that the blessings of the gospel revolve around the family.

Observers in the past may have regarded the Church as largely a western U.S. phenomenon, or at least as an American church. However, as of 1990, nearly 40 percent of the members lived outside the United States. Church growth internationally has been rapid since the end of World War II, especially in Latin America, the South Pacific, Australia, and parts of Asia and Africa. This growth has been perhaps the greatest challenge facing the Church in recent decades. By the end of 1990, nearly 50,000 members were serving as missionaries for one to three years, the majority outside the United States. This missionary corps, becoming skilled in many languages, imparts a cosmopolitan dimension to the contemporary Church.

To the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Lord described The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as "the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I, the Lord, am well pleased" (D&C 1:30).

BRUCE DOUGLAS PORTER

---

CHURCH NEWS

The Church News is a weekly supplement to the daily Deseret News of Salt Lake City, Utah. It reports the worldwide happenings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Coverage includes official Church announcements, appointments, conferences, and activities. Regular features are: Messages of Inspiration, Church News Viewpoint, LDS Calendar, current gospel study information, Mormon Forum on timely topics, and This Week in Church History. A staff of reporter-photographers travels worldwide to report on Church events and people. They are aided by an international corps of Church News correspondents.

The aim of the Church News is to inform readers of happenings in the Church by publishing well-edited stories, colorful graphics and photographs, and attractive displays in a readable format.

News of the Church had been covered previously in the regular issues of the Deseret News from 1850 to April 1931, when a separate Saturday "Church Section" appeared. It proved popular and the name was changed to Church News in 1943. The Church News is circulated as part of the Deseret News in home delivery areas and mailed separately to subscribers elsewhere.

"J" MALAN HESLOP

---

CHURCH AND STATE

Latter-day Saints believe that the separation of church and state is essential in modern societies prior to the Millennium. LDS scriptures teach that civic laws should not interfere with religious practices, nor should religious institutions manipulate governments to their advantage. Many LDS teachings emphasize the role of governments in preserving individual freedom of conscience. The Church is active in countries with various types of governments and encourages its members to be involved in civic affairs and to honor the laws of the land (see CIVIC DUTIES). LDS practice tended to be more integrationist and theocratic in the isolated early Utah period and has been more separationist in the twentieth century.

Discourse within the Church on issues of church and state proceeds on at least two planes: (1) in discussions of historical and contemporary church-state relations, and (2) in discussions of ideal settings, such as will exist in the Millennium, when "Christ will reign personally upon the earth" (A of F 10), or in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM.

The principles of free AGENCY and freedom of conscience, which are fundamental to LDS church-state theory, are consistent on both planes of discourse. However, the institutional implications of these principles are different in the two settings. In the present world, where believers are subject to the imperfections of human government, separation of church and state is vital to the protection of religious liberty. On the ideal plane, in contrast, Latter-day Saints anticipate more integrated theocratic, or what Joseph SMITH called "theodemocratic" institutions (T&S 5 [Apr. 15, 1844]:510), both because of the inherent legitimacy of divine rule and because the participants in millennial or celestial societies willingly accept such rule. Nevertheless, LDS prophets have consistently taught that even in the millennial society freedom of conscience will be respected. For example, Brigham YOUNG stated, "In the Millennium men will have the privilege of their own belief" (JD 12:274; cf. DS 3:63-64). The Church does not advocate theocracy for the premillennial world. It instructs members to "be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign" (D&C 58:22)—that is, until Christ comes.

In the meantime, several principles apply. As noted above, the fundamental assumption is that human beings have free agency and a number of inherent human rights, most notably "the free exercise of conscience" (D&C 134:2). The Church declares, "We believe that religion is instituted of God; and that men are amenable . . . to him only, for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinions prompt them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; . . . that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul" (D&C 134:4). This recognition of freedom of conscience includes a commitment to toleration, as is emphasized in the Church's eleventh Article of Faith: "We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may."

A corollary of freedom of conscience is that human law does not have the right "to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion" (D&C 134:4). This principle of nonintervention by the state in religious affairs is understood to proscribe not only interference with individual practice but also interference with the autonomy of the Church as an institution pursuing its religious mission. The position of the Church in this regard was vindicated in the U.S. Supreme Court in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints et al. v. Amos et al. (483 U.S. 327 [1987]) and is consistent with international understanding of religious liberty (e.g., Principle 16 of the Concluding Document of the Vienna Meeting of the Confer-

aided by an international corps of Church News correspondents.

The aim of the Church News is to inform readers of happenings in the Church by publishing well-edited stories, colorful graphics and photographs, and attractive displays in a readable format.

News of the Church had been covered previously in the regular issues of the Deseret News from 1850 to April 1931, when a separate Saturday "Church Section" appeared. It proved popular and the name was changed to Church News in 1943. The Church News is circulated as part of the Deseret News in home delivery areas and mailed separately to subscribers elsewhere.

"J" MALAN HESLOP

---

CHURCH AND STATE

Latter-day Saints believe that the separation of church and state is essential in modern societies prior to the Millennium. LDS scriptures teach that civic laws should not interfere with religious practices, nor should religious institutions manipulate governments to their advantage. Many LDS teachings emphasize the role of governments in preserving individual freedom of conscience. The Church is active in countries with various types of governments and encourages its members to be involved in civic affairs and to honor the laws of the land (see CIVIC DUTIES). LDS practice tended to be more integrationist and theocratic in the isolated early Utah period and has been more separationist in the twentieth century.

Discourse within the Church on issues of church and state proceeds on at least two planes: (1) in discussions of historical and contemporary church-state relations, and (2) in discussions of ideal settings, such as will exist in the Millennium, when "Christ will reign personally upon the earth" (A of F 10), or in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM.

The principles of free AGENCY and freedom of conscience, which are fundamental to LDS church-state theory, are consistent on both planes of discourse. However, the institutional implications of these principles are different in the two settings. In the present world, where believers are subject to the imperfections of human government, separation of church and state is vital to the protection of religious liberty. On the ideal plane, in contrast, Latter-day Saints anticipate more integrated theocratic, or what Joseph SMITH called "theodemocratic" institutions (T&S 5 [Apr. 15, 1844]:510), both because of the inherent legitimacy of divine rule and because the participants in millennial or celestial societies willingly accept such rule. Nevertheless, LDS prophets have consistently taught that even in the millennial society freedom of conscience will be respected. For example, Brigham YOUNG stated, "In the Millennium men will have the privilege of their own belief" (JD 12:274; cf. DS 3:63-64). The Church does not advocate theocracy for the premillennial world. It instructs members to "be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign" (D&C 58:22)—that is, until Christ comes.

In the meantime, several principles apply. As noted above, the fundamental assumption is that human beings have free agency and a number of inherent human rights, most notably "the free exercise of conscience" (D&C 134:2). The Church declares, "We believe that religion is instituted of God; and that men are amenable . . . to him only, for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinions prompt them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; . . . that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul" (D&C 134:4). This recognition of freedom of conscience includes a commitment to toleration, as is emphasized in the Church's eleventh Article of Faith: "We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may."

A corollary of freedom of conscience is that human law does not have the right "to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion" (D&C 134:4). This principle of nonintervention by the state in religious affairs is understood to proscribe not only interference with individual practice but also interference with the autonomy of the Church as an institution pursuing its religious mission. The position of the Church in this regard was vindicated in the U.S. Supreme Court in Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints et al. v. Amos et al. (483 U.S. 327 [1987]) and is consistent with international understanding of religious liberty (e.g., Principle 16 of the Concluding Document of the Vienna Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe [1989]). Consistent with this position, the Church believes in maintaining strict independence for itself and affiliated institutions, such as Church-sponsored schools and universities, and accordingly does not accept direct aid or subsidies from governmental sources because of the actual or potential regulatory interference this might entail.

The Church is also committed to separation of church and state from the religious side. "We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied" (D&C 134:9). This does not mean that the Church is precluded from taking a stand on moral or other issues when it is religiously motivated to do so or that religious values must be pushed to the margin of public life; nor does it mean that the Church cannot have indirect influence on the state as a result of the Church's efforts to teach religious principles and to make positive contributions in its members' lives. It does mean that it is inappropriate for a religious organization to manipulate the machinery of secular power to procure advantages for itself or disadvantages for others.

The Church is not viewed as a worldly organization. It avails itself of legal structures, such as corporate or other organizational entities available to it in various countries, to arrange its temporal affairs, and it complies with all legal requirements this may entail, but it is not dependent for its spiritual authority on any worldly institution. Latter-day Saints believe that their Church is established and guided by God through a prophet and apostles who hold the keys and priesthood authority needed to teach gospel truths and to officiate in the ordinances necessary for salvation and exaltation.

The Church teaches the importance of government and encourages its members to obey the law of the land wherever they live. Human governments and laws are admittedly imperfect, but they play an important role in preserving order and providing stable contexts within which individuals can seek truth and strive to live in accordance with the dictates of conscience. Governmental leaders are accountable to God "for their acts . . . both in making laws and administering them, for the good and safety of society" (D&C 134:1; cf. 124:49–50).

Implementation of the foregoing principles in history has moved through a number of phases. In the earliest phase, the Church was essentially a small, persecuted religious group seeking religious liberty and a place to settle, first in western New York and then in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois. During much of this period, the Church relied heavily on its own organization to manage its social structure. The NAUVOO CHARTER permitted some overlap of church and state. Toward the end of the Nauvoo period, Joseph Smith organized the COUNCIL OF FIFTY, which was intended to provide a potential framework within which Christ's millennial reign could be organized.

During the mid-nineteenth-century exodus from Nauvoo to the Great Basin, social, political, and economic organization was managed by the Church, since no other effective organization was available. Church leaders worked to establish separate governmental institutions, first in the form of a state of DESERET, then in the Territory of Utah, and in continuing efforts to secure Utah's statehood. During much of the nineteenth century, however, the federal government in particular was a hostile rather than a neutral force in the community. This reinforced the tendency for the Church to manage society through its own channels. Dreams of building Zion also contributed to tendencies to work through the Church.

After the MANIFESTO officially ended PLURAL MARRIAGE in 1890 and Utah attained statehood in 1896, tension between the Church and state institutions gradually abated and reciprocal trust grew. During the twentieth century, therefore, the Church has pursued a more consistently separationist policy and has been free to emphasize its primarily spiritual mission. The Church is now established in well over 100 countries, and this internationalization has further reinforced the idea that the essential mission of the Church can be accomplished within a wide range of legal and political systems as long as there is sufficient separation of church and state to afford effective protection for religious liberty. Church teachings reinforce a constellation of values in its members that most governments welcome: family stability, honesty, hard work, avoidance of drug dependency, loyalty to country, and obedience to law. The result is that while the Church contributes to religious pluralism wherever it is found, it simultaneously contributes to social stability and the improvement of diverse societies.

[See also Civic Duties; Constitutional Law; Legal and Judicial History; Politics: Political History; Politics: Political Teachings.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Jensen, Therald N. "Mormon Theory of Church and State." Ph.D. diss., University of Chicago, 1938.
- Mangrum, Richard Collin. "Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37.
- Melville, J. Keith. "Theory and Practice of Church and State During the Brigham Young Era." BYU Studies 3 (Autumn 1960):33–55.
- Taylor, John. The Government of God. Liverpool, 1852.

W. COLE DURHAM, JR.

---

CHURCH IN THE WORLD

[Since it was organized with six members in Fayette, New York, in 1830, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has spread throughout the United States and to many countries of the world. The history and development of the Church in the United States are discussed in six major articles found under the heading History of the Church. The history and development of the Church outside the United States are discussed in different articles under the headings Africa; Asia, East; Asia, South and Southeast; Australia; British Isles; Canada; Europe; Hawaii; Mexico and Central America; Middle East; New Zealand; Oceania; Scandinavia; South America; and West Indies.]

---

CIRCUMCISION

Circumcision (Gen. 17:9–14) was the sign of the covenant Abram made with God (Gen. 17:10), in token of which his name was changed to Abraham (Gen. 17:5; cf. Luke 1:59, 2:21). Joseph SMITH's translation of the Bible indicates that the performance of circumcision on the eighth day after birth symbolized "that children are not accountable before me until they are eight years old" (JST Gen. 17:4–20; cf. D&C 68:25; 74:1–7). The rite is attested in the intertestamental period (1 Macc. 1:15, 60–61; 2 Macc. 6:10) and is still observed in Judaism and Islam. Circumcision as a necessity for salvation became a major controversy in early Christianity (Acts 10:45; 11:2; 15:1–31), since it had become associated with the law of Moses.

The Book of Mormon seems to imply the continuing practice of circumcision among its peoples from about 600 B.C. They "were strict in observing the ordinances of God, according to the law of Moses" (e.g., Alma 30:3), apparently including the practice of circumcision. Near the end of Nephite history the Lord revealed to the prophet Mormon that "the law of circumcision is done away in me" (Moro. 8:8).

In modern times, Joseph Smith affirmed the perpetuity of the Abrahamic covenant and defended the integrity of Judaism. Today, however, if Latter-day Saint males are circumcised, it is for cleanliness and health, not religious, reasons. From the beginning of the modern Church, the emphasis has been on circumcision of heart (cf. Deut. 10:16; 30:6; Jer. 4:4; Ezek. 44:9). Such a heart is taken as a sign or token of one's covenants with Christ. This may be the understanding of "broken heart and contrite spirit" among Book of Mormon prophets (2 Ne. 2:7; 3 Ne. 12:19; Moro. 6:2) and in modern revelation (e.g., D&C 59:8).

GORDON C. THOMASSON

---

CITY PLANNING

For Latter-day Saints, city planning began with the Prophet Joseph Smith, who emphasized the advantages of living in compact COMMUNITIES rather than on isolated farms. Many of his ideas were adopted in modified form in LDS settlements in Missouri, Illinois, and the Great Basin of the American West. These communities always provided opportunities for education, cooperation, fine arts, and worship.

Joseph Smith's ideas about city planning are contained in a document known as the City of Zion plan, which he prepared in 1833. The characteristics of this Zion plan include a regular grid pattern with square blocks, wide streets (132 feet), alternating half-acre lots so that houses face alternate streets on each block, uniform brick or stone construction, homes set back 25 feet from the street, frontyard landscaping, gardens in the backyard, the location of farms outside of town, and the designation of central blocks as a site for TEMPLES, schools, and other public buildings.

Though Joseph Smith did not identify the sources behind the plan, perhaps he was influenced by the biblical pattern of Moses arranging the tribes around the tabernacle (Num. 2), as well as by towns in his own experience. Clearly his goal was to design communities that enhanced the cooperation and religious unity envisioned in the revelations about Zion.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Jensen, Therald N. "Mormon Theory of Church and State." Ph.D. diss., University of Chicago, 1938.
- Mangrum, Richard Collin. "Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37.
- Melville, J. Keith. "Theory and Practice of Church and State During the Brigham Young Era." BYU Studies 3 (Autumn 1960):33–55.
- Taylor, John. The Government of God. Liverpool, 1852.

W. COLE DURHAM, JR.

---

CHURCH IN THE WORLD

[Since it was organized with six members in Fayette, New York, in 1830, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has spread throughout the United States and to many countries of the world. The history and development of the Church in the United States are discussed in six major articles found under the heading History of the Church. The history and development of the Church outside the United States are discussed in different articles under the headings Africa; Asia, East; Asia, South and Southeast; Australia; British Isles; Canada; Europe; Hawaii; Mexico and Central America; Middle East; New Zealand; Oceania; Scandinavia; South America; and West Indies.]

---

CIRCUMCISION

Circumcision (Gen. 17:9–14) was the sign of the covenant Abram made with God (Gen. 17:10), in token of which his name was changed to Abraham (Gen. 17:5; cf. Luke 1:59, 2:21). Joseph SMITH's translation of the Bible indicates that the performance of circumcision on the eighth day after birth symbolized "that children are not accountable before me until they are eight years old" (JST Gen. 17:4–20; cf. D&C 68:25; 74:1–7). The rite is attested in the intertestamental period (1 Macc. 1:15, 60–61; 2 Macc. 6:10) and is still observed in Judaism and Islam. Circumcision as a necessity for salvation became a major controversy in early Christianity (Acts 10:45; 11:2; 15:1–31), since it had become associated with the law of Moses.

The Book of Mormon seems to imply the continuing practice of circumcision among its peoples from about 600 B.C. They "were strict in observing the ordinances of God, according to the law of Moses" (e.g., Alma 30:3), apparently including the practice of circumcision. Near the end of Nephite history the Lord revealed to the prophet Mormon that "the law of circumcision is done away in me" (Moro. 8:8).

In modern times, Joseph Smith affirmed the perpetuity of the Abrahamic covenant and defended the integrity of Judaism. Today, however, if Latter-day Saint males are circumcised, it is for cleanliness and health, not religious, reasons. From the beginning of the modern Church, the emphasis has been on circumcision of heart (cf. Deut. 10:16; 30:6; Jer. 4:4; Ezek. 44:9). Such a heart is taken as a sign or token of one's covenants with Christ. This may be the understanding of "broken heart and contrite spirit" among Book of Mormon prophets (2 Ne. 2:7; 3 Ne. 12:19; Moro. 6:2) and in modern revelation (e.g., D&C 59:8).

GORDON C. THOMASSON

---

CITY PLANNING

For Latter-day Saints, city planning began with the Prophet Joseph Smith, who emphasized the advantages of living in compact COMMUNITIES rather than on isolated farms. Many of his ideas were adopted in modified form in LDS settlements in Missouri, Illinois, and the Great Basin of the American West. These communities always provided opportunities for education, cooperation, fine arts, and worship.

Joseph Smith's ideas about city planning are contained in a document known as the City of Zion plan, which he prepared in 1833. The characteristics of this Zion plan include a regular grid pattern with square blocks, wide streets (132 feet), alternating half-acre lots so that houses face alternate streets on each block, uniform brick or stone construction, homes set back 25 feet from the street, frontyard landscaping, gardens in the backyard, the location of farms outside of town, and the designation of central blocks as a site for TEMPLES, schools, and other public buildings.

Though Joseph Smith did not identify the sources behind the plan, perhaps he was influenced by the biblical pattern of Moses arranging the tribes around the tabernacle (Num. 2), as well as by towns in his own experience. Clearly his goal was to design communities that enhanced the cooperation and religious unity envisioned in the revelations about Zion.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Jensen, Therald N. "Mormon Theory of Church and State." Ph.D. diss., University of Chicago, 1938.
- Mangrum, Richard Collin. "Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37.
- Melville, J. Keith. "Theory and Practice of Church and State During the Brigham Young Era." BYU Studies 3 (Autumn 1960):33–55.
- Taylor, John. The Government of God. Liverpool, 1852.

W. COLE DURHAM, JR.

---

CHURCH IN THE WORLD

[Since it was organized with six members in Fayette, New York, in 1830, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has spread throughout the United States and to many countries of the world. The history and development of the Church in the United States are discussed in six major articles found under the heading History of the Church. The history and development of the Church outside the United States are discussed in different articles under the headings Africa; Asia, East; Asia, South and Southeast; Australia; British Isles; Canada; Europe; Hawaii; Mexico and Central America; Middle East; New Zealand; Oceania; Scandinavia; South America; and West Indies.]

---

CIRCUMCISION

Circumcision (Gen. 17:9–14) was the sign of the covenant Abram made with God (Gen. 17:10), in token of which his name was changed to Abraham (Gen. 17:5; cf. Luke 1:59, 2:21). Joseph SMITH's translation of the Bible indicates that the performance of circumcision on the eighth day after birth symbolized "that children are not accountable before me until they are eight years old" (JST Gen. 17:4–20; cf. D&C 68:25; 74:1–7). The rite is attested in the intertestamental period (1 Macc. 1:15, 60–61; 2 Macc. 6:10) and is still observed in Judaism and Islam. Circumcision as a necessity for salvation became a major controversy in early Christianity (Acts 10:45; 11:2; 15:1–31), since it had become associated with the law of Moses.

The Book of Mormon seems to imply the continuing practice of circumcision among its peoples from about 600 B.C. They "were strict in observing the ordinances of God, according to the law of Moses" (e.g., Alma 30:3), apparently including the practice of circumcision. Near the end of Nephite history the Lord revealed to the prophet Mormon that "the law of circumcision is done away in me" (Moro. 8:8).

In modern times, Joseph Smith affirmed the perpetuity of the Abrahamic covenant and defended the integrity of Judaism. Today, however, if Latter-day Saint males are circumcised, it is for cleanliness and health, not religious, reasons. From the beginning of the modern Church, the emphasis has been on circumcision of heart (cf. Deut. 10:16; 30:6; Jer. 4:4; Ezek. 44:9). Such a heart is taken as a sign or token of one's covenants with Christ. This may be the understanding of "broken heart and contrite spirit" among Book of Mormon prophets (2 Ne. 2:7; 3 Ne. 12:19; Moro. 6:2) and in modern revelation (e.g., D&C 59:8).

GORDON C. THOMASSON

---

CITY PLANNING

For Latter-day Saints, city planning began with the Prophet Joseph Smith, who emphasized the advantages of living in compact COMMUNITIES rather than on isolated farms. Many of his ideas were adopted in modified form in LDS settlements in Missouri, Illinois, and the Great Basin of the American West. These communities always provided opportunities for education, cooperation, fine arts, and worship.

Joseph Smith's ideas about city planning are contained in a document known as the City of Zion plan, which he prepared in 1833. The characteristics of this Zion plan include a regular grid pattern with square blocks, wide streets (132 feet), alternating half-acre lots so that houses face alternate streets on each block, uniform brick or stone construction, homes set back 25 feet from the street, frontyard landscaping, gardens in the backyard, the location of farms outside of town, and the designation of central blocks as a site for TEMPLES, schools, and other public buildings.

Though Joseph Smith did not identify the sources behind the plan, perhaps he was influenced by the biblical pattern of Moses arranging the tribes around the tabernacle (Num. 2), as well as by towns in his own experience. Clearly his goal was to design communities that enhanced the cooperation and religious unity envisioned in the revelations about Zion.

LDS portions of KIRTLAND, OHIO, which was surveyed shortly after this plan was presented, followed it closely. Other cities influenced by Joseph Smith were somewhat different. The Saints at Far West, Missouri (1836–1839), surveyed their city into square blocks of four acres with only four one-acre lots on each. Four 132-foot-wide streets bounded a central square, but other streets were narrower. NAUVOO, Illinois (1839–1846), was similar to Far West, but only the two main streets were wider than 50 feet.

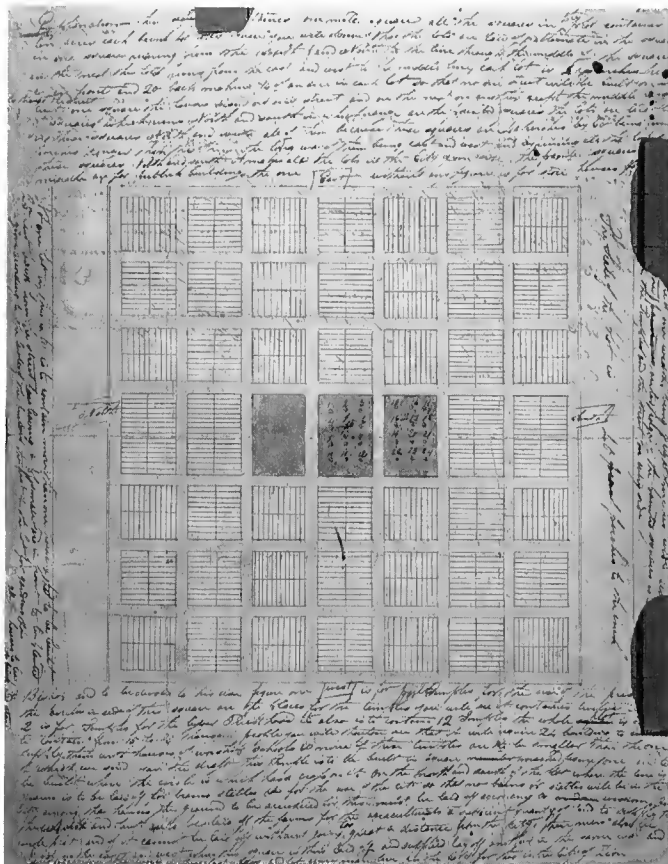

Immediately after the pioneers arrived in the Salt Lake Valley in 1847, President Brigham YOUNG issued instructions for establishing Salt Lake City. His plan reflected elements of the City of Zion plan, with blocks the same size, but instead of twenty half-acre lots in each block, each contained eight lots, 1.25 acres in size. As in Joseph Smith's plan, all streets were 132 feet wide and the houses on each block faced alternate streets, with each set 20 feet back from the sidewalk. The most important difference was that the lots were much larger. Each city lot became a minifarm with animals, barns, and gardens. The rapid influx of settlers into Salt Lake City led to the early subdivision of the large lots.

Other settlements (see COLONIZATION) followed the same general pattern as Salt Lake City, but the actual lot, block, and street sizes varied from community to community. While most communities adhered to the rigid grid pattern oriented to the cardinal directions, street widths ranged from 66 to 172 feet, block sizes from four to ten acres, and lot sizes from one-half to more than one acre. Though differing in details, Mormon towns were characterized by large lots, wide streets, and large blocks, features that still distinguish these communities of America's Intermountain West. This expansive pattern later enhanced urbanization, providing space for four lanes of traffic and for large-scale downtown development.

The emphasis on large scale has also created a distinctive landscape in the small Mormon agricultural communities of the Intermountain West. Typically, the wide streets have only a narrow two-lane strip of pavement, flanked by twenty- to thirty-foot unimproved shoulders of weeds or gravel. Most residents of these villages use the large lots only for small gardens; barns, corrals, and outbuildings of the nineteenth century often remain as landscape relics. Where population growth has led to subdivision of the street frontage of the large lots, the center of the blocks has often remained open. The interior of these large blocks may be devoted to household gardens or simply allowed to remain vacant until land prices justify higher density apartment buildings or other uses for the space.

City planning in the Mormon culture region incorporates the experiences of the Mormons in their migration across the American frontier. Joseph Smith's plan combined his New England village background with the rectangular blocks and lots typical of Philadelphia. Brigham Young adopted this rectangular pattern and added to it an emphasis on subsistence agriculture, which led to large blocks and lots for minifarms within the community. Joseph Smith's requirement to build of brick or stone was paralleled by Brigham Young's encouragement to build of adobe (unfired clay bricks). Old Mormon villages are currently domi-

The original plat of Independence, Missouri, on paper. Designed by Joseph Smith, 1833. Using variations of this pattern, each town that was established by the Latter-day Saints was laid out in rectangular plots of land in town blocks allotted for residences and farms.

nated by adobe, brick, and stone homes, and even the modern suburbs in Mormon communities have a high concentration of brick construction. The large scale of both Joseph Smith's and Brigham Young's visions of the ideal city and the emphasis on uniform setback, landscaping, and brick or stone construction combine to make the Mormon village a distinctive pattern of city planning in America.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jackson, Richard H. "The Mormon Village: Genesis and Antecedents of the City of Zion Plan." BYU Studies 17 (Winter 1977):223-40.
- Nelson, Lowry. The Mormon Village: A Pattern and Techniques of Land Settlement. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Ricks, Joel Edward. Forms and Methods of Early Mormon Settlement in Utah and Surrounding Regions, 1847-1877. Logan, Utah, 1964.

RICHARD H. JACKSON

---

CIVIC DUTIES

Latter-day Saint teachings emphasize many aspects of civic duty, including responsible self-government; an informed, public-spirited citizenry; and obedience to LAW. LDS scriptures and leaders also encourage activity in organizations that build and maintain COMMUNITY life, making oneself available for public and military service, and avoidance of government welfare dependency. LDS teaching stresses EDUCATION and a healthy lifestyle, both of which contribute to a strong citizenry (see WORD OF WISDOM).

In September 1968 the First Presidency urged members "to do their civic duty and to assume their responsibilities as individual citizens in seeking solutions to the problems which beset our cities and communities" (see PROCLAMATIONS OF FIRST PRESIDENCY). Members are obligated to respect governmental authority. The twelfth Article of Faith states, "We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law." This commitment to good citizenship is further elucidated in scripture: "We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments; and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected" (D&C 134:5).

LDS emphasis on civic duty stems from Christian commitment to community service and individual FREEDOM. The CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, which also promotes these values, was established by God through "wise men" for the "protection of all flesh" (D&C 101:77-80). Latter-day Saints are to strive to elect "honest" and "wise" leaders who will support constitutional freedoms, particularly freedom of religion (D&C 98:10). The Christian tradition of civic virtue that underlay the American founding has been documented by LDS scholars (Vetterli and Bryner). Latter-day Saints tend to take seriously their responsibility to participate in the political process. Since World War II, Utah has been the state with the highest percentage of eligible voters who do in fact vote in presidential elections (72 percent). Latter-day Saints are also strongly encouraged to be patriotic and share in the responsibility of defending their homelands through military service, if necessary, wherever they might live ("First Presidency Statement," Church News, May 24, 1969, p. 12).

Latter-day Saint women were involved in public life long before women in other parts of the United States. They have always voted in Church congregations. The University of Deseret, founded in Salt Lake City in 1850, was the first coeducational university west of the Mississippi. H. H. Baneroff's History of Utah reported that women voted in the provisional government before territorial status in 1850 (p. 272, San Francisco, 1890). The first documented women voters in modern times were in Salt Lake City on February 14, 1870. Mary W. Chamberlain was elected mayor of Kanab, Utah, with an all-female town board, in 1912. The first woman state senator elected in the United States (Dr. Mattie Hughes Paul Cannon, 1896) and the first woman elected to the U.S. Senate who was neither the wife nor the daughter of a politician (Paula Hawkins, Florida, 1980) were Latter-day Saints.

The Church encourages its members to make themselves available for public office, and many have responded. Latter-day Saints have served as governors of such states as California (Culbert Olson and Goodwin Knight) and Michigan (George Romney). In 1952 two Latter-day Saints were serving in the U.S. House of Representatives and two in the U.S. Senate. In 1991 there were nine LDS representatives and one nonvoting territorial delegate in the House and three Latter-day Saints in nated by adobe, brick, and stone homes, and even the modern suburbs in Mormon communities have a high concentration of brick construction. The large scale of both Joseph Smith's and Brigham Young's visions of the ideal city and the emphasis on uniform setback, landscaping, and brick or stone construction combine to make the Mormon village a distinctive pattern of city planning in America.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jackson, Richard H. "The Mormon Village: Genesis and Antecedents of the City of Zion Plan." BYU Studies 17 (Winter 1977):223-40.
- Nelson, Lowry. The Mormon Village: A Pattern and Techniques of Land Settlement. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Rieks, Joel Edward. Forms and Methods of Early Mormon Settlement in Utah and Surrounding Regions, 1847-1877. Logan, Utah, 1964.

RICHARD H. JACKSON

---

CIVIC DUTIES

Latter-day Saint teachings emphasize many aspects of civic duty, including responsible self-government; an informed, public-spirited citizenry; and obedience to LAW. LDS scriptures and leaders also encourage activity in organizations that build and maintain COMMUNITY life, making oneself available for public and military service, and avoidance of government welfare dependency. LDS teaching stresses EDUCATION and a healthy lifestyle, both of which contribute to a strong citizenry (see WORD OF WISDOM).

In September 1968 the First Presidency urged members "to do their civic duty and to assume their responsibilities as individual citizens in seeking solutions to the problems which beset our cities and communities" (see PROCLAMATIONS OF FIRST PRESIDENCY). Members are obligated to respect governmental authority. The twelfth Article of Faith states, "We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law." This commitment to good citizenship is further elucidated in scripture: "We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments; and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected" (D&C 134:5).

LDS emphasis on civic duty stems from Christian commitment to community service and individual FREEDOM. The CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES, which also promotes these values, was established by God through "wise men" for the "protection of all flesh" (D&C 101:77-80). Latter-day Saints are to strive to elect "honest" and "wise" leaders who will support constitutional freedoms, particularly freedom of religion (D&C 98:10). The Christian tradition of civic virtue that underlay the American founding has been documented by LDS scholars (Vetterli and Bryner). Latter-day Saints tend to take seriously their responsibility to participate in the political process. Since World War II, Utah has been the state with the highest percentage of eligible voters who do in fact vote in presidential elections (72 percent). Latter-day Saints are also strongly encouraged to be patriotic and share in the responsibility of defending their homelands through military service, if necessary, wherever they might live ("First Presidency Statement," Church News, May 24, 1969, p. 12).

Latter-day Saint women were involved in public life long before women in other parts of the United States. They have always voted in Church congregations. The University of Deseret, founded in Salt Lake City in 1850, was the first coeducational university west of the Mississippi. H. H. Baneroff's History of Utah reported that women voted in the provisional government before territorial status in 1850 (p. 272, San Francisco, 1890). The first documented women voters in modern times were in Salt Lake City on February 14, 1870. Mary W. Chamberlain was elected mayor of Kanab, Utah, with an all-female town board, in 1912. The first woman state senator elected in the United States (Dr. Mattie Hughes Paul Cannon, 1896) and the first woman elected to the U.S. Senate who was neither the wife nor the daughter of a politician (Paula Hawkins, Florida, 1980) were Latter-day Saints.

The Church encourages its members to make themselves available for public office, and many have responded. Latter-day Saints have served as governors of such states as California (Culbert Olson and Goodwin Knight) and Michigan (George Romney). In 1952 two Latter-day Saints were serving in the U.S. House of Representatives and two in the U.S. Senate. In 1991 there were nine LDS representatives and one nonvoting territorial delegate in the House and three Latter-day Saints in the Senate. There have been five LDS cabinet members (Ezra Taft BENSON, Agriculture; Stewart L. Udall, Interior; George W. Romney, Housing and Urban Development; David M. Kennedy, Treasury; and Terrell H. Bell, Education). Latter-day Saints have served as both domestic and national security advisers in the Bush administration. Prior to 1952, no Latter-day Saint had served as a federal judge. Since then, eleven have been appointed to federal district courts and four to appeals courts.

Church members are encouraged to help their communities through VOLUNTEERISM. The LDS Church is one of the most active sponsors of the SCOUTING movement in the United States. Concern for the international community was evident when members fasted in 1985 and contributed nearly $11 million for Ethiopian and other famine relief and agricultural development for distribution largely through other agencies (see HUMANITARIAN SERVICE).

In times of increasing dependence on government programs and assistance, Latter-day Saints as a group consciously try to live in such a way as to reduce their burden on government. Their lifestyle, teachings, and youth programs are often cited as explanations for low rates of crime, drug abuse, alcoholism, illness, and unemployment in the areas where they live. Through these and other means, they invest in, and promote, education, moral behavior, and leadership—and with some success. For example, medical studies now document the healthiness of the Mormon lifestyle (USA Today, Dec. 6, 1989, p. 1), which presumably contributes to a stronger and less dependent citizenry. LDS SOCIAL SERVICES and employment and welfare programs save governments millions of dollars annually. The predominantly LDS state of Utah regularly ranks first in the proportion of high school graduates who take advanced placement courses. Fortune magazine ranked metropolitan Salt Lake City first in the availability of intelligent, enthusiastic, and loyal workers (Oct. 22, 1990, p. 49), and Financial World ranked Utah the second best-governed state (Apr. 17, 1990, p. 31).

[See also Politics: Political Teachings; Politics: Contemporary; United States of America.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vetterli, Richard, and Gary Bryner. In Search of the Republic: Public Virtue and the Roots of American Government. Totowa, N.J., 1987.

MARK W. CANNON

---

CIVIL RIGHTS

Civil rights are legal guarantees designed to protect persons from arbitrary or discriminatory treatment. Common examples are those protecting freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom of assembly, the right to due process of law, the right to vote, the right to equal protection of the law, and safeguards for persons accused of crime, such as the right against self-incrimination, the right to confront one's accuser, the right to a jury trial, the right to counsel, and the right to a speedy trial. These and other rights are declared in the Constitution of the United States of America and in the constitutions of many other countries (see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW). Civil rights are found in statutes as well as in constitutions and may provide, for example, detailed guarantees against public and private discrimination on the basis of such characteristics as race, gender, age, and religion. Civil rights issues arise when people disagree about the rights that are, or ought to be, guaranteed by law.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its members have an obvious interest in securing their own rights. Beyond this, several strands of doctrine and belief—sometimes competing—shape the views of members and leaders regarding civil rights in general. The principle of free AGENCY seems most compatible with a legal system guaranteeing wide latitude for individual choice and decision. With respect to religious liberties, agency is reinforced by individual and institutional interests in freedom from governmental restraint. In the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, commitment to individual rights is further reinforced by allegiance to the personal liberties guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, which Latter-day Saints regard as an inspired document. On the other hand, the Church teaches its members to obey properly constituted governmental authority (D&C 134:5; 98:6; A of F 12), which may lead to accommodation and submission when core religious interests are not threatened. In addition, Church teachings on moral questions sometimes predispose members, as well as the institutional Church, to take positions on political issues (ABORTION, for example) that run counter to the rights claimed by others. As a result, the position of the Church and its members toward current civil rights issues is complex.

A Church statement of belief regarding government, adopted in 1835, singled out “free exer-

the Senate. There have been five LDS cabinet members (Ezra Taft BENSON, Agriculture; Stewart L. Udall, Interior; George W. Romney, Housing and Urban Development; David M. Kennedy, Treasury; and Terrell H. Bell, Education). Latter-day Saints have served as both domestic and national security advisers in the Bush administration. Prior to 1952, no Latter-day Saint had served as a federal judge. Since then, eleven have been appointed to federal district courts and four to appeals courts.

Church members are encouraged to help their communities through VOLUNTEERISM. The LDS Church is one of the most active sponsors of the SCOUTING movement in the United States. Concern for the international community was evident when members fasted in 1985 and contributed nearly $11 million for Ethiopian and other famine relief and agricultural development for distribution largely through other agencies (see HUMANITARIAN SERVICE).

In times of increasing dependence on government programs and assistance, Latter-day Saints as a group consciously try to live in such a way as to reduce their burden on government. Their lifestyle, teachings, and youth programs are often cited as explanations for low rates of crime, drug abuse, alcoholism, illness, and unemployment in the areas where they live. Through these and other means, they invest in, and promote, education, moral behavior, and leadership—and with some success. For example, medical studies now document the healthiness of the Mormon lifestyle (USA Today, Dec. 6, 1989, p. 1), which presumably contributes to a stronger and less dependent citizenry. LDS SOCIAL SERVICES and employment and welfare programs save governments millions of dollars annually. The predominantly LDS state of Utah regularly ranks first in the proportion of high school graduates who take advanced placement courses. Fortune magazine ranked metropolitan Salt Lake City first in the availability of intelligent, enthusiastic, and loyal workers (Oct. 22, 1990, p. 49), and Financial World ranked Utah the second best-governed state (Apr. 17, 1990, p. 31).

[See also Politics: Political Teachings; Politics: Contemporary; United States of America.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vetterli, Richard, and Gary Bryner. In Search of the Republic: Public Virtue and the Roots of American Government. Totowa, N.J., 1987.

MARK W. CANNON

---

CIVIL RIGHTS

Civil rights are legal guarantees designed to protect persons from arbitrary or discriminatory treatment. Common examples are those protecting freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom of assembly, the right to due process of law, the right to vote, the right to equal protection of the law, and safeguards for persons accused of crime, such as the right against self-incrimination, the right to confront one's accuser, the right to a jury trial, the right to counsel, and the right to a speedy trial. These and other rights are declared in the Constitution of the United States of America and in the constitutions of many other countries (see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW). Civil rights are found in statutes as well as in constitutions and may provide, for example, detailed guarantees against public and private discrimination on the basis of such characteristics as race, gender, age, and religion. Civil rights issues arise when people disagree about the rights that are, or ought to be, guaranteed by law.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its members have an obvious interest in securing their own rights. Beyond this, several strands of doctrine and belief—sometimes competing—shape the views of members and leaders regarding civil rights in general. The principle of free AGENCY seems most compatible with a legal system guaranteeing wide latitude for individual choice and decision. With respect to religious liberties, agency is reinforced by individual and institutional interests in freedom from governmental restraint. In the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, commitment to individual rights is further reinforced by allegiance to the personal liberties guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution, which Latter-day Saints regard as an inspired document. On the other hand, the Church teaches its members to obey properly constituted governmental authority (D&C 134:5; 98:6; A of F 12), which may lead to accommodation and submission when core religious interests are not threatened. In addition, Church teachings on moral questions sometimes predispose members, as well as the institutional Church, to take positions on political issues (ABORTION, for example) that run counter to the rights claimed by others. As a result, the position of the Church and its members toward current civil rights issues is complex.

A Church statement of belief regarding government, adopted in 1835, singled out “free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life" as rights essential to the peace of society (D&C 134:2; see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS). This 1835 statement repeatedly stressed the importance of RELIGIOUS FREEDOM, and the Church and its members have sometimes found it necessary to take legal action to vindicate free exercise rights. In Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints et al. v. Amos et al. (483 U.S. 327 [1987]), for example, the Church successfully defended its right to impose a religious test for employment in certain Church-owned establishments. The Church as an institution has avoided legal action where possible, but has been willing to defend its rights in court when necessary.

Apart from its special legal interests, the Church is publicly committed to a broad range of civil rights for all. An oft-cited 1963 statement by a member of the Church First Presidency, Hugh B. Brown, called for "full civil equality for all of God's children," saying "it is a moral evil . . . to deny any human being the right to gainful employment, to full educational opportunity, and to every privilege of citizenship, just as it is a moral evil to deny him the right to worship" (p. 1058).

In the political arena, where competing claims to civil rights are frequently debated, the Church participates indirectly by encouraging members to vote and to foster a society congenial to Christian teaching and righteous living. Occasionally, when public issues implicate important matters of doctrine and morals, the Church publishes recommended positions on disputed issues and encourages members and others to follow their counsel. Thus, the Church has urged restrictions on the sale of alcoholic beverages, opposed the legalization of gambling and lotteries, favored right-to-work legislation (no closed or union shop), advocated the defeat of the equal rights amendment (ERA), and spoken out against pornography, abortion, and child abuse.

Within the Church, individual rights play a muted role as compared with secular society. Love and duty are stressed far more than individual claims of right. Moreover, the Church is a voluntary organization whose sanctions extend only to rights of membership and participation within the group, so fewer safeguards are necessary. Thus, Church disciplinary proceedings do not provide the full set of procedural protections the accused would receive in secular courts. Although due process notices and appeal rights are given, service of process is not strictly enforced and there is no right to confront one's accuser, no jury trial, and no right to counsel. Indeed, confession of sin by the repentant sinner may be at odds with the right against self-incrimination (see DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES). Free speech is another illustration of the contrast with secular society. Members are free to say or publish what they wish. Yet, Church etiquette and policies, obligations of confidentiality, respect for divine and holy things, and the need to avoid offending others impose restraints upon freedom of expression. Likewise, voting within the Church involves the concept of common consent, but has none of the trappings of democratic elections and in most instances amounts to ratification of leadership callings and decisions. As for gender equality and children's rights, the relationships of men, women, and children are governed by religious principles, freely adopted by members, which teach EQUALITY but emphasize differences in roles. These principles are taught as eternal patterns, not derived from prevailing attitudes toward civil rights in any secular society, past or present.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Brown, Hugh B. IE 66 (Dec. 1963):1058.
- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830-1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Mangrum, R. Collin. "Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119-37.
- McAffee, Thomas B. "Constitutional Interpretation and the American Tradition of Individual Rights." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):139-69.
- Melville, J. Keith. "Joseph Smith, the Constitution, and Individual Liberties." BYU Studies 28 (Spring 1988):65-74.

ROBERT E. RIGGS

---

CIVIL WAR PROPHECY

Joseph SMITH's Civil War prophecy is contained in sections 87 and 130 of the Doctrine and Covenants. He prophesied on December 25, 1832, that a war would begin in South Carolina; that the southern states would divide against the northern states; that the South would seek support from cise of conscience, the right and control of property, and the protection of life" as rights essential to the peace of society (D&C 134:2; see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS). This 1835 statement repeatedly stressed the importance of RELIGIOUS FREEDOM, and the Church and its members have sometimes found it necessary to take legal action to vindicate free exercise rights. In Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints et al. v. Amos et al. (483 U.S. 327 [1987]), for example, the Church successfully defended its right to impose a religious test for employment in certain Church-owned establishments. The Church as an institution has avoided legal action where possible, but has been willing to defend its rights in court when necessary.

Apart from its special legal interests, the Church is publicly committed to a broad range of civil rights for all. An oft-cited 1963 statement by a member of the Church First Presidency, Hugh B. Brown, called for "full civil equality for all of God's children," saying "it is a moral evil . . . to deny any human being the right to gainful employment, to full educational opportunity, and to every privilege of citizenship, just as it is a moral evil to deny him the right to worship" (p. 1058).

In the political arena, where competing claims to civil rights are frequently debated, the Church participates indirectly by encouraging members to vote and to foster a society congenial to Christian teaching and righteous living. Occasionally, when public issues implicate important matters of doctrine and morals, the Church publishes recommended positions on disputed issues and encourages members and others to follow their counsel. Thus, the Church has urged restrictions on the sale of alcoholic beverages, opposed the legalization of gambling and lotteries, favored right-to-work legislation (no closed or union shop), advocated the defeat of the equal rights amendment (ERA), and spoken out against pornography, abortion, and child abuse.

Within the Church, individual rights play a muted role as compared with secular society. Love and duty are stressed far more than individual claims of right. Moreover, the Church is a voluntary organization whose sanctions extend only to rights of membership and participation within the group, so fewer safeguards are necessary. Thus, Church disciplinary proceedings do not provide the full set of procedural protections the accused would receive in secular courts. Although due process notices and appeal rights are given, service of process is not strictly enforced and there is no right to confront one's accuser, no jury trial, and no right to counsel. Indeed, confession of sin by the repentant sinner may be at odds with the right against self-incrimination (see DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES). Free speech is another illustration of the contrast with secular society. Members are free to say or publish what they wish. Yet, Church etiquette and policies, obligations of confidentiality, respect for divine and holy things, and the need to avoid offending others impose restraints upon freedom of expression. Likewise, voting within the Church involves the concept of common consent, but has none of the trappings of democratic elections and in most instances amounts to ratification of leadership callings and decisions. As for gender equality and children's rights, the relationships of men, women, and children are governed by religious principles, freely adopted by members, which teach EQUALITY but emphasize differences in roles. These principles are taught as eternal patterns, not derived from prevailing attitudes toward civil rights in any secular society, past or present.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Brown, Hugh B. IE 66 (Dec. 1963):1058.
- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830-1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Mangrum, R. Collin. "Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119-37.
- McAffee, Thomas B. "Constitutional Interpretation and the American Tradition of Individual Rights." BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):139-69.
- Melville, J. Keith. "Joseph Smith, the Constitution, and Individual Liberties." BYU Studies 28 (Spring 1988):65-74.

ROBERT E. RIGGS

---

CIVIL WAR PROPHECY

Joseph SMITH's Civil War prophecy is contained in sections 87 and 130 of the Doctrine and Covenants. He prophesied on December 25, 1832, that a war would begin in South Carolina; that the southern states would divide against the northern states; that the South would seek support from other nations, including Great Britain; and that the war would lead to the death and misery of many souls. These items in the prophecy were all fulfilled in the Civil War (1861–1865). In 1843 the Prophet noted (D&C 130:12–13) that he had also learned by revelation in 1832 that slavery would be the probable cause of the upcoming crisis. These matters are all history now, but certain verses in the Civil War prophecy have broader applications and it appears that portions of the revelation are yet to be fulfilled.

Section 87 was not published by the Church until 1851 and was not canonized until 1876. It was, however, copied and circulated by some Church leaders and missionaries in the 1830s. The Civil War prophecy became one of the most widely published revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. Not surprisingly, it received greatest attention during the Civil War, as many viewed the conflict as a vindication of the prophetic powers of Joseph Smith.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q. "A Prophecy of War." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 335–39. Salt Lake City, 1989.

PAUL H. PETERSON

---

CLERGY

The word "clergy" generally designates those who are priests or ministers within the Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, or Protestant traditions. Since the term refers to full-time paid professionals, it is not used by Latter-day Saints. They refer to their Church officers as BRANCH PRESIDENTS, BISHOPS, or STAKE PRESIDENTS. These individuals are laypersons who, without professional training in theology, are called to these positions for limited periods of time by those having AUTHORITY.

Some Latter-day Saints have ambivalent feelings about the clergy of other Christian traditions, in part because some professional ministers participated in the early PERSECUTION of the Saints and others in current times continue to produce ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS. Also, because Latter-day Saints believe that the Lord has revealed the fullness of the gospel through his modern prophets, the professional clergy have been viewed as teaching only part of the truth. However, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints readily acknowledges the extensive contributions of Jewish, Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, Protestant, and other clergy to the spiritual and moral well-being of their communities and their parishioners.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bangerter, William Grant. "Tis a Two-Way Street." Ensign 10 (July 1986):66–71.

ROGER R. KELLER

---

CLERK

Almost since the Church was organized in 1830, clerks have been divinely charged with the sacred responsibility of RECORD KEEPING. Although STAKE PRESIDENTS and BISHOPS have overall responsibility for the records kept in their STAKES and WARDS, clerks are charged with the stewardship of creating and maintaining membership, historical, and financial records. Clerks are lay members of the Church called by stake presidents to serve on a volunteer basis between three and ten hours a week in a stake or ward. Most serve for two to three years, but some have served for as many as thirty years in different clerk roles.

LDS scriptures speak of the calling of clerks and the importance of making a record of ordinances and other significant events in the Church and in the lives of members:

It is the duty of the Lord's clerk, whom he has appointed, to keep a history, and a general church record of all things that transpire in Zion, and of all those who consecrate properties, and receive inheritances legally from the bishop; and also their manner of life, their faith, and works [D&C 85:1–2].

Clerks record ordinances performed for both the living and the dead, tithes and offerings given, minutes of Church meetings, and historical events. They are encouraged to be accurate and thorough in gathering information and reporting details. They must keep strict confidence and guard the privacy rights of Church members because they keep personal and sensitive information about them.

The stake clerk and assistant stake clerks perform record-keeping activities at the stake level and often are invited to supervise the training and work of ward clerks. The ward clerk and his assis-other nations, including Great Britain; and that the war would lead to the death and misery of many souls. These items in the prophecy were all fulfilled in the Civil War (1861–1865). In 1843 the Prophet noted (D&C 130:12–13) that he had also learned by revelation in 1832 that slavery would be the probable cause of the upcoming crisis. These matters are all history now, but certain verses in the Civil War prophecy have broader applications and it appears that portions of the revelation are yet to be fulfilled.

Section 87 was not published by the Church until 1851 and was not canonized until 1876. It was, however, copied and circulated by some Church leaders and missionaries in the 1830s. The Civil War prophecy became one of the most widely published revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. Not surprisingly, it received greatest attention during the Civil War, as many viewed the conflict as a vindication of the prophetic powers of Joseph Smith.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q. "A Prophecy of War." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 335–39. Salt Lake City, 1989.

PAUL H. PETERSON

---

CLERGY

The word "clergy" generally designates those who are priests or ministers within the Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, or Protestant traditions. Since the term refers to full-time paid professionals, it is not used by Latter-day Saints. They refer to their Church officers as BRANCH PRESIDENTS, BISHOPS, or STAKE PRESIDENTS. These individuals are laypersons who, without professional training in theology, are called to these positions for limited periods of time by those having AUTHORITY.

Some Latter-day Saints have ambivalent feelings about the clergy of other Christian traditions, in part because some professional ministers participated in the early PERSECUTION of the Saints and others in current times continue to produce ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS. Also, because Latter-day Saints believe that the Lord has revealed the fullness of the gospel through his modern prophets, the professional clergy have been viewed as teaching only part of the truth. However, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints readily acknowledges the extensive contributions of Jewish, Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, Protestant, and other clergy to the spiritual and moral well-being of their communities and their parishioners.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bangerter, William Grant. "Tis a Two-Way Street." Ensign 10 (July 1986):66–71.

ROGER R. KELLER

---

CLERK

Almost since the Church was organized in 1830, clerks have been divinely charged with the sacred responsibility of RECORD KEEPING. Although STAKE PRESIDENTS and BISHOPS have overall responsibility for the records kept in their STAKES and WARDS, clerks are charged with the stewardship of creating and maintaining membership, historical, and financial records. Clerks are lay members of the Church called by stake presidents to serve on a volunteer basis between three and ten hours a week in a stake or ward. Most serve for two to three years, but some have served for as many as thirty years in different clerk roles.

LDS scriptures speak of the calling of clerks and the importance of making a record of ordinances and other significant events in the Church and in the lives of members:

It is the duty of the Lord's clerk, whom he has appointed, to keep a history, and a general church record of all things that transpire in Zion, and of all those who consecrate properties, and receive inheritances legally from the bishop; and also their manner of life, their faith, and works [D&C 85:1–2].

Clerks record ordinances performed for both the living and the dead, tithes and offerings given, minutes of Church meetings, and historical events. They are encouraged to be accurate and thorough in gathering information and reporting details. They must keep strict confidence and guard the privacy rights of Church members because they keep personal and sensitive information about them.

The stake clerk and assistant stake clerks perform record-keeping activities at the stake level and often are invited to supervise the training and work of ward clerks. The ward clerk and his assis-other nations, including Great Britain; and that the war would lead to the death and misery of many souls. These items in the prophecy were all fulfilled in the Civil War (1861–1865). In 1843 the Prophet noted (D&C 130:12–13) that he had also learned by revelation in 1832 that slavery would be the probable cause of the upcoming crisis. These matters are all history now, but certain verses in the Civil War prophecy have broader applications and it appears that portions of the revelation are yet to be fulfilled.

Section 87 was not published by the Church until 1851 and was not canonized until 1876. It was, however, copied and circulated by some Church leaders and missionaries in the 1830s. The Civil War prophecy became one of the most widely published revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. Not surprisingly, it received greatest attention during the Civil War, as many viewed the conflict as a vindication of the prophetic powers of Joseph Smith.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q. "A Prophecy of War." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 335–39. Salt Lake City, 1989.

PAUL H. PETERSON

---

CLERGY

The word "clergy" generally designates those who are priests or ministers within the Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, or Protestant traditions. Since the term refers to full-time paid professionals, it is not used by Latter-day Saints. They refer to their Church officers as BRANCH PRESIDENTS, BISHOPS, or STAKE PRESIDENTS. These individuals are laypersons who, without professional training in theology, are called to these positions for limited periods of time by those having AUTHORITY.

Some Latter-day Saints have ambivalent feelings about the clergy of other Christian traditions, in part because some professional ministers participated in the early PERSECUTION of the Saints and others in current times continue to produce ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS. Also, because Latter-day Saints believe that the Lord has revealed the fullness of the gospel through his modern prophets, the professional clergy have been viewed as teaching only part of the truth. However, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints readily acknowledges the extensive contributions of Jewish, Catholic, Eastern Orthodox, Protestant, and other clergy to the spiritual and moral well-being of their communities and their parishioners.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bangerter, William Grant. "Tis a Two-Way Street." Ensign 10 (July 1986):66–71.

ROGER R. KELLER

---

CLERK

Almost since the Church was organized in 1830, clerks have been divinely charged with the sacred responsibility of RECORD KEEPING. Although STAKE PRESIDENTS and BISHOPS have overall responsibility for the records kept in their STAKES and WARDS, clerks are charged with the stewardship of creating and maintaining membership, historical, and financial records. Clerks are lay members of the Church called by stake presidents to serve on a volunteer basis between three and ten hours a week in a stake or ward. Most serve for two to three years, but some have served for as many as thirty years in different clerk roles.

LDS scriptures speak of the calling of clerks and the importance of making a record of ordinances and other significant events in the Church and in the lives of members:

It is the duty of the Lord's clerk, whom he has appointed, to keep a history, and a general church record of all things that transpire in Zion, and of all those who consecrate properties, and receive inheritances legally from the bishop; and also their manner of life, their faith, and works [D&C 85:1–2].

Clerks record ordinances performed for both the living and the dead, tithes and offerings given, minutes of Church meetings, and historical events. They are encouraged to be accurate and thorough in gathering information and reporting details. They must keep strict confidence and guard the privacy rights of Church members because they keep personal and sensitive information about them.

The stake clerk and assistant stake clerks perform record-keeping activities at the stake level and often are invited to supervise the training and work of ward clerks. The ward clerk and his assistant clerks have responsibility for gathering most statistical data about members that enable the Church to function properly.

To ensure accurate and complete Church records, clerks coordinate the gathering of information, train assistant clerks, supervise record keeping, and make certain that proper financial controls and procedures are followed. They also ensure compliance with audit findings and oversee the use and support of computer information systems. Clerks keep the financial records, recording the expenditure of funds to support Church programs and making it possible for bishops to provide members with information regarding their personal tithes and offerings.

Clerks maintain MEMBERSHIP RECORDS that include demographic information and ordinance information for each member. They record the participation of members in some Church services. Stake and ward priesthood leaders use this information to help members prepare to receive the ordinances and covenants of the gospel. Modern technology has simplified record keeping in the Church. Most stake and ward clerks in the United States and Canada use computer systems that enable them to produce information quickly for stake presidents and bishops and to send information to Church headquarters.

JEFFREY C. BATESON

---

COFFEE

Active Latter-day Saints abstain from drinking coffee. This practice derives from an 1833 revelation known as the WORD OF WISDOM, which states that "hot drinks are not for the body or the belly" (D&C 89:9). Hyrum Smith, Assistant President of the Church, later defined "hot drinks" as coffee and TEA (T&S 3 [June 1, 1842]:800), establishing the official interpretation for subsequent generations. The Word of Wisdom was given originally to show the will of God, though not as a commandment. Abstinence from coffee has been expected of fully participating members since the early twentieth century (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89).

The main chemical in coffee that has caused health concerns is caffeine, a cerebral and cardiovascular stimulant. A large number of other substances are also found in coffee, and their effects on health are not yet well understood.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gilman, A. G.; L. S. Goodman; and A. Gilman, eds. Goodman and Gilman's The Pharmacological Basis of Therapeutics, 6th ed., pp. 592–604. New York, 1980.

Stratton, Clifford J. "The Xanthines: Coffee, Cola, Cocoa, and Tea." BYU Studies 20 (Summer 1980):371–88.

JOSEPH LYNN LYON

---

COLESVILLE, NEW YORK

Colesville, New York, is a township located in Broome County, in the south central part of the state, where one of the earliest BRANCHES of the Church was organized in 1830. The central part of the township lies approximately ten miles northeast of the present city of Binghamton. In October 1825 Joseph Smith went to the area to work intermittently for Josiah Stowell for a little over a year. Stowell lived just south of the village of South Bainbridge in adjoining Bainbridge Township, Chenango County (since 1857 the village of Afton, Afton Township). Sometime during 1826 Joseph Smith also worked for Joseph Knight, Sr., who with his family resided on a farm located on Pickerel Pond, immediately east of Nineveh, a village in Colesville Township on the Susquehanna River.

Joseph Smith maintained a friendly relationship with the Knight family and others in the Colesville area. In 1829, when Joseph and Oliver COWDERY were translating the Book of Mormon in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, Joseph Knight, Sr., came from Colesville to visit and to give them food and writing materials. At other times, Joseph traveled the thirty miles from Harmony to Colesville for supplies. Joseph Smith related that the Melchizedek Priesthood was bestowed upon him and Oliver Cowdery by Peter, James, and John along the banks of the Susquehanna River between Colesville and Harmony (D&C 128:20; see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF).

After the Church was organized on April 6, 1830, in FAYETTE, NEW YORK, Joseph made several visits to the Knight family in Colesville to preach the gospel. On one of these visits, he cast an evil spirit out of Newel Knight, a son of Joseph Knight, Sr. This was the first miracle performed in the Church after its organization (HC 1:82–83).

tant clerks have responsibility for gathering most statistical data about members that enable the Church to function properly.

To ensure accurate and complete Church records, clerks coordinate the gathering of information, train assistant clerks, supervise record keeping, and make certain that proper financial controls and procedures are followed. They also ensure compliance with audit findings and oversee the use and support of computer information systems. Clerks keep the financial records, recording the expenditure of funds to support Church programs and making it possible for bishops to provide members with information regarding their personal tithes and offerings.

Clerks maintain MEMBERSHIP RECORDS that include demographic information and ordinance information for each member. They record the participation of members in some Church services. Stake and ward priesthood leaders use this information to help members prepare to receive the ordinances and covenants of the gospel. Modern technology has simplified record keeping in the Church. Most stake and ward clerks in the United States and Canada use computer systems that enable them to produce information quickly for stake presidents and bishops and to send information to Church headquarters.

JEFFREY C. BATESON

---

COFFEE

Active Latter-day Saints abstain from drinking coffee. This practice derives from an 1833 revelation known as the WORD OF WISDOM, which states that "hot drinks are not for the body or the belly" (D&C 89:9). Hyrum Smith, Assistant President of the Church, later defined "hot drinks" as coffee and TEA (T&S 3 [June 1, 1842]:800), establishing the official interpretation for subsequent generations. The Word of Wisdom was given originally to show the will of God, though not as a commandment. Abstinence from coffee has been expected of fully participating members since the early twentieth century (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89).

The main chemical in coffee that has caused health concerns is caffeine, a cerebral and cardiovascular stimulant. A large number of other substances are also found in coffee, and their effects on health are not yet well understood.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gilman, A. G.; L. S. Goodman; and A. Gilman, eds. Goodman and Gilman's The Pharmacological Basis of Therapeutics, 6th ed., pp. 592–604. New York, 1980.

Stratton, Clifford J. "The Xanthines: Coffee, Cola, Cocoa, and Tea." BYU Studies 20 (Summer 1980):371–88.

JOSEPH LYNN LYON

---

COLESVILLE, NEW YORK

Colesville, New York, is a township located in Broome County, in the south central part of the state, where one of the earliest BRANCHES of the Church was organized in 1830. The central part of the township lies approximately ten miles northeast of the present city of Binghamton. In October 1825 Joseph Smith went to the area to work intermittently for Josiah Stowell for a little over a year. Stowell lived just south of the village of South Bainbridge in adjoining Bainbridge Township, Chenango County (since 1857 the village of Afton, Afton Township). Sometime during 1826 Joseph Smith also worked for Joseph Knight, Sr., who with his family resided on a farm located on Pickerel Pond, immediately east of Nineveh, a village in Colesville Township on the Susquehanna River.

Joseph Smith maintained a friendly relationship with the Knight family and others in the Colesville area. In 1829, when Joseph and Oliver COWDERY were translating the Book of Mormon in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, Joseph Knight, Sr., came from Colesville to visit and to give them food and writing materials. At other times, Joseph traveled the thirty miles from Harmony to Colesville for supplies. Joseph Smith related that the Melchizedek Priesthood was bestowed upon him and Oliver Cowdery by Peter, James, and John along the banks of the Susquehanna River between Colesville and Harmony (D&C 128:20; see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF).

After the Church was organized on April 6, 1830, in FAYETTE, NEW YORK, Joseph made several visits to the Knight family in Colesville to preach the gospel. On one of these visits, he cast an evil spirit out of Newel Knight, a son of Joseph Knight, Sr. This was the first miracle performed in the Church after its organization (HC 1:82–83).

tant clerks have responsibility for gathering most statistical data about members that enable the Church to function properly.

To ensure accurate and complete Church records, clerks coordinate the gathering of information, train assistant clerks, supervise record keeping, and make certain that proper financial controls and procedures are followed. They also ensure compliance with audit findings and oversee the use and support of computer information systems. Clerks keep the financial records, recording the expenditure of funds to support Church programs and making it possible for bishops to provide members with information regarding their personal tithes and offerings.

Clerks maintain MEMBERSHIP RECORDS that include demographic information and ordinance information for each member. They record the participation of members in some Church services. Stake and ward priesthood leaders use this information to help members prepare to receive the ordinances and covenants of the gospel. Modern technology has simplified record keeping in the Church. Most stake and ward clerks in the United States and Canada use computer systems that enable them to produce information quickly for stake presidents and bishops and to send information to Church headquarters.

JEFFREY C. BATESON

---

COFFEE

Active Latter-day Saints abstain from drinking coffee. This practice derives from an 1833 revelation known as the WORD OF WISDOM, which states that "hot drinks are not for the body or the belly" (D&C 89:9). Hyrum Smith, Assistant President of the Church, later defined "hot drinks" as coffee and TEA (T&S 3 [June 1, 1842]:800), establishing the official interpretation for subsequent generations. The Word of Wisdom was given originally to show the will of God, though not as a commandment. Abstinence from coffee has been expected of fully participating members since the early twentieth century (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89).

The main chemical in coffee that has caused health concerns is caffeine, a cerebral and cardiovascular stimulant. A large number of other substances are also found in coffee, and their effects on health are not yet well understood.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gilman, A. G.; L. S. Goodman; and A. Gilman, eds. Goodman and Gilman's The Pharmacological Basis of Therapeutics, 6th ed., pp. 592–604. New York, 1980.

Stratton, Clifford J. "The Xanthines: Coffee, Cola, Cocoa, and Tea." BYU Studies 20 (Summer 1980):371–88.

JOSEPH LYNN LYON

---

COLESVILLE, NEW YORK

Colesville, New York, is a township located in Broome County, in the south central part of the state, where one of the earliest BRANCHES of the Church was organized in 1830. The central part of the township lies approximately ten miles northeast of the present city of Binghamton. In October 1825 Joseph Smith went to the area to work intermittently for Josiah Stowell for a little over a year. Stowell lived just south of the village of South Bainbridge in adjoining Bainbridge Township, Chenango County (since 1857 the village of Afton, Afton Township). Sometime during 1826 Joseph Smith also worked for Joseph Knight, Sr., who with his family resided on a farm located on Pickerel Pond, immediately east of Nineveh, a village in Colesville Township on the Susquehanna River.

Joseph Smith maintained a friendly relationship with the Knight family and others in the Colesville area. In 1829, when Joseph and Oliver COWDERY were translating the Book of Mormon in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, Joseph Knight, Sr., came from Colesville to visit and to give them food and writing materials. At other times, Joseph traveled the thirty miles from Harmony to Colesville for supplies. Joseph Smith related that the Melchizedek Priesthood was bestowed upon him and Oliver Cowdery by Peter, James, and John along the banks of the Susquehanna River between Colesville and Harmony (D&C 128:20; see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF).

After the Church was organized on April 6, 1830, in FAYETTE, NEW YORK, Joseph made several visits to the Knight family in Colesville to preach the gospel. On one of these visits, he cast an evil spirit out of Newel Knight, a son of Joseph Knight, Sr. This was the first miracle performed in the Church after its organization (HC 1:82–83).

Numerous converts were baptized in the area, despite strong opposition from enemies of the Church. Joseph was brought to trial during July 1830 in both Chenango and Broome counties on charges related to his religious activities, but was acquitted in both instances. The Colesville Branch, often spoken of as the first branch of the Church, was organized in October 1830, with Hyrum SMITH as branch president. He was followed in this office by Newel Knight. The membership of the branch was approximately sixty-five members.

The Saints in the Colesville area, following instruction of the Prophet (D&C 38), migrated to Kirtland and then Thompson, Ohio, in April–May 1831, and subsequently on to Kaw Township, Jackson County, Missouri, during June–July 1831. Through all their moves they stayed together and were known as the Colesville Branch.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Porter, Larry C. "A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.

LAMAR E. GARRARD

---

COLONIZATION

[This entry is an overview of Latter-day Saint colonization in the Great Basin. Articles on City Planning; Community; Gathering; and Immigration and Emigration discuss principles guiding colonization decisions. For further discussion of colonization outside Utah, see entries on LDS pioneer settlements in Arizona; California; Canada; Colorado; Idaho; Mexico; Nevada; New Mexico; and Wyoming. Related articles are Economic History of the Church; Native Americans; and Young, Brigham.]

Latter-day Saints were industrious colonizers of the American West. During the Brigham YOUNG administration alone, they founded nearly four hundred settlements, with three hundred more thereafter. Though some were distant from Salt Lake City, they were not isolated villages but maintained close communication with adjacent settlements and Church headquarters. Following a pattern that emerged in the Church's first decade, each was founded to provide protection and promote unity and shared values.

Between 1830 and 1846, Latter-day Saints settled in or near a series of Church headquarters. After conflict and persecution in New York, Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, they sought refuge in a virtual no-man's-land in the West. After establishing a new headquarters in the heretofore largely uninhabited SALT LAKE VALLEY, Latter-day Saints sought to ensure self-rule by establishing a dominant influence over a vast territory including present-day Utah and Nevada and parts of Idaho, Wyoming, and California. Immigrant converts, first from the United States and the British Isles and after 1852 from continental Europe, swelled the ranks of colonists. Under the direction of President Brigham Young, exploring parties were sent out and settlements were established in a corridor extending from the Salt Lake Valley southwest to Las Vegas, Nevada, and San Bernardino, California. Missions to Native Americans prompted the establishment of several settlements around the perimeter of the Mormon sphere of influence: Fort Limhi, Idaho, on the Salmon River to the northwest; the Elk Mountain Mission to the southeast (near present-day Moab, Utah); and Harmony and Santa Clara, Utah, and Las Vegas to the southwest. Settlements in Carson Valley, Nevada, on the west were an outgrowth of individual LDS enterprise along the route of gold-seekers traveling to California, reinforced at the direction of Church leaders. To the northeast, Fort Bridger and Fort Supply, Wyoming, were to anchor a series of way stations between Salt Lake City and the Missouri River along the MORMON TRAIL to facilitate immigration and trade. San Bernardino was to be a temporary gathering place for Saints from the Pacific Coast.

For various reasons, most of these outer colonies proved less than successful and were discontinued by 1858. The march of the UTAH EXPEDITION toward Utah and hostility provoked by the MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE prompted a withdrawal from most distant outposts. After the conclusion of the so-called Utah War, colonization resumed, but within a more compact territory. St. George, Utah, the focal point of the 1861 Cotton Mission, became a key settlement in the Southwest. With President Young's persistent support, that settlement survived the demise of its cotton industry after America's Civil War and the abandonment of LDS efforts to establish a route for trade and immigration via the Gulf of California and the lower Colorado River. With the addition of settlements in northern Utah and southern Idaho, Numerous converts were baptized in the area, despite strong opposition from enemies of the Church. Joseph was brought to trial during July 1830 in both Chenango and Broome counties on charges related to his religious activities, but was acquitted in both instances. The Colesville Branch, often spoken of as the first branch of the Church, was organized in October 1830, with Hyrum SMITH as branch president. He was followed in this office by Newel Knight. The membership of the branch was approximately sixty-five members.

The Saints in the Colesville area, following instruction of the Prophet (D&C 38), migrated to Kirtland and then Thompson, Ohio, in April–May 1831, and subsequently on to Kaw Township, Jackson County, Missouri, during June–July 1831. Through all their moves they stayed together and were known as the Colesville Branch.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Porter, Larry C. "A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.

LAMAR E. GARRARD

---

COLONIZATION

[This entry is an overview of Latter-day Saint colonization in the Great Basin. Articles on City Planning; Community; Gathering; and Immigration and Emigration discuss principles guiding colonization decisions. For further discussion of colonization outside Utah, see entries on LDS pioneer settlements in Arizona; California; Canada; Colorado; Idaho; Mexico; Nevada; New Mexico; and Wyoming. Related articles are Economic History of the Church; Native Americans; and Young, Brigham.]

Latter-day Saints were industrious colonizers of the American West. During the Brigham YOUNG administration alone, they founded nearly four hundred settlements, with three hundred more thereafter. Though some were distant from Salt Lake City, they were not isolated villages but maintained close communication with adjacent settlements and Church headquarters. Following a pattern that emerged in the Church's first decade, each was founded to provide protection and promote unity and shared values.

Between 1830 and 1846, Latter-day Saints settled in or near a series of Church headquarters. After conflict and persecution in New York, Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, they sought refuge in a virtual no-man's-land in the West. After establishing a new headquarters in the heretofore largely uninhabited SALT LAKE VALLEY, Latter-day Saints sought to ensure self-rule by establishing a dominant influence over a vast territory including present-day Utah and Nevada and parts of Idaho, Wyoming, and California. Immigrant converts, first from the United States and the British Isles and after 1852 from continental Europe, swelled the ranks of colonists. Under the direction of President Brigham Young, exploring parties were sent out and settlements were established in a corridor extending from the Salt Lake Valley southwest to Las Vegas, Nevada, and San Bernardino, California. Missions to Native Americans prompted the establishment of several settlements around the perimeter of the Mormon sphere of influence: Fort Limhi, Idaho, on the Salmon River to the northwest; the Elk Mountain Mission to the southeast (near present-day Moab, Utah); and Harmony and Santa Clara, Utah, and Las Vegas to the southwest. Settlements in Carson Valley, Nevada, on the west were an outgrowth of individual LDS enterprise along the route of gold-seekers traveling to California, reinforced at the direction of Church leaders. To the northeast, Fort Bridger and Fort Supply, Wyoming, were to anchor a series of way stations between Salt Lake City and the Missouri River along the MORMON TRAIL to facilitate immigration and trade. San Bernardino was to be a temporary gathering place for Saints from the Pacific Coast.

For various reasons, most of these outer colonies proved less than successful and were discontinued by 1858. The march of the UTAH EXPEDITION toward Utah and hostility provoked by the MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE prompted a withdrawal from most distant outposts. After the conclusion of the so-called Utah War, colonization resumed, but within a more compact territory. St. George, Utah, the focal point of the 1861 Cotton Mission, became a key settlement in the Southwest. With President Young's persistent support, that settlement survived the demise of its cotton industry after America's Civil War and the abandonment of LDS efforts to establish a route for trade and immigration via the Gulf of California and the lower Colorado River. With the addition of settlements in northern Utah and southern Idaho, the population came to be most heavily concentrated in the territory's northern region.

This view of Logan, Utah, c. 1890, with the Logan Temple above the town and grist mill in the foreground, shows the broad streets and typical layout of a thriving "Mormon village." Courtesy University of Utah.

Meanwhile, the extension of settlement beyond the Salt Lake Valley deprived Native Americans of prime hunting and fishing lands. After initial conflicts, President Young established a policy of feeding the Indians rather than fighting them, but still advised villages to build fortifications against possible attack. Latter-day Saints sought to convert the Indians both to their religion and to the pursuit of agriculture. Even with the assistance of federally sponsored farms, however, few Indians made successful transitions. The continued influx of LDS immigrants and the failure of Church and government efforts to reverse the gradual impoverishment of the Native American population led to the Walker War of the 1850s and to the Black Hawk War of the 1860s. The subsequent resettlement of the surviving Indians to reservations removed one of the major obstacles to further colonization.

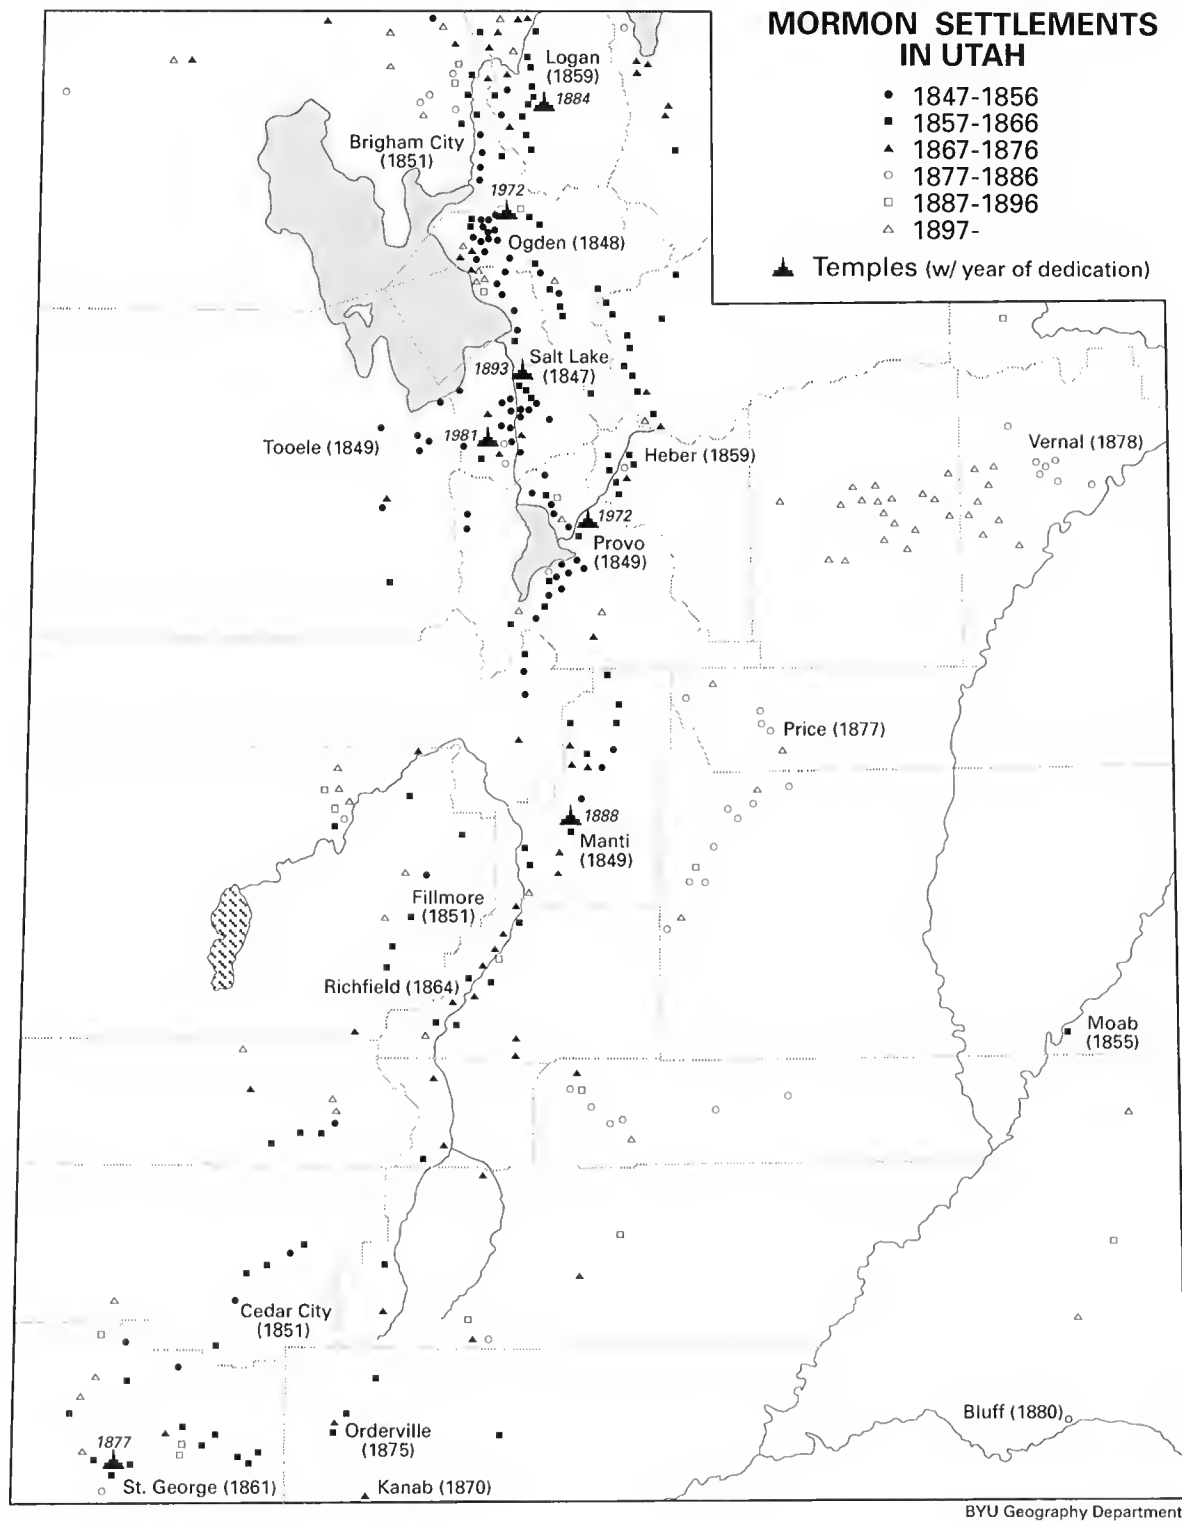

Before Brigham Young's death in 1877, additional settlements were planted along the Little Colorado River in Arizona, followed by more in Colorado, New Mexico, Canada, and Mexico. Elsewhere, the Palawai Valley on the island of Lanai and, later, Laie on Oahu became gathering places for Saints in Hawaii, the first such settlements outside western North America.

Colonization was generally directed and coordinated from Church headquarters. Church leaders selected key sites and handpicked leaders to direct the founding of new villages. Some settlers volunteered, while others received a CALLING to relocate. When LDS families established new locations on their own initiative, Church leaders usually visited soon afterward to ensure that the settlement was properly organized. Thus, each settlement was effectively a colony of the mother settlement in Salt Lake City. From initial sites, Latter-day Saints spread out to occupy most of the arable land nearby and founded new towns.

Beginning in 1880, Mormon villages spread along the route of the Utah and Northern Railway and the Upper Snake River Valley in Idaho. Many of these were settled through individual initiative rather than Church direction, and Church leaders labored with some difficulty to encourage the location of homes in the customary compact Mormon villages rather than scattered throughout the surrounding farmland.

Colonies in Alberta, Canada, and in Chihua-

Mormon settlements in Utah, 1847–1906.

hua, Mexico, largely resulted from the Church's attempts to find refuge for polygamists under threat of prosecution during the 1880s (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION). Later efforts included the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming by 1900 and Kelsey, Texas, in 1901. Though Kelsey was one of only a handful of LDS settlements established outside the larger sphere of Latter-day Saint influence, the town still exhibited many of the characteristics of a planned Mormon village.

Early in the twentieth century, new colonization ceased and emphasis was placed on strengthening congregations throughout the world rather than on gathering to already predominantly LDS communities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- Campbell, Eugene E. "Brigham Young's Outer Cordon—A Reappraisal." Utah Historical Quarterly 41 (Summer 1973):220–53.
- Hunter, Milton R. Brigham Young the Colonizer. Santa Barbara, Calif., 1973.
- Sherlock, Richard. "Mormon Migration and Settlement After 1875." Journal of Mormon History 2 (1975):53–68.

RICHARD L. JENSEN

---

COLORADO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

The first Latter-day Saints in Colorado were predominantly from the American South. In 1846, converts from Mississippi, expecting to join Brigham Young and the pioneer company en route to the Great Basin, wintered at the site of present-day Pueblo after learning that the first company of Nauvoo emigrants would not leave the Missouri River until the next spring. A group of sick members of the MORMON BATTALION, including women and children, joined these Mississippi Saints, and all left Pueblo in time to reach the Great Salt Lake Valley in July 1847.

Southern converts also formed the nucleus of permanent LDS colonization in Colorado, wintering in Pueblo in 1877–1878 and settling in 1878 in the San Luis Valley. Joined by settlers from Sanpete County and elsewhere in Utah and by two families from New Mexico, they founded several settlements in the following decade. The San Luis

Stake, with headquarters at Manassa, was organized in 1883 and consisted of LDS colonists in Conejos County. Jaek Dempsey, a son of expatriate southern Latter-day Saints, was born in Manassa and, as world heavyweight boxing champion, bore the nickname "Manassa Mauler."

Beginning as early as 1880, LDS settlers began to establish farms along the Mancos River in southwest Colorado. In 1901, after land in the nearby Fort Lewis Indian Reservation was made available for settlement, Latter-day Saints began to establish farms on the Fort Lewis Mesa. They constituted a majority of the settlers in that area, though Mancos itself was not a predominantly Mormon town. The Young Stake, organized in 1912, consisted of Latter-day Saints in Mancos, the Fort Lewis Mesa, and northwestern New Mexico.

Early growth of the Church along the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains came largely through the proselytizing of the Western States Mission, long headquartered in Denver; branches of the Church were established there and in Englewood, Fort Collins, and Pueblo by 1930. Farther west, additional growth came in Alamosa and Grand Junction in the first third of the twentieth century. By 1990, after continued proselytizing and in-migration, there were 87,000 Latter-day Saints in Colorado.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Carleton Q.; Betty Shawcroft; and Robert Compton. The Mormons: 100 Years in the San Luis Valley of Colorado 1883–1983. La Jara, Colo., 1982.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941.
- The Stone Rolls Forth: A History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Southeastern Colorado 1846–1986*. Compiled by the Colorado Springs, Colorado North Stake, 1988.

RICHARD L. JENSEN

---

COLUMBUS, CHRISTOPHER

Latter-day Saints generally regard Columbus as having fulfilled a prophecy contained early in the Book of Mormon. NEPHI<sup>1</sup> recorded a vision of the future of his father's descendants. After foreseeing the destruction of his own seed, Nephi beheld a GENTILE "separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters," and saw that the Spirit of hua, Mexico, largely resulted from the Church's attempts to find refuge for polygamists under threat of prosecution during the 1880s (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION). Later efforts included the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming by 1900 and Kelsey, Texas, in 1901. Though Kelsey was one of only a handful of LDS settlements established outside the larger sphere of Latter-day Saint influence, the town still exhibited many of the characteristics of a planned Mormon village.

Early in the twentieth century, new colonization ceased and emphasis was placed on strengthening congregations throughout the world rather than on gathering to already predominantly LDS communities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- Campbell, Eugene E. "Brigham Young's Outer Cordon—A Reappraisal." Utah Historical Quarterly 41 (Summer 1973):220–53.
- Hunter, Milton R. Brigham Young the Colonizer. Santa Barbara, Calif., 1973.
- Sherlock, Richard. "Mormon Migration and Settlement After 1875." Journal of Mormon History 2 (1975):53–68.

RICHARD L. JENSEN

---

COLORADO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

The first Latter-day Saints in Colorado were predominantly from the American South. In 1846, converts from Mississippi, expecting to join Brigham Young and the pioneer company en route to the Great Basin, wintered at the site of present-day Pueblo after learning that the first company of Nauvoo emigrants would not leave the Missouri River until the next spring. A group of sick members of the MORMON BATTALION, including women and children, joined these Mississippi Saints, and all left Pueblo in time to reach the Great Salt Lake Valley in July 1847.

Southern converts also formed the nucleus of permanent LDS colonization in Colorado, wintering in Pueblo in 1877–1878 and settling in 1878 in the San Luis Valley. Joined by settlers from Sanpete County and elsewhere in Utah and by two families from New Mexico, they founded several settlements in the following decade. The San Luis

Stake, with headquarters at Manassa, was organized in 1883 and consisted of LDS colonists in Conejos County. Jack Dempsey, a son of expatriate southern Latter-day Saints, was born in Manassa and, as world heavyweight boxing champion, bore the nickname "Manassa Mauler."

Beginning as early as 1880, LDS settlers began to establish farms along the Mancos River in southwest Colorado. In 1901, after land in the nearby Fort Lewis Indian Reservation was made available for settlement, Latter-day Saints began to establish farms on the Fort Lewis Mesa. They constituted a majority of the settlers in that area, though Mancos itself was not a predominantly Mormon town. The Young Stake, organized in 1912, consisted of Latter-day Saints in Mancos, the Fort Lewis Mesa, and northwestern New Mexico.

Early growth of the Church along the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains came largely through the proselytizing of the Western States Mission, long headquartered in Denver; branches of the Church were established there and in Englewood, Fort Collins, and Pueblo by 1930. Farther west, additional growth came in Alamosa and Grand Junction in the first third of the twentieth century. By 1990, after continued proselytizing and in-migration, there were 87,000 Latter-day Saints in Colorado.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Carleton Q.; Betty Shawcroft; and Robert Compton. The Mormons: 100 Years in the San Luis Valley of Colorado 1883–1983. La Jara, Colo., 1982.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941.
- The Stone Rolls Forth: A History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Southeastern Colorado 1846–1986*. Compiled by the Colorado Springs, Colorado North Stake, 1988.

RICHARD L. JENSEN

---

COLUMBUS, CHRISTOPHER

Latter-day Saints generally regard Columbus as having fulfilled a prophecy contained early in the Book of Mormon. NEPHI<sup>1</sup> recorded a vision of the future of his father's descendants. After foreseeing the destruction of his own seed, Nephi beheld a GENTILE "separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters," and saw that the Spirit of Latter-day Saints attending classes in the San Luis Stake Academy, in Manassa, Colorado, December 1909. Each stake, wherever located, was counseled to appoint an academy principal and to operate a school for the general education of the Saints.

God “came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land” (1 Ne. 13:12).

Nephi appears to give an accurate account of Columbus’s motives. Even though he was well-acquainted with the sciences of his day and his voyages have been viewed by some historians as primarily an economic triumph of Spain over Portugal, Columbus apparently had bigger motives for his voyage and felt himself spiritually driven to discover new lands. Newly acknowledged documents show that medieval eschatology, the scriptures, and divine inspiration were the main forces compelling him to sail. His notes in the works of Pierre d’Ailly and his own unfinished Book of Prophecies substantiate his apocalyptic view of the world and his feelings about his own prophetic role.

Among the themes of this book was the conversion of the heathen. Columbus quoted Seneca, “The years will come . . . when the Ocean will loose the bonds by which we have been confined, when an immense land shall lie revealed” (Watts, p. 94). He believed himself chosen by God to find that land and deliver the light of Christianity to the natives there. He was called Christoferens (the Christ-bearer). A map contemporaneous with his voyages depicts him bearing the Christ child on his shoulders across the waters. He believed that he was to help usher in the age of “one fold, and one shepherd,” citing John 10:16 (cf. 3 Ne. 15:21), and spoke of finding “the new heaven and new earth.”

Writing to King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella to gain financial support, Columbus testified that a voice had told him he had been watched over from infancy to prepare him for discovering the Indies. He felt that he was given divine keys to ocean barriers that only he could unlock (Merrill, p. 135). In a second letter, he emphasized his prophetic role: “Reason, mathematics, and maps of the world were of no use to me in the execution of the enterprise of the Indies. What Isaiah said [e.g., Isa. 24:15] was completely fulfilled” (Watts, p. 96). Unknowingly, Columbus also fulfilled Nephi’s prophecy.

hua, Mexico, largely resulted from the Church's attempts to find refuge for polygamists under threat of prosecution during the 1880s (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION). Later efforts included the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming by 1900 and Kelsey, Texas, in 1901. Though Kelsey was one of only a handful of LDS settlements established outside the larger sphere of Latter-day Saint influence, the town still exhibited many of the characteristics of a planned Mormon village.

Early in the twentieth century, new colonization ceased and emphasis was placed on strengthening congregations throughout the world rather than on gathering to already predominantly LDS communities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- Campbell, Eugene E. "Brigham Young's Outer Cordon—A Reappraisal." Utah Historical Quarterly 41 (Summer 1973):220–53.
- Hunter, Milton R. Brigham Young the Colonizer. Santa Barbara, Calif., 1973.
- Sherlock, Richard. "Mormon Migration and Settlement After 1875." Journal of Mormon History 2 (1975):53–68.

RICHARD L. JENSEN

---

COLORADO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

The first Latter-day Saints in Colorado were predominantly from the American South. In 1846, converts from Mississippi, expecting to join Brigham Young and the pioneer company en route to the Great Basin, wintered at the site of present-day Pueblo after learning that the first company of Nauvoo emigrants would not leave the Missouri River until the next spring. A group of sick members of the MORMON BATTALION, including women and children, joined these Mississippi Saints, and all left Pueblo in time to reach the Great Salt Lake Valley in July 1847.

Southern converts also formed the nucleus of permanent LDS colonization in Colorado, wintering in Pueblo in 1877–1878 and settling in 1878 in the San Luis Valley. Joined by settlers from Sanpete County and elsewhere in Utah and by two families from New Mexico, they founded several settlements in the following decade. The San Luis

Stake, with headquarters at Manassa, was organized in 1883 and consisted of LDS colonists in Conejos County. Jaek Dempsey, a son of expatriate southern Latter-day Saints, was born in Manassa and, as world heavyweight boxing champion, bore the nickname "Manassa Mauler."

Beginning as early as 1880, LDS settlers began to establish farms along the Mancos River in southwest Colorado. In 1901, after land in the nearby Fort Lewis Indian Reservation was made available for settlement, Latter-day Saints began to establish farms on the Fort Lewis Mesa. They constituted a majority of the settlers in that area, though Mancos itself was not a predominantly Mormon town. The Young Stake, organized in 1912, consisted of Latter-day Saints in Mancos, the Fort Lewis Mesa, and northwestern New Mexico.

Early growth of the Church along the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains came largely through the proselytizing of the Western States Mission, long headquartered in Denver; branches of the Church were established there and in Englewood, Fort Collins, and Pueblo by 1930. Farther west, additional growth came in Alamosa and Grand Junction in the first third of the twentieth century. By 1990, after continued proselytizing and in-migration, there were 87,000 Latter-day Saints in Colorado.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Carleton Q.; Betty Shawcroft; and Robert Compton. The Mormons: 100 Years in the San Luis Valley of Colorado 1883–1983. La Jara, Colo., 1982.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941.
- The Stone Rolls Forth: A History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Southeastern Colorado 1846–1986*. Compiled by the Colorado Springs, Colorado North Stake, 1988.

RICHARD L. JENSEN

---

COLUMBUS, CHRISTOPHER

Latter-day Saints generally regard Columbus as having fulfilled a prophecy contained early in the Book of Mormon. NEPHI<sup>1</sup> recorded a vision of the future of his father's descendants. After foreseeing the destruction of his own seed, Nephi beheld a GENTILE "separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters," and saw that the Spirit of Latter-day Saints attending classes in the San Luis Stake Academy, in Manassa, Colorado, December 1909. Each stake, wherever located, was counseled to appoint an academy principal and to operate a school for the general education of the Saints.

God “came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land” (1 Ne. 13:12).

Nephi appears to give an accurate account of Columbus’s motives. Even though he was well-acquainted with the sciences of his day and his voyages have been viewed by some historians as primarily an economic triumph of Spain over Portugal, Columbus apparently had bigger motives for his voyage and felt himself spiritually driven to discover new lands. Newly acknowledged documents show that medieval eschatology, the scriptures, and divine inspiration were the main forces compelling him to sail. His notes in the works of Pierre d’Ailly and his own unfinished Book of Prophecies substantiate his apocalyptic view of the world and his feelings about his own prophetic role.

Among the themes of this book was the conversion of the heathen. Columbus quoted Seneca, “The years will come . . . when the Ocean will loose the bonds by which we have been confined, when an immense land shall lie revealed” (Watts, p. 94). He believed himself chosen by God to find that land and deliver the light of Christianity to the natives there. He was called Christoferens (the Christ-bearer). A map contemporaneous with his voyages depicts him bearing the Christ child on his shoulders across the waters. He believed that he was to help usher in the age of “one fold, and one shepherd,” citing John 10:16 (cf. 3 Ne. 15:21), and spoke of finding “the new heaven and new earth.”

Writing to King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella to gain financial support, Columbus testified that a voice had told him he had been watched over from infancy to prepare him for discovering the Indies. He felt that he was given divine keys to ocean barriers that only he could unlock (Merrill, p. 135). In a second letter, he emphasized his prophetic role: “Reason, mathematics, and maps of the world were of no use to me in the execution of the enterprise of the Indies. What Isaiah said [e.g., Isa. 24:15] was completely fulfilled” (Watts, p. 96). Unknowingly, Columbus also fulfilled Nephi’s prophecy.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Merrill, Hyde M. "Christopher Columbus and the Book of Mormon." IE 69 (1966):97–98, 135–36.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Columbus and Revelation." Instructor 88 (1953):319–20; reprinted in CWHN 8:49–53.
- Watts, Pauline Moffitt. "Prophecy and Discovery: On the Spiritual Origins of Christopher Columbus's 'Enterprise of the Indies.'" American Historical Review 90 (1985):73–102.

LOUISE C. HANSON

COMFORTER

See: Holy Ghost

COMMANDMENTS

Latter-day Saints believe that commandments are divine directives for righteous living; bring happiness and spiritual and temporal blessings; and are part of God's way to redeem his children and endow them with ETERNAL LIFE. Therefore, commandments provide not only a test of faith, obedience, and love for God and Jesus Christ but also an opportunity to experience love from God and joy both in this life and in the life to come. Commandments are received by REVELATION directly from deity or through his prophets. Written accounts of such revelations are contained in the scriptures, which include the BIBLE, the BOOK OF MORMON, the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, and the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

At the organization of the Church on April 6, 1830, Joseph SMITH was designated a seer, translator, prophet, apostle, and elder. On that occasion, the Lord said to the Church, "Thou shalt give heed unto all [Joseph Smith's] words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith" (D&C 21:4–5; cf. D&C 1:37–38; 5:10; 68:34). Based upon these admonitions, members of the Church accept righteous instruction from those authorized by God as commandments binding upon the Church and upon individuals.

To the Church in 1831 the Lord restated the "first and great" commandment (cf. Matt. 22:37–38): "Wherefore, I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him" (D&C 59:5). This reiteration was followed by the previously established divine injunctions not to steal, commit adultery, or kill (D&C 59:6).

In the Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, which the Lord identified as the "law of the Church" (D&C 42:2, 59), verses 19–27 reaffirm many admonitions from the TEN COMMANDMENTS. These basic commandments have been reiterated in successive DISPENSATIONS, or eras, in essentially the same form (Ex. 20:3–17; Deut. 5:6–21; Mosiah 12:34–36; D&C 42:19–27; cf. Matt. 5:17–48).

In Old Testament times, because the prohibition of certain outward acts was emphasized, the consequences of disobedience were seemingly stressed more than spiritual and physical redemption through obedience (see LAW OF MOSES). With a different emphasis the New Testament and the Book of Mormon accentuate the purifying process of obedience. Christ made it clear that the commandments were to include not only the deeds of men and women but also their thoughts and motives. In the SERMON ON THE MOUNT, he contrasted the old law and the new. For instance, to look upon a woman with lust in one's heart was defined as a type of adultery (Matt. 5:28). To become angry with neighbors placed one in danger of judgment (Matt. 5:21–22). Rather than seeking vengeance and "an eye for an eye," Jesus' followers were to turn the other cheek and go the extra mile (Matt. 5:38–42). To sum up the new law, Christ said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; . . . Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:43–44, 48; cf. 3 Ne. 12:43–48).

To those listeners in the Western Hemisphere who survived the destruction of A.D. 34, the resurrected Christ explained the relationship between the law and the gospel: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfil; for verily I say unto you, one jot nor one tittle hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled. And behold, I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Merrill, Hyde M. "Christopher Columbus and the Book of Mormon." IE 69 (1966):97–98, 135–36.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Columbus and Revelation." Instructor 88 (1953):319–20; reprinted in CWHN 8:49–53.
- Watts, Pauline Moffitt. "Prophecy and Discovery: On the Spiritual Origins of Christopher Columbus's 'Enterprise of the Indies.'" American Historical Review 90 (1985):73–102.

LOUISE C. HANSON

COMFORTER

See: Holy Ghost

COMMANDMENTS

Latter-day Saints believe that commandments are divine directives for righteous living; bring happiness and spiritual and temporal blessings; and are part of God's way to redeem his children and endow them with ETERNAL LIFE. Therefore, commandments provide not only a test of faith, obedience, and love for God and Jesus Christ but also an opportunity to experience love from God and joy both in this life and in the life to come. Commandments are received by REVELATION directly from deity or through his prophets. Written accounts of such revelations are contained in the scriptures, which include the BIBLE, the BOOK OF MORMON, the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, and the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

At the organization of the Church on April 6, 1830, Joseph SMITH was designated a seer, translator, prophet, apostle, and elder. On that occasion, the Lord said to the Church, "Thou shalt give heed unto all [Joseph Smith's] words and commandments which he shall give unto you as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith" (D&C 21:4–5; cf. D&C 1:37–38; 5:10; 68:34). Based upon these admonitions, members of the Church accept righteous instruction from those authorized by God as commandments binding upon the Church and upon individuals.

To the Church in 1831 the Lord restated the "first and great" commandment (cf. Matt. 22:37–38): "Wherefore, I give unto them a commandment, saying thus: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, mind, and strength; and in the name of Jesus Christ thou shalt serve him" (D&C 59:5). This reiteration was followed by the previously established divine injunctions not to steal, commit adultery, or kill (D&C 59:6).

In the Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, which the Lord identified as the "law of the Church" (D&C 42:2, 59), verses 19–27 reaffirm many admonitions from the TEN COMMANDMENTS. These basic commandments have been reiterated in successive DISPENSATIONS, or eras, in essentially the same form (Ex. 20:3–17; Deut. 5:6–21; Mosiah 12:34–36; D&C 42:19–27; cf. Matt. 5:17–48).

In Old Testament times, because the prohibition of certain outward acts was emphasized, the consequences of disobedience were seemingly stressed more than spiritual and physical redemption through obedience (see LAW OF MOSES). With a different emphasis the New Testament and the Book of Mormon accentuate the purifying process of obedience. Christ made it clear that the commandments were to include not only the deeds of men and women but also their thoughts and motives. In the SERMON ON THE MOUNT, he contrasted the old law and the new. For instance, to look upon a woman with lust in one's heart was defined as a type of adultery (Matt. 5:28). To become angry with neighbors placed one in danger of judgment (Matt. 5:21–22). Rather than seeking vengeance and "an eye for an eye," Jesus' followers were to turn the other cheek and go the extra mile (Matt. 5:38–42). To sum up the new law, Christ said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; . . . Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:43–44, 48; cf. 3 Ne. 12:43–48).

To those listeners in the Western Hemisphere who survived the destruction of A.D. 34, the resurrected Christ explained the relationship between the law and the gospel: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfil; for verily I say unto you, one jot nor one tittle hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled. And behold, I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit” (3 Ne. 12:17–19). Christ’s new law clearly requires that not only outward acts but also inner thoughts and feelings conform to the spirit of the law (cf. Alma 12:12–14; D&C 88:109).

In the Church today, the Lord has emphasized that his commandments include the responsibility of self-direction: “Behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things; for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves” (D&C 58:26–28). When the “law of the Church” was received in 1831 (D&C 42), this individual responsibility was also stressed: “Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart” (42:22), and “Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm” (42:27). Later, the Lord said, “Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it” (D&C 59:6). It is apparent that God requires an awareness of one’s AGENCY and in effect grants each the power to direct oneself. As one lives in accord with the commandments and thereby becomes more sensitive to the promptings of the HOLY GHOST, outward observances become less important and the perfection of one’s thoughts and motives comes to occupy one’s attention.

Thus is it that Latter-day Saints find fulfillment and happiness in obedience not only to specific commandments such as the WORD OF WISDOM (D&C 89) and the law of TITHING (D&C 119) but also to the counsel from inspired leaders given in Church conferences and in approved written sources, such as official Church publications.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Richards, Stephen L. “Keep the Commandments.” IE 52 (May 1949):273, 345–48.
Sill, Sterling W. “Keep the Commandments.” Ensign 3 (Jan. 1973):82–83.

DIX S. COONS

---

COMMON CONSENT

Common consent is a fundamental principle of decision making at all levels in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In selecting new officers and making administrative decisions, Church leaders are instructed to seek the will of God. Once the Lord makes his will known and a decision is reached, the matter is brought before the appropriate quorum or body of Church members, who are asked to sustain or oppose the action. This process provides for direction of the Church by revelation, while protecting the AGENCY of the members to verify in their own minds whether decisions have been proper and made according to the will of God.

The principle of common consent has functioned in the Church since its inception, though the actual practices incorporating this principle have evolved significantly. The revelation on LDS Church government, received when it was organized in April 1830, states: “No person is to be ordained to any office in this church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that church” (D&C 20:65). This instruction was reemphasized three months later: “All things shall be done by common consent in the church” (D&C 26:2). LDS practices may have been influenced in these earliest years by the Book of Mormon model of theocratic government that conducted its “business by the voice of the people” (Mosiah 29:25–26), and by biblical example (e.g., Ex. 24:3; Num. 27:19).

Evidence from accounts of some early meetings and conferences indicates that many of the New England leaders of the Church felt that the membership should be directly involved in decision-making meetings, including making motions on policy issues, following standard parliamentary procedure for public meetings, and voting to finalize decisions. Individual members sometimes exercised the prerogative to call a meeting, and once it was in session, anyone had the right to address the group. The conduct of their meetings followed the congregational model that was familiar to them. However, before long early Latter-day Saints began to realize that having a prophet as their leader was a reality that must be recognized in decision making, and that they could not follow the traditional congregational model without denying the authority and revelations that God had bestowed on Joseph SMITH, these being the essential features of the Restoration that brought them together in the Church.

An incident in September 1830, wherein Hiram Page claimed to have received revelations for the direction of the Church, brought the issue

unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit” (3 Ne. 12:17–19). Christ’s new law clearly requires that not only outward acts but also inner thoughts and feelings conform to the spirit of the law (cf. Alma 12:12–14; D&C 88:109).

In the Church today, the Lord has emphasized that his commandments include the responsibility of self-direction: “Behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things; for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves” (D&C 58:26–28). When the “law of the Church” was received in 1831 (D&C 42), this individual responsibility was also stressed: “Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart” (42:22), and “Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm” (42:27). Later, the Lord said, “Thou shalt not steal; neither commit adultery, nor kill, nor do anything like unto it” (D&C 59:6). It is apparent that God requires an awareness of one’s AGENCY and in effect grants each the power to direct oneself. As one lives in accord with the commandments and thereby becomes more sensitive to the promptings of the HOLY GHOST, outward observances become less important and the perfection of one’s thoughts and motives comes to occupy one’s attention.

Thus is it that Latter-day Saints find fulfillment and happiness in obedience not only to specific commandments such as the WORD OF WISDOM (D&C 89) and the law of TITHING (D&C 119) but also to the counsel from inspired leaders given in Church conferences and in approved written sources, such as official Church publications.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Richards, Stephen L. “Keep the Commandments.” IE 52 (May 1949):273, 345–48.
Sill, Sterling W. “Keep the Commandments.” Ensign 3 (Jan. 1973):82–83.

DIX S. COONS

---

COMMON CONSENT

Common consent is a fundamental principle of decision making at all levels in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In selecting new officers and making administrative decisions, Church leaders are instructed to seek the will of God. Once the Lord makes his will known and a decision is reached, the matter is brought before the appropriate quorum or body of Church members, who are asked to sustain or oppose the action. This process provides for direction of the Church by revelation, while protecting the AGENCY of the members to verify in their own minds whether decisions have been proper and made according to the will of God.

The principle of common consent has functioned in the Church since its inception, though the actual practices incorporating this principle have evolved significantly. The revelation on LDS Church government, received when it was organized in April 1830, states: “No person is to be ordained to any office in this church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that church” (D&C 20:65). This instruction was reemphasized three months later: “All things shall be done by common consent in the church” (D&C 26:2). LDS practices may have been influenced in these earliest years by the Book of Mormon model of theocratic government that conducted its “business by the voice of the people” (Mosiah 29:25–26), and by biblical example (e.g., Ex. 24:3; Num. 27:19).

Evidence from accounts of some early meetings and conferences indicates that many of the New England leaders of the Church felt that the membership should be directly involved in decision-making meetings, including making motions on policy issues, following standard parliamentary procedure for public meetings, and voting to finalize decisions. Individual members sometimes exercised the prerogative to call a meeting, and once it was in session, anyone had the right to address the group. The conduct of their meetings followed the congregational model that was familiar to them. However, before long early Latter-day Saints began to realize that having a prophet as their leader was a reality that must be recognized in decision making, and that they could not follow the traditional congregational model without denying the authority and revelations that God had bestowed on Joseph SMITH, these being the essential features of the Restoration that brought them together in the Church.

An incident in September 1830, wherein Hiram Page claimed to have received revelations for the direction of the Church, brought the issue

Church members gathered in the Salt Lake Tabernacle raise their right hands to signify their support of a proposition to sustain Church leaders (1987).

into focus. The confusion of Oliver Cowdery and other Church members that was caused by Page's claim to be a second revelator provided the occasion for a revelation through Joseph Smith clarifying the distinctive role of Joseph as the prophet. This revelation also indicated that "all things must be done in order, and by common consent in the church" (D&C 28:13). As the authority of Joseph Smith and his successors in the office of President of the Church was clarified over the following years by subsequent revelations (D&C 107:65–67, 91–92), the principle that the sustaining voice of the members of the Church should be sought was also repeatedly reaffirmed (D&C 38:34; 42:11; 102:9; 124:144). As priesthood councils and priesthood quorums were introduced into the Church organization, general discussion of policy issues and decision making became more their responsibility in council meetings, and less an agenda item for conferences, which in turn focused more on preaching the gospel.

Today the Church continues to operate by divine revelation and common consent. CALLINGS to positions of Church service at all levels of the organization and ordination to the priesthood are made by the inspiration of authorized leaders and are then brought before the appropriate body of members to be sustained or opposed. Members do not nominate persons to office, but are asked to give their sustaining vote to decisions of presiding councils by raising their right hand, and anyone may give an opposing vote in the same way. This procedure is also followed in accepting important revelations and scriptural additions.

In a much less visible but equally important practice, decision makers at all levels present policy decisions and callings to priesthood councils for their comment and approval. At the local level a BISHOP will ordinarily discuss decisions with his counselors in the bishopric before presenting a matter to the ward membership for a sustaining vote. On many policy and program decisions the bishopric will consult with the ward council and work for consensus in that group before taking action. Following the same pattern, the stake president consults with his counselors in the stake presidency and then with the high council. The First Presidency consults in this same way on matters of general Church policy and action in regular meetings with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles.

Unanimity is the ideal for all these decision processes because of the importance of UNITY in the Church: "If ye are not one ye are not mine" (D&C 38:27). The three presiding quorums over the whole Church are of equal authority within their own spheres (D&C 107:22–26), but their decisions are of "the same power or validity" only when made "by the unanimous voice" of the quorum (D&C 107:27). Many important decisions take shape over what seem like long periods because achieving unanimity is highly valued by the quorums.

Because of the emphasis on divine and prophetic leadership and because of well-established norms and values in decision-making procedures, public dissent on a proposed calling or policy is unusual. There are, however, mechanisms for accommodating dissent. Normally, if one or more members find the proposed action objectionable, the dissenting member or members are asked to meet with the presiding officer privately to make known the reason for the question or objection. After considering the objections, presiding officers are free to pursue whatever decision they believe to be right.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook, eds. Far West Record: Minutes of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1844. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "The Evolution of the Presiding Quorums of the LDS Church." Journal of Mormon History 1 (1974):21–38.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 269–75. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Zuckerman, Michael. Peaccable Kingdoms. New York, 1970.

ROBERT E. QUINN

COMMUNION

Communion refers to partaking of the Lord's Supper. The more common term among members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is SACRAMENT (D&C 59:9). Eucharistia is the Greek term that meant "thanksgiving" among early Christians.

Partaking of the sacrament is the central act of worship and COVENANT renewal and resembles the simple commemorative meal described in the New Testament (cf. Matt. 26:26–28; Mark 14:22–24; Luke 22:19–20; Acts 2:42, 46). Postbiblical doctrines of transubstantiation (real presence) and of a "mere sign" are absent from the LDS teachings. All members of the Church, including unbaptized children, are encouraged to partake of the bread and water as emblems in remembrance of the body and blood of Jesus Christ (see D&C 27). The communion sought is a communion of spirit as envisioned in the SACRAMENT PRAYERS (Moro. 4–5; 3 Ne. 18; D&C 20:77, 79).

[See also Sacraments.]

PAUL B. PIXTON

COMMUNITY

For Latter-day Saints, community is an essential and eternal part of life in this world and in the world to come. From the time the Church was established (1830), its teachings have placed emphasis on principles of unity, cooperation, mutual assistance, and beautification of one's surroundings. The community of believers envisioned by the Prophet Joseph SMITH continues today, based essentially on the principles he established. Changes, however, occurred as the Church moved to the Intermountain West, where Mormon towns and cities rose, and later as the Church spread to many parts of the world. As the Church has grown, the community embodied in the WARD has become a special focus of spiritual and social life among Church members, however small or isolated the congregation. Wherever Latter-day Saints find themselves, they form a community of believers based on human relationships that are expected to endure forever.

TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH AND BRIGHAM YOUNG. The advantages of village life described by Joseph Smith are an extension of life in a New England town. The Smiths brought to the frontier their New England background, emphasizing the importance of the community in providing education, mutual assistance, and political and economic organization. Joseph Smith's ideas about the imbishopric will consult with the ward council and work for consensus in that group before taking action. Following the same pattern, the stake president consults with his counselors in the stake presidency and then with the high council. The First Presidency consults in this same way on matters of general Church policy and action in regular meetings with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles.

Unanimity is the ideal for all these decision processes because of the importance of UNITY in the Church: "If ye are not one ye are not mine" (D&C 38:27). The three presiding quorums over the whole Church are of equal authority within their own spheres (D&C 107:22–26), but their decisions are of "the same power or validity" only when made "by the unanimous voice" of the quorum (D&C 107:27). Many important decisions take shape over what seem like long periods because achieving unanimity is highly valued by the quorums.

Because of the emphasis on divine and prophetic leadership and because of well-established norms and values in decision-making procedures, public dissent on a proposed calling or policy is unusual. There are, however, mechanisms for accommodating dissent. Normally, if one or more members find the proposed action objectionable, the dissenting member or members are asked to meet with the presiding officer privately to make known the reason for the question or objection. After considering the objections, presiding officers are free to pursue whatever decision they believe to be right.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook, eds. Far West Record: Minutes of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1844. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "The Evolution of the Presiding Quorums of the LDS Church." Journal of Mormon History 1 (1974):21–38.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 269–75. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Zuckerman, Michael. Peaccable Kingdoms. New York, 1970.

ROBERT E. QUINN

COMMUNION

Communion refers to partaking of the Lord's Supper. The more common term among members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is SACRAMENT (D&C 59:9). Eucharistia is the Greek term that meant "thanksgiving" among early Christians.

Partaking of the sacrament is the central act of worship and COVENANT renewal and resembles the simple commemorative meal described in the New Testament (cf. Matt. 26:26–28; Mark 14:22–24; Luke 22:19–20; Acts 2:42, 46). Postbiblical doctrines of transubstantiation (real presence) and of a "mere sign" are absent from the LDS teachings. All members of the Church, including unbaptized children, are encouraged to partake of the bread and water as emblems in remembrance of the body and blood of Jesus Christ (see D&C 27). The communion sought is a communion of spirit as envisioned in the SACRAMENT PRAYERS (Moro. 4–5; 3 Ne. 18; D&C 20:77, 79).

[See also Sacraments.]

PAUL B. PIXTON

COMMUNITY

For Latter-day Saints, community is an essential and eternal part of life in this world and in the world to come. From the time the Church was established (1830), its teachings have placed emphasis on principles of unity, cooperation, mutual assistance, and beautification of one's surroundings. The community of believers envisioned by the Prophet Joseph SMITH continues today, based essentially on the principles he established. Changes, however, occurred as the Church moved to the Intermountain West, where Mormon towns and cities rose, and later as the Church spread to many parts of the world. As the Church has grown, the community embodied in the WARD has become a special focus of spiritual and social life among Church members, however small or isolated the congregation. Wherever Latter-day Saints find themselves, they form a community of believers based on human relationships that are expected to endure forever.

TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH AND BRIGHAM YOUNG. The advantages of village life described by Joseph Smith are an extension of life in a New England town. The Smiths brought to the frontier their New England background, emphasizing the importance of the community in providing education, mutual assistance, and political and economic organization. Joseph Smith's ideas about the imbishopric will consult with the ward council and work for consensus in that group before taking action. Following the same pattern, the stake president consults with his counselors in the stake presidency and then with the high council. The First Presidency consults in this same way on matters of general Church policy and action in regular meetings with the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles.

Unanimity is the ideal for all these decision processes because of the importance of UNITY in the Church: "If ye are not one ye are not mine" (D&C 38:27). The three presiding quorums over the whole Church are of equal authority within their own spheres (D&C 107:22–26), but their decisions are of "the same power or validity" only when made "by the unanimous voice" of the quorum (D&C 107:27). Many important decisions take shape over what seem like long periods because achieving unanimity is highly valued by the quorums.

Because of the emphasis on divine and prophetic leadership and because of well-established norms and values in decision-making procedures, public dissent on a proposed calling or policy is unusual. There are, however, mechanisms for accommodating dissent. Normally, if one or more members find the proposed action objectionable, the dissenting member or members are asked to meet with the presiding officer privately to make known the reason for the question or objection. After considering the objections, presiding officers are free to pursue whatever decision they believe to be right.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook, eds. Far West Record: Minutes of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1844. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "The Evolution of the Presiding Quorums of the LDS Church." Journal of Mormon History 1 (1974):21–38.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 269–75. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Zuckerman, Michael. Peaccable Kingdoms. New York, 1970.

ROBERT E. QUINN

COMMUNION

Communion refers to partaking of the Lord's Supper. The more common term among members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is SACRAMENT (D&C 59:9). Eucharistia is the Greek term that meant "thanksgiving" among early Christians.

Partaking of the sacrament is the central act of worship and COVENANT renewal and resembles the simple commemorative meal described in the New Testament (cf. Matt. 26:26–28; Mark 14:22–24; Luke 22:19–20; Acts 2:42, 46). Postbiblical doctrines of transubstantiation (real presence) and of a "mere sign" are absent from the LDS teachings. All members of the Church, including unbaptized children, are encouraged to partake of the bread and water as emblems in remembrance of the body and blood of Jesus Christ (see D&C 27). The communion sought is a communion of spirit as envisioned in the SACRAMENT PRAYERS (Moro. 4–5; 3 Ne. 18; D&C 20:77, 79).

[See also Sacraments.]

PAUL B. PIXTON

COMMUNITY

For Latter-day Saints, community is an essential and eternal part of life in this world and in the world to come. From the time the Church was established (1830), its teachings have placed emphasis on principles of unity, cooperation, mutual assistance, and beautification of one's surroundings. The community of believers envisioned by the Prophet Joseph SMITH continues today, based essentially on the principles he established. Changes, however, occurred as the Church moved to the Intermountain West, where Mormon towns and cities rose, and later as the Church spread to many parts of the world. As the Church has grown, the community embodied in the WARD has become a special focus of spiritual and social life among Church members, however small or isolated the congregation. Wherever Latter-day Saints find themselves, they form a community of believers based on human relationships that are expected to endure forever.

TEACHINGS OF JOSEPH SMITH AND BRIGHAM YOUNG. The advantages of village life described by Joseph Smith are an extension of life in a New England town. The Smiths brought to the frontier their New England background, emphasizing the importance of the community in providing education, mutual assistance, and political and economic organization. Joseph Smith's ideas about the importance of community life were an application of a revelation received in February 1831 on the law of CONSECRATION and STEWARDSHIP (D&C 42). This revelation encouraged the members of the Church to band together and live a communitarian life in which the wealthy would voluntarily share their surplus with the poor. These ideas about community were partially implemented in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1831. Participants soon moved to Jackson County, Missouri, to be involved with Joseph Smith's City of Zion plan, through which he envisioned many social, educational, intellectual, economic, and professional advantages to the Saints from living together in communities, each containing 15,000 to 20,000 people, rather than being scattered on farms, as was the custom on the frontier at that time (CHC 1:311–12; see also CITY PLANNING).

However, persecution drove the Saints from Missouri in 1838–1839, and some 12,000 of them fled to the NAUVOO area in Illinois. Based on a modified plan of the City of Zion, Nauvoo became a general model for community development later used by the Latter-day Saints in settling the Intermountain West.

An essential element of the organization of the communities established by the Latter-day Saints between 1830 and 1846 was the division of the larger communities into wards and STAKES, each with its own leaders. The BISHOP of each ward was a major figure in this organization. Nauvoo was eventually divided into a number of wards, each representing a geographic area of the city and the countryside beyond it. The bishop, with his counselors, was involved in supervising both the temporal and the spiritual affairs of the families within his ward's boundaries.

The guidelines left by Joseph Smith and fifteen years of experience in community building in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois provided the basis for the principles that President Brigham YOUNG followed during the migration to Utah and the establishment and development of the LDS settlements of the Intermountain West.

The first principle was based on Joseph Smith's belief that the Latter-day Saints should live in a village and commute to rural farming areas around the community.

Second, property rights of residents of LDS communities were to be held under the principle of stewardship, which suggested that the interest of the group was more important than that of the individual. This principle was later implemented by Brigham Young, who tried for thirty years to incorporate these communitarian teachings into the settlement of the Intermountain West.

Third, the duty of the Saints was to care for, and beautify, the earth (Nibley, pp. 3–29). The belief that the earth could be improved through the efforts of an industrious and dedicated community of Saints was of particular importance as the Church migrated to the arid Great Basin.

The fourth principle advocated frugality and the economic independence of the Saints.

The fifth principle emphasized the importance of unity and cooperation among Church members. Community cooperation allowed them to establish hundreds of settlements in the arid West, based on principles of faith, love, charity, kindness, service, and sharing one another's burdens.

SETTLEMENT OF THE INTERMOUNTAIN WEST. The communitarian principles established and developed during the formative years of the Church were institutionalized in the settlement of the Great Basin. One of the distinguishing characteristics of the Intermountain West is the presence of LDS communities based on these principles. Historically, these settlements ranged through southern Idaho, southwestern Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, California, Arizona, northwestern New Mexico, and southern Colorado. The role of religion was unique in their establishment.

The ward became the main base for organizing cooperation, economic development, spiritual and temporal welfare, and even the administration of justice in the new settlements. Salt Lake City, for example, was divided geographically into wards, with the bishop of each responsible for the well-being of the members within his jurisdiction. In each ward unit, believers unified their efforts in such prosaic activities as building a fence to protect the ward's newly sown crops, digging irrigation ditches to provide water for the land within the ward's boundary, caring for widows or the families of men who were absent on missions for the Church, assisting with births, burying the dead, and being involved in every other aspect of life within the ward. Disputes over water or land also were handled by the priesthood within the ward boundaries.

The importance of concerted efforts in LDS communities is still obvious to any observer of these small western towns. Many have only one ward. Thus, the Meadow Utah Ward is also the town of Meadow, Utah. The activities of the ward are the focus of the social, political, and economic life of the community, involving even the few non-Mormons who reside there. In larger cities and in places where there are fewer Latter-day Saints, the ward remains the focus of activity for believers.

Peace and Fellowship in the Kingdom, by Joseph H. Fisher (late nineteenth or early twentieth century, painted carved wood, 28" × 18"). This carving, originally created for the pulpit of a meetinghouse in the small town of Meadow, Utah, suggests the love and mutual concern necessary to unite a community of individuals from diverse backgrounds. Two doves touch beaks under a drapery canopy, two hands clasp in fellowship, and vines from two differently colored rose bushes intertwine, creating a new multi-hued flower. The word "welcome" can be made out in the vines at the bottom. Church Museum of History and Art.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY. The modern LDS community operates in basically the same manner as the earliest communities founded under the direction of Joseph Smith. The fundamental principles of cooperation, equality, beautifying the earth, frugality and independence, unity and cooperation, and stewardship of material possessions are modified only in emphasis, not in principle. The continued reliance on an unpaid leadership allows the majority of ward members to be involved in providing services for the local congregation. From the bishop to the home teachers and visiting teachers who regularly visit each LDS home, all members are invited to become actively involved with the well-being of the entire community. The ward provides not only worship services but friends, economic assistance, and a support group that can be relied upon to provide the assistance any family might need, particularly in a society in which extended family members may not be nearby to provide such assistance. In this way, for many the ward becomes a surrogate family, and the common practice of addressing fellow Saints as "Brother" and "Sister" takes on enhanced and spiritually literal meaning. One belongs in the community of Saints regardless of one's other affiliations or lack of them; one is welcome in the ward however outcast one may feel elsewhere.

The effectiveness of the individual ward varies from place to place as a function of the ability and commitment of the leaders and members. The extent of unity among ward members and their commitment to the principles of mutual assistance and concern for one another also affect the effectiveness of the individual ward; yet, in general, the wards function as an instant community for the Latter-day Saint wherever he or she may move.

Membership in the LDS community is not restricted to those who have been longtime members of the Church. The Church is actively involved in proselytizing, with nearly 50,000 missionaries throughout the world who introduce prospective members to the ward or branch community, where they are encouraged to attend and become involved. The Church organizations are the structures used to fellowship them into the community.

The ward community strives to operate on what Joseph Smith said was the basis of governance in the Church: teach the members correct principles and let them govern themselves (JD 10:57–58). While the principle of equality of resources is not now practiced as it was in the 1830s or 1870s, members of the Church still dedicate their time and talents to the welfare of the community as a whole and are encouraged to tithe and to contribute to the assistance of the poor.

LIFE IN THE MORMON COMMUNITY. The importance of the Church in the lives of its members cannot be overstated (see MEMBERSHIP). Not only are its principles and practices a part of everyday life in such matters as dress, food, personal habits, and financial and time management, but the involvement of the entire ward in helping one another also creates a strong bond among ward members. The Church emphasizes the integrity of the family and teaches that a fundamental purpose of the Church is to strengthen the family. In addition to formal and informal family religious observances, Church meetings consist (as of 1990) of a three-hour block of time on Sundays, the focus of which is an hour-long general meeting in which members of the congregation deliver talks on gospel principles and partake of the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper; following the SACRAMENT MEETING, sessions for SUNDAY SCHOOL, PRIESTHOOD, RELIEF SOCIETY, YOUNG WOMEN, and PRIMARY are held. In earlier decades various auxiliary meetings, youth activities, and ward events were held during the week, and the meetinghouse was a bustling center of ward and stake activities and classes nearly every day.

Members also have contact with one another through the HOME TEACHING and VISITING TEACHING programs, through assisting one another as needs arise, and through the other meetings and activities associated with the various Church AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS. Members of wards and stakes may participate in sports activities. The ward sponsors periodic socials, Scouting activities, and cultural events that involve the members of the community, both LDS and others. The cooperation of members of the ward in helping widows, the poor, the ill, the aged, and others with special needs provides additional opportunities for interaction. In combination, the activities and opportunities for service among members of the ward strengthen the ties of the LDS community and enhance their commitment to "love one another," as Christ commanded (John 13:34–35).

ETERNAL PERSPECTIVES. The attitudes of Latter-day Saints regarding community are influenced by the belief that human relationships are eternal. People are by nature social beings whose lives and feelings are eternally intertwined with those of others. In premortal life, all human beings were born as spirit children in the family of God and therefore became members of an eternal and divine society. In the present life, people can become members of the Church by entering into the new and everlasting covenant of baptism, which binds people together as members of the kingdom of God. The Latter-day Saint view of the kingdoms of glory yet to come anticipates immortal beings living together forever. In other words, heaven includes life with other people and with God. In the highest degree of the celestial glory, a fulness of joy is found in ETERNAL MARRIAGE and familial relationships. Indeed, the nature of GODHOOD itself and the composition of the GODHEAD as three personages eternally united in a common cause demonstrate the divine prototype for personal relationships.

Latter-day Saints have faith that all people will come forth at the day of judgment and continue at various levels thereafter. This expectation gives a permanent and sensitive dimension to friendships, companionships, and virtually all contacts with other people in local and worldwide communities, both religious and civic. The ideal of human existence looks toward the creation of a people of ZION modeled after the city of Enoch and the establishment of a perfected community, a NEW JERUSALEM, under the personal governance of Jesus Christ.

[See also Brotherhood; Sisterhood; Society; Unity.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Alder, Douglas D. "The Mormon Ward: Congregation or Community?" Journal of Mormon History 5 (1978):61–78.
- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- . Brigham Young: American Moses. New York, 1985.
- Arrington, Leonard J., et al. Building the City of God. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Embry, Jessie L., and Howard A. Christy, eds. Community Development in the American West: Past and Present, Nineteenth- and Twentieth-Century Frontiers. Provo, Utah, 1985.
- Hine, Robert V. Community on the American Frontier. Norman, Okla., 1980.
- Hunter, Milton R. Brigham Young the Colonizer. Salt Lake City, 1940.
- Jackson, Richard H., ed. The Mormon Role in the Settlement of the West. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Nibley, Hugh. "Brigham Young on the Environment." In To the Glory of God, ed. T. Madsen and C. Tate, pp. 3–29. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- O'Dea, Thomas F. The Mormons. Chicago, 1957.
- Peterson, Charles S. "A Mormon Town: One Man's West." Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):3–12.
- Poll, Richard D., et al., eds. Utah's History, rev. ed., pp. 133–52, 275–335. Logan, Utah, 1989.

RICHARD H. JACKSON

COMPASSIONATE SERVICE

The term “compassionate service” is used in the Church to refer to love-inspired assistance willingly given to meet physical, spiritual, and emotional needs. It requires a sensitivity that perceives human distress beyond spoken words (Luke 10:30–37; cf. 8:43–48), an eye that recognizes the good in people (Mosiah 4:16–18), and an understanding heart attuned to the HOLY SPIRIT to discern what is appropriate to say and do (3 Ne. 17:5–8; John 19:25–27). A call to Christlike service undergirded the Prophet Joseph SMITH’s formal charge to the Female RELIEF SOCIETY organized in 1842. Aware of the dire needs of the Saints, he said that “the object of the society [is to search] after objects of charity and [administer] to their wants” (Minutes of the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo, p. 7). A Necessity Committee of sixteen sisters was appointed “to search out the poor and suffering, to call upon the rich for aid, and thus, as far as possible, relieve the wants of all” (History of Relief Society, p. 68). Since that time, not only Relief Society members but also other Church members have been involved in formal and informal acts of compassionate service.

Present-day Relief Society visiting teachers continue to carry out Joseph Smith’s commission with regular visits to each LDS family, discerning needs and providing caring support. Ezra Taft BENSON stated, “We urge you, particularly priesthood brethren and Relief Society sisters, to be sensitive to the needs of the poor, the sick, and the needy . . . [and] see that the widows and fatherless are assisted” (p. 7). Through appropriate channels of the PRIESTHOOD and Relief Society, assistance is to be given to the poor, sick, bereaved, homeless, and members with special personal problems and burdens (Mosiah 18:8–9; D&C 52:40).

When compassionate service is clothed in the true spirit of charity—which the Book of Mormon defines as the pure love of Christ—it becomes an all-encompassing and rewarding experience for the giver as well as the receiver (1 Cor. 13:4–8; Moro. 7:6–8, 45–47).

[See also Visiting Teaching.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- A Centenary of Relief Society, 1842–1942*. Salt Lake City, 1942.
- Benson, Ezra Taft. “Council to the Saints.” Ensign 14 (May 1984):6–8.
- History of Relief Society, 1842–1966*. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Minutes of the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo, March 17, 1842, p. 7.

HULDA PARKER YOUNG

Relief Society sisters and their families provide compassionate watchcare for each other, make themselves aware of one another's needs, and give loving service to individuals and families (c. 1985).

COMPREHENSIVE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

Intended as a centennial history of the LDS Church (1830–1930), Elder B. H. Roberts’s six-volume Comprehensive History of the Church stands as a high point in the publication of Church history to that time. Most earlier works were either attacks upon or defenses of the Church. Although Roberts’s study was a kind of defense, he set a more even tone, a degree of uncommon objectivity.

Like several historians preceding him (Bancroft, Whitney, Tullidge), Roberts set out to produce a multivolume work. Originally a periodical series prepared for the Americana magazine, Roberts’s articles appeared in forty-two-page installments between July 1909 and July 1915 (CHC 1:v–vi). As the centennial year of 1930 approached, Elder George Albert Smith suggested

COMPASSIONATE SERVICE

The term “compassionate service” is used in the Church to refer to love-inspired assistance willingly given to meet physical, spiritual, and emotional needs. It requires a sensitivity that perceives human distress beyond spoken words (Luke 10:30–37; cf. 8:43–48), an eye that recognizes the good in people (Mosiah 4:16–18), and an understanding heart attuned to the HOLY SPIRIT to discern what is appropriate to say and do (3 Ne. 17:5–8; John 19:25–27). A call to Christlike service undergirded the Prophet Joseph SMITH’s formal charge to the Female RELIEF SOCIETY organized in 1842. Aware of the dire needs of the Saints, he said that “the object of the society [is to search] after objects of charity and [administer] to their wants” (Minutes of the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo, p. 7). A Necessity Committee of sixteen sisters was appointed “to search out the poor and suffering, to call upon the rich for aid, and thus, as far as possible, relieve the wants of all” (History of Relief Society, p. 68). Since that time, not only Relief Society members but also other Church members have been involved in formal and informal acts of compassionate service.

Present-day Relief Society visiting teachers continue to carry out Joseph Smith’s commission

with regular visits to each LDS family, discerning needs and providing caring support. Ezra Taft BENSON stated, “We urge you, particularly priesthood brethren and Relief Society sisters, to be sensitive to the needs of the poor, the sick, and the needy . . . [and] see that the widows and fatherless are assisted” (p. 7). Through appropriate channels of the PRIESTHOOD and Relief Society, assistance is to be given to the poor, sick, bereaved, homeless, and members with special personal problems and burdens (Mosiah 18:8–9; D&C 52:40).

When compassionate service is clothed in the true spirit of charity—which the Book of Mormon defines as the pure love of Christ—it becomes an all-encompassing and rewarding experience for the giver as well as the receiver (1 Cor. 13:4–8; Moro. 7:6–8, 45–47).

[See also Visiting Teaching.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- A Centenary of Relief Society, 1842–1942*. Salt Lake City, 1942.
- Benson, Ezra Taft. “Council to the Saints.” Ensign 14 (May 1984):6–8.
- History of Relief Society, 1842–1966*. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Minutes of the Female Relief Society of Nauvoo, March 17, 1842, p. 7.

HULDA PARKER YOUNG

Relief Society sisters and their families provide compassionate watchcare for each other, make themselves aware of one another's needs, and give loving service to individuals and families (c. 1985).

COMPREHENSIVE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

Intended as a centennial history of the LDS Church (1830–1930), Elder B. H. Roberts’s six-volume Comprehensive History of the Church stands as a high point in the publication of Church history to that time. Most earlier works were either attacks upon or defenses of the Church. Although Roberts’s study was a kind of defense, he set a more even tone, a degree of uncommon objectivity.

Like several historians preceding him (Bancroft, Whitney, Tullidge), Roberts set out to produce a multivolume work. Originally a periodical series prepared for the Americana magazine, Roberts’s articles appeared in forty-two-page installments between July 1909 and July 1915 (CHC 1:v–vi). As the centennial year of 1930 approached, Elder George Albert Smith suggested that Roberts bring his work up to date and that the Church publish it for the centennial.

Published in handsome bindings with numerous illustrations, the work was impressive. But to the reader of today its importance lies beyond its format. Roberts was pointing the way to a new approach; he wanted Church history to avoid apology and indiscriminating defense of the faith. For example, he was skeptical of including any myths parading as history: "I find my own heart strengthened in the truth by getting rid of the untruth, the spectacular, the bizarre, as soon as I learn that it is based on worthless testimony" (Madsen, p. 363). He treated the difficulties of the Saints in Missouri objectively, assigning some elements of blame to both sides.

Roberts was willing to deal with sensitive topics. His analysis of the MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE was fairly exacting. He was also willing to press his editors to get what he felt was fairness; he insisted on including Joseph Smith's KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE despite urgings to the contrary by some members. In some ways Roberts's Comprehensive History was an act of courage; certainly it was his magnum opus.

Though not trained as a historian, Roberts was well known as an orator and as a theologian. He read widely and was a vibrant politician, a noted missionary, and a popular Church leader. His theological writings continue to attract attention. All of this energy, even charisma, flows into his writing, producing rhapsodic prose that sometimes overshoots the mark. He wrote in the Romantic style, accepting Prescott and Parkman as his models.

The Comprehensive History is the high-water mark of studies produced before academic scholars undertook the writing of Church history after 1950. Roberts shows a faithfulness to documentary sources and rules of evidence. The six-volume set is a worthy monument to the Church's first century and still attracts serious attention.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bitton, Davis. "B. H. Roberts as Historian," Dialogue 4 (Winter 1968):25-44.

———, and Leonard Arrington. Mormons and Their Histories, pp. 69-86. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Madsen, Truman G. Defender of the Faith: The B.H. Roberts Story, pp. 357-66. Salt Lake City, 1980.

DOUGLAS D. ALDER

---

COMPUTER SYSTEMS

For many years The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints used mechanical punched-card systems for accounting and other administrative purposes. These were replaced by modern computers. In 1962 the Church's computer systems were expanded to help provide names for temple work. They also were applied to managing the large and rapidly expanding genealogical information base. Church computer resources now serve every level, from general Church administration to the individual member.

In Church TEMPLES, computer systems are used to record biographical information of individuals, living and dead, who have received temple ORDINANCES. Family history computer systems maintain growing catalogs of worldwide genealogical records, a lineage-linked ANCESTRAL FILE, and an index of completed ordinances and other lists to help interested persons pursue family history work.

Computers also aid in the administration of various Church programs, including the international MISSIONARY program, where computers are used to track all missionaries and route individual requests for missionary visits. FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS are recorded on computers by clerks at the WARD level, making possible regular reports to contributors and to the Church. All central budgeting and financial transactions are managed by computer. The Church maintains detailed membership records which are created on computers in the wards and are regularly updated and forwarded to central computers at Church headquarters or region/area offices (see RECORD KEEPING).

The Church uses computers to prepare, print, and distribute a wide range of materials through its DISTRIBUTION CENTERS in various parts of the world. SCRIPTURES, lesson manuals, handbooks, forms, and Church MAGAZINES are prepared with the use of computers. These materials are printed in as many as eighty-one languages, and computers are used extensively in the translation process.

PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS uses computers to monitor public response to Church media. Computer systems also manage information in areas such as Church welfare, historical records, physical facilities, magazine subscriptions, and purchasing. The SEMINARIES and INSTITUTES track potential and enrolled students throughout the world by computer.

that Roberts bring his work up to date and that the Church publish it for the centennial.

Published in handsome bindings with numerous illustrations, the work was impressive. But to the reader of today its importance lies beyond its format. Roberts was pointing the way to a new approach; he wanted Church history to avoid apology and indiscriminating defense of the faith. For example, he was skeptical of including any myths parading as history: "I find my own heart strengthened in the truth by getting rid of the untruth, the spectacular, the bizarre, as soon as I learn that it is based on worthless testimony" (Madsen, p. 363). He treated the difficulties of the Saints in Missouri objectively, assigning some elements of blame to both sides.

Roberts was willing to deal with sensitive topics. His analysis of the MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE was fairly exacting. He was also willing to press his editors to get what he felt was fairness; he insisted on including Joseph Smith's KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE despite urgings to the contrary by some members. In some ways Roberts's Comprehensive History was an act of courage; certainly it was his magnum opus.

Though not trained as a historian, Roberts was well known as an orator and as a theologian. He read widely and was a vibrant politician, a noted missionary, and a popular Church leader. His theological writings continue to attract attention. All of this energy, even charisma, flows into his writing, producing rhapsodic prose that sometimes overshoots the mark. He wrote in the Romantic style, accepting Prescott and Parkman as his models.

The Comprehensive History is the high-water mark of studies produced before academic scholars undertook the writing of Church history after 1950. Roberts shows a faithfulness to documentary sources and rules of evidence. The six-volume set is a worthy monument to the Church's first century and still attracts serious attention.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bitton, Davis. "B. H. Roberts as Historian," Dialogue 4 (Winter 1968):25-44.

———, and Leonard Arrington. Mormons and Their Histories, pp. 69-86. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Madsen, Truman G. Defender of the Faith: The B.H. Roberts Story, pp. 357-66. Salt Lake City, 1980.

DOUGLAS D. ALDER

---

COMPUTER SYSTEMS

For many years The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints used mechanical punched-card systems for accounting and other administrative purposes. These were replaced by modern computers. In 1962 the Church's computer systems were expanded to help provide names for temple work. They also were applied to managing the large and rapidly expanding genealogical information base. Church computer resources now serve every level, from general Church administration to the individual member.

In Church TEMPLES, computer systems are used to record biographical information of individuals, living and dead, who have received temple ORDINANCES. Family history computer systems maintain growing catalogs of worldwide genealogical records, a lineage-linked ANCESTRAL FILE, and an index of completed ordinances and other lists to help interested persons pursue family history work.

Computers also aid in the administration of various Church programs, including the international MISSIONARY program, where computers are used to track all missionaries and route individual requests for missionary visits. FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS are recorded on computers by clerks at the WARD level, making possible regular reports to contributors and to the Church. All central budgeting and financial transactions are managed by computer. The Church maintains detailed membership records which are created on computers in the wards and are regularly updated and forwarded to central computers at Church headquarters or region/area offices (see RECORD KEEPING).

The Church uses computers to prepare, print, and distribute a wide range of materials through its DISTRIBUTION CENTERS in various parts of the world. SCRIPTURES, lesson manuals, handbooks, forms, and Church MAGAZINES are prepared with the use of computers. These materials are printed in as many as eighty-one languages, and computers are used extensively in the translation process.

PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS uses computers to monitor public response to Church media. Computer systems also manage information in areas such as Church welfare, historical records, physical facilities, magazine subscriptions, and purchasing. The SEMINARIES and INSTITUTES track potential and enrolled students throughout the world by computer.

Large numbers of Latter-day Saints use personal computers in their homes to facilitate religious activities. Many use disk versions of the scriptures to enhance individual scripture research and study. Personal genealogical research has moved to a personal computer format that will allow exchanges of information with the large genealogical data bases in Salt Lake City.

DARWIN A. JOHN

CONDESCENSION OF GOD

The Book of Mormon prophet Nephi<sup>1</sup> (c. 600 B.C.) was asked by an angel, "Knowest thou the condescension of God?" (1 Ne. 11:16). Nephi was then shown in a vision a virgin who was to become "the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh" (verse 18). He next beheld the virgin with a child whom the angel identified as "the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father" (11:21). Then Nephi understood that the condescension of God is the ultimate manifestation of God's love through Jesus Christ (11:20–22). Such condescension denotes, first, the love of GOD THE FATHER, who deigned to sire a son, born of a mortal woman, and then allow this Son to suffer temptations and pain (Mosiah 3:5–7), "be judged of the world," and be "slain for the sins of the world" (1 Ne. 11:32–33). Second, it signifies the love and willingness of God the Son (Jesus Christ) to die for mankind.

The word "condescension" implies "voluntary descent," "submission," and "performing acts which strict justice does not require." This definition is particularly applicable to Jesus in the portrayal of him by prophets who lived before his birth and who affirmed: "God himself shall come down" to make an atonement (Mosiah 15:1); "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, yieldeth himself . . . into the hands of wicked men" (1 Ne. 19:10); "the great Creator . . . suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh" (2 Ne. 9:5); and "he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin" (2 Ne. 2:7). "The Lord Omnipotent," said King Benjamin, "shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay" (Mosiah 3:5).

In fulfillment of these prophecies, Jesus descended from the realms of glory for the purposes of experiencing mortal infirmities that he might have mercy and compassion according to the flesh and of taking upon himself the sins, transgressions, pains, and sicknesses of men in order to satisfy the demands of justice and gain victory over death, thereby redeeming his people (Mosiah 15:8–9; Alma 7:11–13). Christ's selfless sacrifice merits profound gratitude and endearing love from all who are recipients of his supernal offering.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bruce R. McConkie. "Behold the Condescension of God." New Era 14 (Dec. 1984):34–39.

BYRON R. MERRILL

CONFERENCE REPORTS

Since 1899, the Church has published official reports of its annual (April) and semiannual (October) General Conferences, commonly called Conference Reports. These reports are distributed in booklet form only to Church leaders (bishoprics and higher), Church employees, and libraries, but because other members of the Church wanted to study the conference addresses, the IMPROVEMENT ERA began in 1942 to devote two issues a year to conference reports. The Ensign has followed that pattern since replacing the Era in 1971. Those issues have made reports of conference addresses available to the world by subscription or single issue bookstore or newsstand purchase. The talks as printed in the Conference Report volumes (see below) and in the Church magazines have mostly been identical. Those publications are significant resources for the study of the theology, progress, and development of the Church.

When the Church first began holding conferences, many attending the meetings recorded in their private journals what was said and done. These personal records now constitute the primary sources available on the various conference addresses in the early years because no official Church publication printed much more than a list of conference events. It appears that the first full report of any Church conference address was published in the Deseret News in 1850, even though several partial reports were published in Times and Seasons from November 1839 to February 1846, in Nauvoo. The Deseret News was able to print word-for-word transcriptions because a young reporter, George D. Watt, had learned

Large numbers of Latter-day Saints use personal computers in their homes to facilitate religious activities. Many use disk versions of the scriptures to enhance individual scripture research and study. Personal genealogical research has moved to a personal computer format that will allow exchanges of information with the large genealogical data bases in Salt Lake City.

DARWIN A. JOHN

CONDESCENSION OF GOD

The Book of Mormon prophet Nephi<sup>1</sup> (c. 600 B.C.) was asked by an angel, "Knowest thou the condescension of God?" (1 Ne. 11:16). Nephi was then shown in a vision a virgin who was to become "the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh" (verse 18). He next beheld the virgin with a child whom the angel identified as "the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father" (11:21). Then Nephi understood that the condescension of God is the ultimate manifestation of God's love through Jesus Christ (11:20–22). Such condescension denotes, first, the love of GOD THE FATHER, who deigned to sire a son, born of a mortal woman, and then allow this Son to suffer temptations and pain (Mosiah 3:5–7), "be judged of the world," and be "slain for the sins of the world" (1 Ne. 11:32–33). Second, it signifies the love and willingness of God the Son (Jesus Christ) to die for mankind.

The word "condescension" implies "voluntary descent," "submission," and "performing acts which strict justice does not require." This definition is particularly applicable to Jesus in the portrayal of him by prophets who lived before his birth and who affirmed: "God himself shall come down" to make an atonement (Mosiah 15:1); "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, yieldeth himself . . . into the hands of wicked men" (1 Ne. 19:10); "the great Creator . . . suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh" (2 Ne. 9:5); and "he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin" (2 Ne. 2:7). "The Lord Omnipotent," said King Benjamin, "shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay" (Mosiah 3:5).

In fulfillment of these prophecies, Jesus descended from the realms of glory for the purposes of experiencing mortal infirmities that he might have mercy and compassion according to the flesh and of taking upon himself the sins, transgressions, pains, and sicknesses of men in order to satisfy the demands of justice and gain victory over death, thereby redeeming his people (Mosiah 15:8–9; Alma 7:11–13). Christ's selfless sacrifice merits profound gratitude and endearing love from all who are recipients of his supernal offering.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bruce R. McConkie. "Behold the Condescension of God." New Era 14 (Dec. 1984):34–39.

BYRON R. MERRILL

CONFERENCE REPORTS

Since 1899, the Church has published official reports of its annual (April) and semiannual (October) General Conferences, commonly called Conference Reports. These reports are distributed in booklet form only to Church leaders (bishoprics and higher), Church employees, and libraries, but because other members of the Church wanted to study the conference addresses, the IMPROVEMENT ERA began in 1942 to devote two issues a year to conference reports. The Ensign has followed that pattern since replacing the Era in 1971. Those issues have made reports of conference addresses available to the world by subscription or single issue bookstore or newsstand purchase. The talks as printed in the Conference Report volumes (see below) and in the Church magazines have mostly been identical. Those publications are significant resources for the study of the theology, progress, and development of the Church.

When the Church first began holding conferences, many attending the meetings recorded in their private journals what was said and done. These personal records now constitute the primary sources available on the various conference addresses in the early years because no official Church publication printed much more than a list of conference events. It appears that the first full report of any Church conference address was published in the Deseret News in 1850, even though several partial reports were published in Times and Seasons from November 1839 to February 1846, in Nauvoo. The Deseret News was able to print word-for-word transcriptions because a young reporter, George D. Watt, had learned

Large numbers of Latter-day Saints use personal computers in their homes to facilitate religious activities. Many use disk versions of the scriptures to enhance individual scripture research and study. Personal genealogical research has moved to a personal computer format that will allow exchanges of information with the large genealogical data bases in Salt Lake City.

DARWIN A. JOHN

CONDESCENSION OF GOD

The Book of Mormon prophet Nephi<sup>1</sup> (c. 600 B.C.) was asked by an angel, "Knowest thou the condescension of God?" (1 Ne. 11:16). Nephi was then shown in a vision a virgin who was to become "the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh" (verse 18). He next beheld the virgin with a child whom the angel identified as "the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father" (11:21). Then Nephi understood that the condescension of God is the ultimate manifestation of God's love through Jesus Christ (11:20–22). Such condescension denotes, first, the love of GOD THE FATHER, who deigned to sire a son, born of a mortal woman, and then allow this Son to suffer temptations and pain (Mosiah 3:5–7), "be judged of the world," and be "slain for the sins of the world" (1 Ne. 11:32–33). Second, it signifies the love and willingness of God the Son (Jesus Christ) to die for mankind.

The word "condescension" implies "voluntary descent," "submission," and "performing acts which strict justice does not require." This definition is particularly applicable to Jesus in the portrayal of him by prophets who lived before his birth and who affirmed: "God himself shall come down" to make an atonement (Mosiah 15:1); "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, yieldeth himself . . . into the hands of wicked men" (1 Ne. 19:10); "the great Creator . . . suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh" (2 Ne. 9:5); and "he offereth himself a sacrifice for sin" (2 Ne. 2:7). "The Lord Omnipotent," said King Benjamin, "shall come down from heaven among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay" (Mosiah 3:5).

In fulfillment of these prophecies, Jesus descended from the realms of glory for the purposes of experiencing mortal infirmities that he might have mercy and compassion according to the flesh and of taking upon himself the sins, transgressions, pains, and sicknesses of men in order to satisfy the demands of justice and gain victory over death, thereby redeeming his people (Mosiah 15:8–9; Alma 7:11–13). Christ's selfless sacrifice merits profound gratitude and endearing love from all who are recipients of his supernal offering.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bruce R. McConkie. "Behold the Condescension of God." New Era 14 (Dec. 1984):34–39.

BYRON R. MERRILL

CONFERENCE REPORTS

Since 1899, the Church has published official reports of its annual (April) and semiannual (October) General Conferences, commonly called Conference Reports. These reports are distributed in booklet form only to Church leaders (bishoprics and higher), Church employees, and libraries, but because other members of the Church wanted to study the conference addresses, the IMPROVEMENT ERA began in 1942 to devote two issues a year to conference reports. The Ensign has followed that pattern since replacing the Era in 1971. Those issues have made reports of conference addresses available to the world by subscription or single issue bookstore or newsstand purchase. The talks as printed in the Conference Report volumes (see below) and in the Church magazines have mostly been identical. Those publications are significant resources for the study of the theology, progress, and development of the Church.

When the Church first began holding conferences, many attending the meetings recorded in their private journals what was said and done. These personal records now constitute the primary sources available on the various conference addresses in the early years because no official Church publication printed much more than a list of conference events. It appears that the first full report of any Church conference address was published in the Deseret News in 1850, even though several partial reports were published in Times and Seasons from November 1839 to February 1846, in Nauvoo. The Deseret News was able to print word-for-word transcriptions because a young reporter, George D. Watt, had learned shorthand and transcribed the talks for publication. Watt and others thereafter transcribed a great many conference addresses and other talks for publication in the Deseret News and also in the Journal of Discourses (Liverpool and London, 1854–1886).

The conference report for the Church's fiftieth jubilee year (1880) was the first to be published as a separate booklet (110 pages) exclusively of general conference addresses. The next volume in that series contained the talks given at the October 1897 Semiannual General Conference (78 pages). Since 1899, the Church has published a Conference Report volume for each general conference.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

---

CONFERENCES

[This entry is composed of three articles:

- Conferences
- General Conference
- Stake Conference

The first article explains the doctrinal concepts of holding conferences and the various types of conferences held by members of the Church. The second article focuses on the history of holding general conferences. The third article gives the background of holding stake conferences and their usual format.]

CONFERENCES

Latter-day Saints are counseled, as were the New Testament saints, to “meet together oft.” Conferences are among the most frequent types of meeting. Because The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is administered by a constantly changing core of lay leaders, teachers, and officers, there is perpetual need for instruction, inspiration, and renewal. The scriptures state: “And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church, how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given” (D&C 43:8). The word “edify” means to enlighten, lift, or elevate spiritually. By “union of feeling,” the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught the sisters of the RELIEF SOCIETY, “we obtain power with the heavens.” Conferences contribute to building that union. In practice, Latter-day Saints often say to each other, “If you cannot come to receive, come to give.” In conferences, as in other types of Church meetings, the “strong in the Spirit” may “take with him him that is weak” (D&C 84:106).

There are only general guidelines for conferences. For “it always has been given to the elders of my church from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they are directed and guided by the Holy Spirit” (D&C 46:2).

Specific objectives, scheduling, and activities of conferences vary according to the group being served and may vary from one conference to another of the same group. WARD conferences are held annually to bring the STAKE leaders, ward leaders, and ward members together in local congregations to “review the status of individuals and organizations and to plan for improvement” (General Handbook of Instructions 2-4). Stake conferences are held twice annually, and are administered by stake, regional, and GENERAL AUTHORITIES. YOUTH, young adult, and singles conferences are held annually; typically these conferences focus on inspirational experiences and social interchange. Women’s conferences and Church women’s FIRESIDES are also held each year.

The growth of the Church has led to area and regional conferences, which may involve thousands of participants in designated geographic areas. These conferences are planned, organized, conducted, and addressed by General Authorities.

Two general conferences are held each year, one in April (designated the “annual” conference) and the other in October (designated as a “semiannual” conference). These are the most far-reaching conferences of the Church and for many years have been held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle. They provide opportunities to share the common bonds of fellowship in an environment charged with spirituality and in a setting different from the local meeting places of the Church. Prayers, music, addresses by General Authorities and others, shared expressions of faith, meeting new acquaintances, and renewal of self and commitments combine to enrich the lives of all who attend or who experience the conferences on radio or television.

The Savior petitioned: “I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil” (John 17:15). Conferences of the Church serve an import-shorthand and transcribed the talks for publication. Watt and others thereafter transcribed a great many conference addresses and other talks for publication in the Deseret News and also in the Journal of Discourses (Liverpool and London, 1854–1886).

The conference report for the Church's fiftieth jubilee year (1880) was the first to be published as a separate booklet (110 pages) exclusively of general conference addresses. The next volume in that series contained the talks given at the October 1897 Semiannual General Conference (78 pages). Since 1899, the Church has published a Conference Report volume for each general conference.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

---

CONFERENCES

[This entry is composed of three articles:

Conferences

General Conference

Stake Conference

The first article explains the doctrinal concepts of holding conferences and the various types of conferences held by members of the Church. The second article focuses on the history of holding general conferences. The third article gives the background of holding stake conferences and their usual format.]

CONFERENCES

Latter-day Saints are counseled, as were the New Testament saints, to “meet together oft.” Conferences are among the most frequent types of meeting. Because The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is administered by a constantly changing core of lay leaders, teachers, and officers, there is perpetual need for instruction, inspiration, and renewal. The scriptures state: “And now, behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together ye shall instruct and edify each other, that ye may know how to act and direct my church, how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given” (D&C 43:8). The word “edify” means to enlighten, lift, or elevate spiritually. By “union of feeling,” the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught the sisters of the RELIEF SOCIETY, “we obtain power with the heavens.” Conferences contribute to building that union. In practice, Latter-day Saints often say to each other, “If you cannot come to receive, come to give.” In conferences, as in other types of Church meetings, the “strong in the Spirit” may “take with him him that is weak” (D&C 84:106).

There are only general guidelines for conferences. For “it always has been given to the elders of my church from the beginning, and ever shall be, to conduct all meetings as they are directed and guided by the Holy Spirit” (D&C 46:2).

Specific objectives, scheduling, and activities of conferences vary according to the group being served and may vary from one conference to another of the same group. WARD conferences are held annually to bring the STAKE leaders, ward leaders, and ward members together in local congregations to “review the status of individuals and organizations and to plan for improvement” (General Handbook of Instructions 2-4). Stake conferences are held twice annually, and are administered by stake, regional, and GENERAL AUTHORITIES. YOUTH, young adult, and singles conferences are held annually; typically these conferences focus on inspirational experiences and social interchange. Women’s conferences and Church women’s FIRESIDES are also held each year.

The growth of the Church has led to area and regional conferences, which may involve thousands of participants in designated geographic areas. These conferences are planned, organized, conducted, and addressed by General Authorities.

Two general conferences are held each year, one in April (designated the “annual” conference) and the other in October (designated as a “semiannual” conference). These are the most far-reaching conferences of the Church and for many years have been held in the Salt Lake Tabernacle. They provide opportunities to share the common bonds of fellowship in an environment charged with spirituality and in a setting different from the local meeting places of the Church. Prayers, music, addresses by General Authorities and others, shared expressions of faith, meeting new acquaintances, and renewal of self and commitments combine to enrich the lives of all who attend or who experience the conferences on radio or television.

The Savior petitioned: “I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil” (John 17:15). Conferences of the Church serve an important purpose in aiding the members to be shielded from the evils of worldly influence and nurtured in discipleship.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General Handbook of Instructions. Salt Lake City, 1989.

WILLIAM ROLFE KERR

GENERAL CONFERENCE

About two months after being organized on April 6, 1830, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints held its first general conference at the Peter Whitmer home in Fayette, Seneca County, New York. At that June 9 meeting about thirty members were in attendance and other people who were anxious to learn. This commenced a vital and enduring tradition (see CELEBRATIONS). Each April and October, members of the Church throughout the world assemble in Salt Lake City, Utah, for two days of meetings called general conference. For more than a century these meetings have been held in the 7,500-seat Salt Lake TABERNACLE located on TEMPLE SQUARE. Temple Square is virtually inseparable from the tradition of general conference and has been the site of nearly every one of them.

The April conferences of the Church are called annual conferences; those in October, semi-annual conferences. Current practice includes four two-hour general sessions on Saturday and Sunday, with a special priesthood session Saturday night carried by satellite to thousands of priesthood bearers throughout the world. Prior to 1977, the conferences met for three days.

Through the years general conference has accommodated the needs of the Church in a variety of ways. In 1954 David O. MCKAY, President of the Church from 1951 to 1970, listed the following twentieth-century objectives:

- (1) to inform the membership of general conditions of the Church—including whether it is progressing or retrogressing, and of its economic, ecclesiastical, and spiritual status; (2) to commend true merit; (3) to express gratitude for divine guidance; (4) to give instruction in principles, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel; (5) to proclaim the restoration, with divine authority to administer in all the ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and to declare, quoting the Apostle Peter, that there is none other name under heaven given among men than Jesus Christ whereby we may be saved (Acts 4:12); (6) to admonish and inspire to continue in greater activity [IE (Dec. 1954), p. 872].

From a historical perspective, the conferences from 1830 to 1837 were called as needed by the Prophet Joseph SMITH, the first President of the Church. Those attending early conferences conducted the Church's business, heard announcements of new REVELATIONS, and exercised the principle of COMMON CONSENT in approving leaders and doctrine.

From 1838 to 1844 the concept of a regular general conference for the Church was set firmly in place and the precedents were established for the annual and semiannual conferences in April and October. Although the business of the Church was still transacted, emphasis was placed on expounding and teaching the doctrines of the Church. A significant body of doctrine was reviewed and revealed during this period.

One researcher has identified six major issues addressed in the conferences prior to 1845 that demonstrate flexibility and sensitivity to timely issues: (1) emergence and development of common consent; (2) initial experiment with a Zion concept and its temporary suspension; (3) teaching and expounding the doctrines of the Church, including new revelations; (4) institutionalizing of the conference system itself; (5) development of a temple-oriented worship, including COVENANTS and principles associated with the preparing of a people worthy to inherit Zion; and (6) exodus of the Church from organized society into the wilderness (Lowe, p. 398).

Clashes with tradition, tensions with neighbors of other faiths, and preparations for the westward movement all imposed adaptation on the general conferences of the Church just prior to the exodus to the Great Basin in 1847.

Conferences continued during the exodus and into the permanent settlement in Utah, although there was no general conference in October 1846, which occurred during the transition period after the Latter-day Saints had been driven from Nauvoo, Illinois, and before the first company of settlers arrived in the Salt Lake Valley in July 1847.

The conferences from 1848 to 1877 considered pressing needs such as emigration from the east and foreign countries, colonization, and missionary work. Assignments to colonize and calls to serve missions were frequently announced from the conference pulpit without prior notice. Leonard J. Arrington has characterized these conferences as "the cement which held together the Mormon Commonwealth. . . . It was through the instrumentality of the conference that church leaders were able to effect the central planning and direction of the manifold temporal and spiritual interests of their followers. It was in the conference that Latter-day Saints experienced most keenly the sense of belonging to a whole—a worshipping, building, expanding Kingdom" (p. 32).

The last two decades of the nineteenth century were troubled times for the Church because federal legislation against PLURAL MARRIAGE brought a financial and societal crisis. General conferences reflected those concerns. From 1885 to 1887, five conferences were held outside of Salt Lake City, and many of the GENERAL AUTHORITIES were in exile.

In the twentieth century because of technology and the Church's improving image, conference sessions began reaching beyond the Tabernacle and to peoples other than Latter-day Saints. In October 1924, KSL RADIO began broadcasting conferences. Coverage was extended in 1938 to other radio stations that wished to carry all or part of the sessions. In 1949 the conference was televised by KSL Television. Satellite transmission to interested television stations and cable systems in other parts of the United States was initiated in 1975, and in 1980 the conference sessions were first carried by satellite to Church centers outside of Utah. More than 2,600 Church satellite dishes in North America now receive general conference twice each year (see SATELLITE COMMUNICATION SYSTEM).

Conference sessions were first translated simultaneously into other languages in 1962, and by 1990 they were being translated into twenty-nine languages. Conferences can now be heard in multiple languages on Temple Square. As a result of the worldwide broadcasting and translation of conferences, the sessions are more structured and planned than they were in earlier years. Most of the speakers are presiding authorities of the Church, although on occasion other men and women are asked to participate.

General conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints continues today as a vital doctrinal and social institution. It touches the lives of hundreds of thousands of Latter-day Saints worldwide. The conference sermons are printed in the Church magazines and are recorded on video tapes.

[See also Celebrations.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- Godfrey, Kenneth W. "150 Years of General Conference." Ensign 11 (Feb. 1981):66.
- Lowe, Jay R. "A Study of the General Conferences of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1901." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1972.
- McKay, David O. "Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God." IE (Dec. 1954):872–74.

M. DALLAS BURNETT

STAKE CONFERENCE

In the revelation on Church organization and government received by the Prophet Joseph Smith in April 1830, Church members were instructed to "meet in conference once in three months, or from time to time as said conferences shall direct or appoint; and said conferences are to do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time" (D&C 20:61–62).

Once STAKES were organized, the Saints began meeting in stake conferences every three months. The practice of quarterly stake conferences continued from the mid-1800s until 1979, when the frequency was reduced to two per year. GENERAL AUTHORITIES of the Church presided at most stake conferences until the mid-1980s, when the growth in Church membership and the number of stakes made it impossible for an authority to attend each conference. In 1986, General Authorities were assigned to preside at one of the stake conferences, and the STAKE PRESIDENT was authorized to preside at the other. In 1990 General Authorities were assigned to visit each stake for a conference only once every other year.

Stake conferences bring together members and friends who reside within the geographical boundaries of a stake. At least four sessions are held during a two-day period: (1) the first meeting is with the stake presidency and the visiting authorities, if any, to review the activity and progress of the stake during the last six months; (2) a priesthood leadership meeting to train stake and WARD priesthood leaders in Church doctrine and principles; (3) a general assembly of all adults (eighteen years of age and over) where the presiding authority and invited stake members speak; and (4) a Sabbath general session for all stake members, including children and interested friends of the Church. The Sabbath general session features congregational hymns, specially arranged choir selections, stake business, and sermons from the presiding authority, stake leaders, and other invited speakers.

The major purposes of stake conference are: (1) sustaining general and stake officers; (2) releasing stake officers; and (3) approving ordinations to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, and also enhancing the faith and testimony of the members through leadership training, music, sermons, and the fellowship of the Saints. The meetings are often considered a spiritual feast. The General Authority and stake leaders are well versed in the scriptures, are excellent teachers, and present strong witness to the divinity of Jesus Christ.

MERRILL J. BATEMAN

---

CONFESSION OF SINS

Confession of sins is a necessary beginning step in the process of repenting and gaining forgiveness. It is a test of true repentance: "By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them" (D&C 58:43).

The need for repentance has existed from the time of ADAM. The Lord instructed Adam: "Wherefore teach it unto your children, that all men, everywhere, must repent, or they can in nowise inherit the Kingdom of God, for no unclean thing can dwell there, or dwell in his presence" (Moses 6:57). The Bible states that "if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 Jn. 1:8). There are two categories of sin, those of commission and those of omission: "All unrighteousness is sin" (1 Jn. 5:17), and "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin" (James 4:17). Except for Jesus Christ, everyone who has lived past early childhood has sinned (1 Jn. 3:5; 2 Cor. 5:21).

At least three confessions may need to be made to help the sinner repent: To the Lord, to proper ecclesiastical officers, and to the injured party. Latter-day Saint doctrine holds that all must confess their sins to the Lord, from whom alone ultimate forgiveness can come. In addition, major sins (such as adultery, fornication, robbery, embezzlement, fraud, false swearing, and comparable transgressions), which may have a bearing upon Church membership, must be confessed to ecclesiastical officers such as BISHOPS. Church officers are counseled to respond to confessions with confidentiality and understanding, and also to encourage members to seek the Lord's forgiveness, forsake transgression, and make restitution. Transgressors are taught to make proper reconciliation with and restitution to those they have injured. Effective confession requires a "broken heart and contrite spirit" (D&C 59:8) and a willingness to humble oneself and do all that is required for complete forgiveness.

Transgressions of lesser gravity that have offended others, such as marital or social differences, minor outbursts of anger, petty disagreements, and the like, are to be confessed to the injured party often resolving the matter without involving ecclesiastical authority. Public confession is not required unless the transgression has been against the public (D&C 42:88–93).

The Church has no set time or stated formula as to when confession takes place. Periodic interviews with ecclesiastical officers may be suitable occasions, or a special appointment can be made.

Confession helps lift the burden and leads toward peace, freedom, and happiness. After warning his hearers of excruciating pain and punishments that follow unrepented sins, the Lord said: "Confess your sins, lest you suffer these punishments" (D&C 19:20). Repentant persons find substantial psychological as well as spiritual strength in proper confession.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 177–89. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DONG SULL CHOI

---

CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS

Latter-day Saints have developed a long tradition of keeping detailed records about Church activities and their own lives (see RECORD KEEPING). As is true for the working files of most private institutions, the current records of the Church are not generally available to outside researchers. Undeterred public access to everyday work files would years of age and over) where the presiding authority and invited stake members speak; and (4) a Sabbath general session for all stake members, including children and interested friends of the Church. The Sabbath general session features congregational hymns, specially arranged choir selections, stake business, and sermons from the presiding authority, stake leaders, and other invited speakers.

The major purposes of stake conference are: (1) sustaining general and stake officers; (2) releasing stake officers; and (3) approving ordinations to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, and also enhancing the faith and testimony of the members through leadership training, music, sermons, and the fellowship of the Saints. The meetings are often considered a spiritual feast. The General Authority and stake leaders are well versed in the scriptures, are excellent teachers, and present strong witness to the divinity of Jesus Christ.

MERRILL J. BATEMAN

---

CONFESSION OF SINS

Confession of sins is a necessary beginning step in the process of repenting and gaining forgiveness. It is a test of true repentance: "By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them" (D&C 58:43).

The need for repentance has existed from the time of ADAM. The Lord instructed Adam: "Wherefore teach it unto your children, that all men, everywhere, must repent, or they can in nowise inherit the Kingdom of God, for no unclean thing can dwell there, or dwell in his presence" (Moses 6:57). The Bible states that "if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 Jn. 1:8). There are two categories of sin, those of commission and those of omission: "All unrighteousness is sin" (1 Jn. 5:17), and "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin" (James 4:17). Except for Jesus Christ, everyone who has lived past early childhood has sinned (1 Jn. 3:5; 2 Cor. 5:21).

At least three confessions may need to be made to help the sinner repent: To the Lord, to proper ecclesiastical officers, and to the injured party. Latter-day Saint doctrine holds that all must confess their sins to the Lord, from whom alone ultimate forgiveness can come. In addition, major sins (such as adultery, fornication, robbery, embezzlement, fraud, false swearing, and comparable transgressions), which may have a bearing upon Church membership, must be confessed to ecclesiastical officers such as BISHOPS. Church officers are counseled to respond to confessions with confidentiality and understanding, and also to encourage members to seek the Lord's forgiveness, forsake transgression, and make restitution. Transgressors are taught to make proper reconciliation with and restitution to those they have injured. Effective confession requires a "broken heart and contrite spirit" (D&C 59:8) and a willingness to humble oneself and do all that is required for complete forgiveness.

Transgressions of lesser gravity that have offended others, such as marital or social differences, minor outbursts of anger, petty disagreements, and the like, are to be confessed to the injured party often resolving the matter without involving ecclesiastical authority. Public confession is not required unless the transgression has been against the public (D&C 42:88–93).

The Church has no set time or stated formula as to when confession takes place. Periodic interviews with ecclesiastical officers may be suitable occasions, or a special appointment can be made.

Confession helps lift the burden and leads toward peace, freedom, and happiness. After warning his hearers of excruciating pain and punishments that follow unrepented sins, the Lord said: "Confess your sins, lest you suffer these punishments" (D&C 19:20). Repentant persons find substantial psychological as well as spiritual strength in proper confession.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 177–89. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DONG SULL CHOI

---

CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS

Latter-day Saints have developed a long tradition of keeping detailed records about Church activities and their own lives (see RECORD KEEPING). As is true for the working files of most private institutions, the current records of the Church are not generally available to outside researchers. Undeterred public access to everyday work files would years of age and over) where the presiding authority and invited stake members speak; and (4) a Sabbath general session for all stake members, including children and interested friends of the Church. The Sabbath general session features congregational hymns, specially arranged choir selections, stake business, and sermons from the presiding authority, stake leaders, and other invited speakers.

The major purposes of stake conference are: (1) sustaining general and stake officers; (2) releasing stake officers; and (3) approving ordinations to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, and also enhancing the faith and testimony of the members through leadership training, music, sermons, and the fellowship of the Saints. The meetings are often considered a spiritual feast. The General Authority and stake leaders are well versed in the scriptures, are excellent teachers, and present strong witness to the divinity of Jesus Christ.

MERRILL J. BATEMAN

---

CONFESSION OF SINS

Confession of sins is a necessary beginning step in the process of repenting and gaining forgiveness. It is a test of true repentance: "By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them" (D&C 58:43).

The need for repentance has existed from the time of ADAM. The Lord instructed Adam: "Wherefore teach it unto your children, that all men, everywhere, must repent, or they can in nowise inherit the Kingdom of God, for no unclean thing can dwell there, or dwell in his presence" (Moses 6:57). The Bible states that "if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 Jn. 1:8). There are two categories of sin, those of commission and those of omission: "All unrighteousness is sin" (1 Jn. 5:17), and "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin" (James 4:17). Except for Jesus Christ, everyone who has lived past early childhood has sinned (1 Jn. 3:5; 2 Cor. 5:21).

At least three confessions may need to be made to help the sinner repent: To the Lord, to proper ecclesiastical officers, and to the injured party. Latter-day Saint doctrine holds that all must confess their sins to the Lord, from whom alone ultimate forgiveness can come. In addition, major sins (such as adultery, fornication, robbery, embezzlement, fraud, false swearing, and comparable transgressions), which may have a bearing upon Church membership, must be confessed to ecclesiastical officers such as BISHOPS. Church officers are counseled to respond to confessions with confidentiality and understanding, and also to encourage members to seek the Lord's forgiveness, forsake transgression, and make restitution. Transgressors are taught to make proper reconciliation with and restitution to those they have injured. Effective confession requires a "broken heart and contrite spirit" (D&C 59:8) and a willingness to humble oneself and do all that is required for complete forgiveness.

Transgressions of lesser gravity that have offended others, such as marital or social differences, minor outbursts of anger, petty disagreements, and the like, are to be confessed to the injured party often resolving the matter without involving ecclesiastical authority. Public confession is not required unless the transgression has been against the public (D&C 42:88–93).

The Church has no set time or stated formula as to when confession takes place. Periodic interviews with ecclesiastical officers may be suitable occasions, or a special appointment can be made.

Confession helps lift the burden and leads toward peace, freedom, and happiness. After warning his hearers of excruciating pain and punishments that follow unrepented sins, the Lord said: "Confess your sins, lest you suffer these punishments" (D&C 19:20). Repentant persons find substantial psychological as well as spiritual strength in proper confession.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 177–89. Salt Lake City, 1989.

DONG SULL CHOI

---

CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS

Latter-day Saints have developed a long tradition of keeping detailed records about Church activities and their own lives (see RECORD KEEPING). As is true for the working files of most private institutions, the current records of the Church are not generally available to outside researchers. Undeterred public access to everyday work files would disrupt the organization's work flow and impinge on the privacy of individual Church members. The current membership records of the Church maintained by the Finance and Records Department are kept confidential, as are records of voluntary FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS. The Missionary Department keeps the applications it receives from prospective missionaries confidential because they contain private information about the applicants' health and personal life. Similarly, the Personnel Department does not make employee files available.

Despite the general restriction of access to these current records, the Church allows exceptions in extraordinary cases that promise substantial benefits to mankind. For instance, Church officials have provided extensive membership data to cancer researchers and others who have established a legitimate need for such information (Lyon, pp. 129–33).

Most of the noncurrent records of the Church are stored in the Historical Department, one of the world's largest religious archival institutions. Besides housing institutional records, the department also accepts donations of personal historical materials, such as the diaries and papers of individual Church members.

The majority of the thousands of collections in the Historical Department are open and available to most members of the public. Like other major archival institutions, however, the Historical Department restricts access to some of its collections for several legal and ethical reasons. Some other materials are restricted by the terms of their donation. Some of these donor-imposed restrictions eventually expire, making the donated materials more accessible to the public.

The Historical Department restricts some materials to protect the privacy of persons mentioned in them. Experts on archival law have written that "privacy is by far the most pervasive consideration in restricting materials in archives" (Peterson and Peterson, p. 39). The Church's view of privacy embraces more than the legal principle that recognizes persons' privacy until death. "In addition," Dallin H. Oaks explained, "our belief in life after death causes us to extend this principle to respect the privacy of persons who have left mortality but live beyond the veil" (p. 65). Examples of materials restricted for privacy reasons include the records of Church disciplinary proceedings, confidential minutes of Church councils, and journals of Church officials who record confidential information disclosed to them by Church members.

The Historical Department restricts other records because they are sacred. Examples of such records include transcripts of PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS. Generally, researchers are given access only to their own blessing transcripts, those of their spouses, and their direct-line descendants and deceased ancestors.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Clark, James R. MFP 2:315–20.

Lyon, Joseph L., et al. "Cancer Incidence in Mormons and Non-Mormons in Utah, 1966–1970." New England Journal of Medicine 294 (1976):129–33.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents." Ensign 17 (Oct. 1987):63–69.

Peterson, Gary M., and Trudy Huskamp Peterson. Archives & Manuscripts: Law. Chicago, 1985.

RICHARD E. TURLEY, JR.

---

CONFIRMATION

Confirmation in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a sacred ORDINANCE essential for salvation. This ordinance follows baptism by immersion for the remission of sins and is efficacious only through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and repentance. It is administered by the laying on of hands by men having AUTHORITY, one of whom performs the ordinance and blesses the candidate. By this process one becomes a member of the Church and is given the gift of the Holy Ghost (Acts 2:37–38; 19:1–7). Baptism and confirmation are administered to persons at least eight years of age, the age of ACCOUNTABILITY (D&C 68:25–27).

The scriptures attest to the administering of the ordinance of confirmation in New Testament times. When Peter and John went to Samaria and found certain disciples who had received John's baptism in water, they "laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost" (Acts 8:17; see also verses 14–22).

Confirmation may be performed only by those holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. The Book of Mormon records that Jesus "touched with his hand the disciples whom he had chosen, one by one, even until he had touched them all, and spake disrupt the organization's work flow and impinge on the privacy of individual Church members. The current membership records of the Church maintained by the Finance and Records Department are kept confidential, as are records of voluntary FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS. The Missionary Department keeps the applications it receives from prospective missionaries confidential because they contain private information about the applicants' health and personal life. Similarly, the Personnel Department does not make employee files available.

Despite the general restriction of access to these current records, the Church allows exceptions in extraordinary cases that promise substantial benefits to mankind. For instance, Church officials have provided extensive membership data to cancer researchers and others who have established a legitimate need for such information (Lyon, pp. 129–33).

Most of the noncurrent records of the Church are stored in the Historical Department, one of the world's largest religious archival institutions. Besides housing institutional records, the department also accepts donations of personal historical materials, such as the diaries and papers of individual Church members.

The majority of the thousands of collections in the Historical Department are open and available to most members of the public. Like other major archival institutions, however, the Historical Department restricts access to some of its collections for several legal and ethical reasons. Some other materials are restricted by the terms of their donation. Some of these donor-imposed restrictions eventually expire, making the donated materials more accessible to the public.

The Historical Department restricts some materials to protect the privacy of persons mentioned in them. Experts on archival law have written that "privacy is by far the most pervasive consideration in restricting materials in archives" (Peterson and Peterson, p. 39). The Church's view of privacy embraces more than the legal principle that recognizes persons' privacy until death. "In addition," Dallin H. Oaks explained, "our belief in life after death causes us to extend this principle to respect the privacy of persons who have left mortality but live beyond the veil" (p. 65). Examples of materials restricted for privacy reasons include the records of Church disciplinary proceedings, confidential minutes of Church councils, and journals of Church officials who record confidential information disclosed to them by Church members.

The Historical Department restricts other records because they are sacred. Examples of such records include transcripts of PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS. Generally, researchers are given access only to their own blessing transcripts, those of their spouses, and their direct-line descendants and deceased ancestors.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Clark, James R. MFP 2:315–20.

Lyon, Joseph L., et al. "Cancer Incidence in Mormons and Non-Mormons in Utah, 1966–1970." New England Journal of Medicine 294 (1976):129–33.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Recent Events Involving Church History and Forged Documents." Ensign 17 (Oct. 1987):63–69.

Peterson, Gary M., and Trudy Huskamp Peterson. Archives & Manuscripts: Law. Chicago, 1985.

RICHARD E. TURLEY, JR.

---

CONFIRMATION

Confirmation in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a sacred ORDINANCE essential for salvation. This ordinance follows baptism by immersion for the remission of sins and is efficacious only through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and repentance. It is administered by the laying on of hands by men having AUTHORITY, one of whom performs the ordinance and blesses the candidate. By this process one becomes a member of the Church and is given the gift of the Holy Ghost (Acts 2:37–38; 19:1–7). Baptism and confirmation are administered to persons at least eight years of age, the age of ACCOUNTABILITY (D&C 68:25–27).

The scriptures attest to the administering of the ordinance of confirmation in New Testament times. When Peter and John went to Samaria and found certain disciples who had received John's baptism in water, they "laid their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost" (Acts 8:17; see also verses 14–22).

Confirmation may be performed only by those holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. The Book of Mormon records that Jesus "touched with his hand the disciples whom he had chosen, one by one, even until he had touched them all, and spake unto them as he touched them. [Thereby] he gave them power to give the Holy Ghost" (3 Ne. 18:36–37; Moro. 2:1–3). The Doctrine and Covenants specifies: "And whoso having faith you shall confirm in my church, by the laying on of the hands, and I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them" (D&C 33:15).

The ordinance of confirmation is usually performed at a baptismal service or fast and testimony meeting. One or more bearers of the Melchizedek Priesthood lay their hands upon the head of the newly baptized person, and the one who is "voice," calling the person by name, says words to this effect: "In the name of Jesus Christ, and by the authority of the holy Melchizedek Priesthood, I confirm you a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and say unto you, 'receive the Holy Ghost.'" Words of blessing follow as the Spirit of the Lord may dictate, invoking divine guidance, comfort, admonition, instruction, or promise. The initiates are often reminded that through this gift they will discern right from wrong and that the Spirit will be, as it were, a lamp to their feet.

The receiving of the gift of the Holy Ghost may or may not be apparent immediately, although the right to receive this gift is conferred at confirmation. The admonition to receive the Holy Ghost is interpreted to include living in a receptive way for the enlightenment of the Spirit. Joseph Smith taught, "No man can receive the Holy Ghost without receiving revelations. The Holy Ghost is a revelator" (TPJS, p. 328). One is admonished likewise to seek earnestly for spiritual gifts (1 Cor. 12:1–11, 31; D&C 46:9–26) and the "fruits of the Spirit," including love, joy, peace, and longsuffering (Gal. 5; Moro. 7:45–48).

The scriptures sometimes refer to the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost as the "baptism of fire" (Matt. 3:11; 3 Ne. 19:13; Morm. 7:10). Confirmation begins that process. It is seen as a lifetime quest formally renewed each Sabbath in the partaking of the SACRAMENT, whose prayers end with the plea that those who have taken upon themselves the name of Jesus Christ "may always have his Spirit to be with them" (Moro. 4:3).

Once individuals have been confirmed as members of the Church and have received the gift of the Holy Ghost, they may retain this gift by maintaining a state of worthiness with corrections as needed, through an ongoing process of repentance and discipleship.

A girl is confirmed a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Philippines, 1986). Confirmation is a priesthood ordinance performed after baptism, inviting the person to receive the Holy Ghost. Courtesy Floyd Holdman.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 156–57. Salt Lake City, 1968.

RULON G. CRAVEN

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION

While any member of the Church is free to object to military combat service because of conscience, simply holding membership in the Church in and of itself is not a justification. Church leaders have discouraged conscientious objection in every conflict of the twentieth century. Although it is opposed to war and recognizes that going to war is a very poor alternative means of resolving conflicts, the Church considers it the loyal duty of citizenship for members to answer the call of their various countries for military service.

At the same time, it recognizes the right of individual members to determine for themselves whether their deep, spiritual consciences will allow them to serve in combat or require them to request assignment to alternate service. The unto them as he touched them. [Thereby] he gave them power to give the Holy Ghost" (3 Ne. 18:36–37; Moro. 2:1–3). The Doctrine and Covenants specifies: "And whoso having faith you shall confirm in my church, by the laying on of the hands, and I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them" (D&C 33:15).

The ordinance of confirmation is usually performed at a baptismal service or fast and testimony meeting. One or more bearers of the Melchizedek Priesthood lay their hands upon the head of the newly baptized person, and the one who is "voice," calling the person by name, says words to this effect: "In the name of Jesus Christ, and by the authority of the holy Melchizedek Priesthood, I confirm you a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and say unto you, 'receive the Holy Ghost.'" Words of blessing follow as the Spirit of the Lord may dictate, invoking divine guidance, comfort, admonition, instruction, or promise. The initiates are often reminded that through this gift they will discern right from wrong and that the Spirit will be, as it were, a lamp to their feet.

The receiving of the gift of the Holy Ghost may or may not be apparent immediately, although the right to receive this gift is conferred at confirmation. The admonition to receive the Holy Ghost is interpreted to include living in a receptive way for the enlightenment of the Spirit. Joseph Smith taught, "No man can receive the Holy Ghost without receiving revelations. The Holy Ghost is a revelator" (TPJS, p. 328). One is admonished likewise to seek earnestly for spiritual gifts (1 Cor. 12:1–11, 31; D&C 46:9–26) and the "fruits of the Spirit," including love, joy, peace, and longsuffering (Gal. 5; Moro. 7:45–48).

The scriptures sometimes refer to the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost as the "baptism of fire" (Matt. 3:11; 3 Ne. 19:13; Morm. 7:10). Confirmation begins that process. It is seen as a lifetime quest formally renewed each Sabbath in the partaking of the SACRAMENT, whose prayers end with the plea that those who have taken upon themselves the name of Jesus Christ "may always have his Spirit to be with them" (Moro. 4:3).

Once individuals have been confirmed as members of the Church and have received the gift of the Holy Ghost, they may retain this gift by maintaining a state of worthiness with corrections as needed, through an ongoing process of repentance and discipleship.

A girl is confirmed a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Philippines, 1986). Confirmation is a priesthood ordinance performed after baptism, inviting the person to receive the Holy Ghost. Courtesy Floyd Holdman.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 156–57. Salt Lake City, 1968.

RULON G. CRAVEN

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION

While any member of the Church is free to object to military combat service because of conscience, simply holding membership in the Church in and of itself is not a justification. Church leaders have discouraged conscientious objection in every conflict of the twentieth century. Although it is opposed to war and recognizes that going to war is a very poor alternative means of resolving conflicts, the Church considers it the loyal duty of citizenship for members to answer the call of their various countries for military service.

At the same time, it recognizes the right of individual members to determine for themselves whether their deep, spiritual consciences will allow them to serve in combat or require them to request assignment to alternate service. The Church will not support a member in that request until he or she has consulted with the appropriate bishop and stake president and has spiritual confirmation that the way decided upon by the member concerned is acceptable to the Lord.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Boone, Joseph F. "The Roles of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Relation to the United States Military, 1900–1975." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1975.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

---

CONSECRATION

[The following two articles deal with the LDS concept of consecration. Law of Consecration offers an overview of the origin and extended practice of the principles of consecration among Latter-day Saints. The article Consecration in Ohio and Missouri specifically addresses both LDS efforts to live such principles and the resulting economic impact on LDS communities that flourished in these states between 1832 and 1846.]

LAW OF CONSECRATION

The law of consecration was introduced through revelations given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH. As early as 1829, he was directed by the Lord to "seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion" (D&C 6:6; 11:6; 12:6; 14:6). Anciently, the ZION of ENOCH was made up of people who "were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them" (Moses 7:18). These features have characterized the Lord's people who have accepted and applied the fulness of the gospel in their lives, such as the people of the city of Enoch (Moses 7:17–18) and the Nephite golden era (4 Ne. 1:2–3, 15–17) and some of the early Christians (Acts 4:32–37). Latter-day Saints have also been given the law of consecration as an ideal and a challenge and promise for the future (D&C 42:32–39).

The level of dedication required to live the law of consecration has many ancient echoes. The Bible records acts of consecration expressly connected with instituting COVENANTS with God (e.g., Gen. 9:8–17; Num. 6). The willingness to sacrifice Isaac signified the complete dedication of Abraham to God's commands (Gen. 22:1–18). Exodus and Leviticus also disclose various sacrificial acts involving consecration to God, principally by AARON and his sons (cf. Ex. 40:12–16; Lev. 1–7). The New Testament records that early Christians were called upon to set their hearts first on the KINGDOM OF GOD and to have "all things in common" (Acts 2, 4, 5).

After the risen Jesus established his Church in the Western Hemisphere about A.D. 34, the Book of Mormon people followed the practice of consecration for nearly 200 years. "The people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another. And they had all things common among them; therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift" (4 Ne. 1:2–3).

On January 2, 1831, the Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in Fayette, New York, that anciently he had taken the Zion of Enoch to himself and then commanded him to go to Ohio to receive the law (D&C 38:4, 32; cf. Moses 7:21). When Joseph Smith arrived at Kirtland, Ohio, in February, he found the Saints organized in a communal society called "the family." He persuaded them to abandon this practice for "the more perfect law of the Lord." On February 9, while in the presence of twelve elders, he received the revelation that embraced "the law of the Church" (HC 1:146–48; D&C 42). This revelation presented the laws of Church government and of moral conduct for members and established the basic principles of consecration (D&C 42:32–39).

The key principles given in the revelations are consistent with those required for celestial living: all things belong to God, and his people are stewards (D&C 38:17; 104:11–14); individuals are to esteem others as themselves (D&C 38:24–27; 51:3, 9; 70:14; 78:6; 82:17); mankind must retain free AGENCY (D&C 104:17); men and women are made equal according to their wants, needs, and family situations (D&C 51:3); and there must be ACCOUNTABILITY (D&C 72:3; 104:13–18). Although the implementation of the law of consecration of property as revealed in the early 1830s was temporarily suspended (cf. HC 4:93), the principles themselves were not discontinued.

THE COVENANTS OF CONSECRATION TODAY. The Lord revealed several purposes for the law of consecration: to bring the Church to stand independent of all other institutions (D&C 78:14); to strengthen Zion, adorning her in beautiful gar-

Church will not support a member in that request until he or she has consulted with the appropriate bishop and stake president and has spiritual confirmation that the way decided upon by the member concerned is acceptable to the Lord.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Boone, Joseph F. "The Roles of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Relation to the United States Military, 1900–1975." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1975.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

---

CONSECRATION

[The following two articles deal with the LDS concept of consecration. Law of Consecration offers an overview of the origin and extended practice of the principles of consecration among Latter-day Saints. The article Consecration in Ohio and Missouri specifically addresses both LDS efforts to live such principles and the resulting economic impact on LDS communities that flourished in these states between 1832 and 1846.]

LAW OF CONSECRATION

The law of consecration was introduced through revelations given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH. As early as 1829, he was directed by the Lord to "seek to bring forth and establish the cause of Zion" (D&C 6:6; 11:6; 12:6; 14:6). Anciently, the ZION of ENOCH was made up of people who "were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them" (Moses 7:18). These features have characterized the Lord's people who have accepted and applied the fulness of the gospel in their lives, such as the people of the city of Enoch (Moses 7:17–18) and the Nephite golden era (4 Ne. 1:2–3, 15–17) and some of the early Christians (Acts 4:32–37). Latter-day Saints have also been given the law of consecration as an ideal and a challenge and promise for the future (D&C 42:32–39).

The level of dedication required to live the law of consecration has many ancient echoes. The Bible records acts of consecration expressly connected with instituting COVENANTS with God (e.g., Gen. 9:8–17; Num. 6). The willingness to sacrifice Isaac signified the complete dedication of Abraham to God's commands (Gen. 22:1–18). Exodus and Leviticus also disclose various sacrificial acts involving consecration to God, principally by AARON and his sons (cf. Ex. 40:12–16; Lev. 1–7). The New Testament records that early Christians were called upon to set their hearts first on the KINGDOM OF GOD and to have "all things in common" (Acts 2, 4, 5).

After the risen Jesus established his Church in the Western Hemisphere about A.D. 34, the Book of Mormon people followed the practice of consecration for nearly 200 years. "The people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another. And they had all things common among them; therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift" (4 Ne. 1:2–3).

On January 2, 1831, the Lord revealed to the Prophet Joseph SMITH in Fayette, New York, that anciently he had taken the Zion of Enoch to himself and then commanded him to go to Ohio to receive the law (D&C 38:4, 32; cf. Moses 7:21). When Joseph Smith arrived at Kirtland, Ohio, in February, he found the Saints organized in a communal society called "the family." He persuaded them to abandon this practice for "the more perfect law of the Lord." On February 9, while in the presence of twelve elders, he received the revelation that embraced "the law of the Church" (HC 1:146–48; D&C 42). This revelation presented the laws of Church government and of moral conduct for members and established the basic principles of consecration (D&C 42:32–39).

The key principles given in the revelations are consistent with those required for celestial living: all things belong to God, and his people are stewards (D&C 38:17; 104:11–14); individuals are to esteem others as themselves (D&C 38:24–27; 51:3, 9; 70:14; 78:6; 82:17); mankind must retain free AGENCY (D&C 104:17); men and women are made equal according to their wants, needs, and family situations (D&C 51:3); and there must be ACCOUNTABILITY (D&C 72:3; 104:13–18). Although the implementation of the law of consecration of property as revealed in the early 1830s was temporarily suspended (cf. HC 4:93), the principles themselves were not discontinued.

THE COVENANTS OF CONSECRATION TODAY. The Lord revealed several purposes for the law of consecration: to bring the Church to stand independent of all other institutions (D&C 78:14); to strengthen Zion, adorning her in beautiful garments, as a bride prepared and worthy of the bridegroom (D&C 33:17; 58:11; 65:3; 82:14, 18; etc.); and to prepare the Saints for a place in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 78:7).

Commenting on this subject, President John TAYLOR stated that consecration is a celestial law and, when observed, its adherents become a celestial people (JD 17:177–81). Thus, men and women today can become like as those of Enoch’s day, “of one heart and one mind, . . . with no poor among them” (Moses 7:18). Orson PRATT, an early apostle, observed that if the Lord’s people aspire to the celestial kingdom, they must begin to learn the order of life that is there (JD 2:102–103).

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE LAW OF CONSECRATION. The law of consecration requires dedicating all of one’s time, talents, and possessions to the Church and its purposes (D&C 82:19; 64:34; 88:67–68; 98:12–14). John A. Widtsoe, an apostle, noted that its operation was quite simple. Those who joined such an order were to place all their possessions in a common treasury—the rich their wealth, the poor their pittance. Then each member was to receive a sufficient portion—called an “inheritance”—from the common treasury to enable that person to continue in trade, business, or profession as desired. The farmer would receive land and implements; the tradesman, tools and materials; the merchant, necessary capital; the professional person, instruments, books, and the like. Members working for others would receive proportionate interests in the enterprises they served. No one would be without property. All would have an inheritance (Widtsoe, pp. 302–303).

A person’s inheritance was to consist of personal property, to be operated permanently and freely for the benefit of the person and the family. Should the person withdraw from the order, the inheritance could be taken with him, but the person would have no claim upon surplus donations or possessions initially placed in the common treasury (D&C 51:3–6). At the end of a year or set period, the member who had earned more than needed for his family would voluntarily place the surplus in the common treasury. Substantial profits were to be administered by the group rather than by one individual. Men and women who, despite diligence, had a loss from their operations would have the loss made up by the general treasury for another start, or they might—with consent—be placed in some activity better suited to their gifts. In short, the general treasury was to establish every person in a preferred field and was to care for those unable to profit from their inheritance. The general treasury, holding members’ surpluses, would also finance public works and make possible all community enterprises decided upon by the group (D&C 104:60–77).

President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., counselor in the First Presidency, explained that the law of consecration as practiced was not a fully communal life. There was no common table. Each family lived as a unit. Property that was not turned back to the donor by mutual consent of the donor and the BISHOP became the property of the Church and was placed in the storehouse. Every member of the Church had equal access to the contents of the storehouse according to personal needs, circumstances, and needs of the family (Clark, p. 3).

EFFORTS TO LIVE THE LAW OF CONSECRATION. An early effort to live the law of consecration was first tried at Thompson, Ohio, in May 1831 by the members from the Colesville Branch who had moved there from New York. Complications arose when one of the participants withdrew his land and some of the members left for Missouri to help establish the center place of Zion before the practice could take root (Stewart, p. 125). Continued efforts to make necessary refinements in practicing the law in Ohio ultimately failed. A similar attempt was also made at this same time to institute the law of consecration and stewardship in Missouri, but intolerance and bickering among some of the Saints and the lack of any surplus to consecrate rendered the attempt unsuccessful (see CONSECRATION IN OHIO AND MISSOURI below).

After these early failures, the Lord adapted the requirements of the law of consecration to the capacities of the Saints and revealed the law of TITHING as a practice to follow (HIC 3:44; D&C 119). Although tithing does not require the giving of everything to the Lord, it teaches the fundamental elements upon which the character of a Zion people rests: self-control, generosity, love of fellow humans, love for God, and a desire to build the kingdom of God. Giving tithing for over a century, as the Saints proved their ability to live this commandment, prepared them to accept also the welfare program, introduced in 1936 by Church President Heber J. GRANT (CR [Oct. 1936]:3). Five years later, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., observed that the practices of tithing, FAST OFFERINGS, and Church welfare had brought Church members closer to the original principles of the UNITED ORDER and law of consecration (CR [Oct. 1942]:57).

Concerning the future, Zion can be redeemed only by obedience to the law of consecration. At the proper time, the Lord's leaders will implement the program. While it is not clear what procedures will be revealed, Latter-day Saints anticipate that the principles of stewardship, equality, agency, and accountability will eventually be subscribed to by all participants and that the goals originally envisioned will be reached (D&C 78:7, 14; 82:14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. "Testimony of Divine Origin of Welfare Plan." Deseret News, Church Section, Aug. 8, 1951, p. 3.
- Cook, Lyndon W. Joseph Smith and the Law of Consecration. Provo, Utah, 1985.
- Nelson, William O. "To Prepare a People." Ensign 9 (Jan. 1979):18-23.
- Stewart, George, et al. Priesthood and Church Welfare. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Widtsoc, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations. Salt Lake City, 1943.

FRANK W. HIRSCHI

CONSECRATION IN OHIO AND MISSOURI

The principles of consecration were implemented in various forms in Ohio and Missouri in the 1830s to provide for the needs of the poor and of a financially struggling Church (see KIRTLAND, OHIO; KIRTLAND ECONOMY). Many of the Latter-day Saints migrating to Ohio and Missouri lacked the means to support themselves, and the Church had few resources to construct buildings such as the temple or to finance publications. The various implementations of the law of consecration helped to meet these practical needs as well as to teach participants to live a celestial law.

The law of consecration was never fully practiced in Ohio but was implemented in Missouri in several forms between 1831 and 1839. In its 1831 form, the law of consecration required all participants, or "stewards," to consecrate or convey their possessions to the Church storehouse. The bishop would then give back to each individual or family a "stewardship" of land, money, and other possessions according to just wants and needs. Surplus profits generated from these stewardships were contributed to the storehouse to assist the poor and serve other general purposes. To administer the system, separate bishops and storehouses were established in the two Church centers of Kirtland and Missouri.

In 1833, the practice of consecration was modified to provide for private ownership of stewardships, and in 1838, the principle of tithing introduced another change. The law of tithing required the Saints to give "all their surplus property" to the bishop, and subsequently "one-tenth of all their interest [increase] annually" (D&C 119:1, 4).

Implementation of consecration was difficult for the early Latter-day Saints and occurred only intermittently. The impoverished Missouri Saints, were driven and persecuted by mobs, and repeatedly lost personal possessions, lands, and crops. Church property was often taken or destroyed (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Under such circumstances, most members required more for their stewardships than they could contribute to the pool of resources. Others were reluctant to donate their surpluses, and some who left the Church pursued legal means to recover consecrated properties. In the face of such obstacles, the sincere efforts of some faithful Saints to implement the law are all the more remarkable.

The United Firm, more commonly known as the United Order, a corporate enterprise based on consecration principles, was a second and more limited implementation of consecration, which operated in Kirtland with a branch in Missouri from March 1832 to April 1834. About twelve men consecrated their possessions and received stewardships in this business venture. Surpluses were to go into the storehouse for printing the revelations and for meeting other Church needs. The firm dissolved when loan payments could not be made.

The Literary Firm, a third implementation of consecration principles, continued longer than the other two. Established in November 1831 to print the revelations and other publications for the Church, it operated in several forms until August 1837. Following the 1833 Missouri mob actions, printing operations were moved from Independence to Kirtland. Up to eight men were made stewards over the revelations and consecrated their efforts to manage publication. Although constantly beset by problems, the firm published the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS (1st ed.), the BOOK OF MORMON (2nd ed.), and other Church books and periodicals.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J.; Feramorz Y. Fox; and Dean L. May. Building the City of God: Community and Cooperation Among the Mormons. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Cook, Lyndon W. Joseph Smith and the Law of Consecration. Salt Lake City, 1985.

KARL RICKS ANDERSON

---

 CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

As a people, the Latter-day Saints are committed to sustaining constitutional government as the best instrument for maintaining peace, individual freedom, and community life in modern society. This commitment is reinforced by their scriptures, which affirm that constitutional law “supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before [the Lord]” (D&C 98:5). The scripture cited further explains that not only has God made people free by giving them AGENCY, but “the law also maketh you free” (verse 8). Furthermore, any standard other than constitutional law “cometh of evil” (verse 10). This principle applies not only in the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, but wherever Latter-day Saints might live throughout the world. However, Latter-day Saints everywhere believe also “in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law” (A of F 12).

Latter-day Saints have both contributed to, and benefited from, laws and American constitutional law. The Constitution of the United States of America made the RESTORATION of the gospel possible because it limits governmental power, protects individual rights, and sets a moral tone tolerating controversial religious views and rights of expression and assembly. LDS belief in the divine origin of the Constitution contributes to respect for the document.

The majority of the main events associated with the restoration of the Church occurred in the United States. Its message was controversial and provocative, and without the protections of the United States Constitution, the Church likely would not have survived. President Wilford WOODRUFF taught that at that time the United States of America was the only place where the Lord could have established his Church and kingdom (JD 25:211). President David O. MCKAY, in the dedicatory prayer for the Los Angeles Temple, expressed gratitude for the Constitution and for the fact that it made the establishment of the Church possible (IE 59 [Apr. 1956]:226). This idea is expressed frequently by Latter-day Saints and is more than patriotic rhetoric; a brief examination of the U.S. Constitution shows why.

The United States was especially hospitable to the restoration of the Church because its Constitution limits governments, both state and federal, thereby protecting individual rights. It limits governmental power in two ways: through two structural features commonly referred to as the separation of powers and federalism and through a series of express prohibitions.

The separation of powers refers to the division of governmental power on a horizontal plane among the three distinct branches of the federal government—legislative, executive, and judicial. Federalism divides governmental power on a vertical plane between the national government and the state governments. The separation of powers and federalism, by allocating governmental powers among several entities and by making each of these entities a competitor with the others, minimize the likelihood that government will trample individual rights.

The most famous of the express prohibitions against governmental action are contained in the first eight of the ten amendments to the Constitution that make up the Bill of Rights. By themselves, these provisions had been interpreted to apply only to the federal government, but the Fourteenth Amendment has now been held by the U.S. Supreme Court to make most of those Bill of Rights guarantees binding on state governments as well (see CIVIL RIGHTS). Because the Bill of Rights and the structural provisions of the Constitution protect individual rights against government intrusions, Latter-day Saints and other religious groups have been its distinct and identifiable beneficiaries.

Beyond its limitations on government, the Constitution sets a moral tone tolerating controversial religious views and rights of expression in general. This tone extends beyond its immediate impact on government. Without it, the public opposition to the Church, combined with the zeal of its adherents, might have brought about its demise. That Joseph SMITH was born soon after the adoption and ratification of the Constitution is no coincidence in the LDS view.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J.; Feramorz Y. Fox; and Dean L. May. Building the City of God: Community and Cooperation Among the Mormons. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Cook, Lyndon W. Joseph Smith and the Law of Consecration. Salt Lake City, 1985.

KARL RICKS ANDERSON

---

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

As a people, the Latter-day Saints are committed to sustaining constitutional government as the best instrument for maintaining peace, individual freedom, and community life in modern society. This commitment is reinforced by their scriptures, which affirm that constitutional law “supporting that principle of freedom in maintaining rights and privileges, belongs to all mankind, and is justifiable before [the Lord]” (D&C 98:5). The scripture cited further explains that not only has God made people free by giving them AGENCY, but “the law also maketh you free” (verse 8). Furthermore, any standard other than constitutional law “cometh of evil” (verse 10). This principle applies not only in the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, but wherever Latter-day Saints might live throughout the world. However, Latter-day Saints everywhere believe also “in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law” (A of F 12).

Latter-day Saints have both contributed to, and benefited from, laws and American constitutional law. The Constitution of the United States of America made the RESTORATION of the gospel possible because it limits governmental power, protects individual rights, and sets a moral tone tolerating controversial religious views and rights of expression and assembly. LDS belief in the divine origin of the Constitution contributes to respect for the document.

The majority of the main events associated with the restoration of the Church occurred in the United States. Its message was controversial and provocative, and without the protections of the United States Constitution, the Church likely would not have survived. President Wilford WOODRUFF taught that at that time the United States of America was the only place where the Lord could have established his Church and kingdom (JD 25:211). President David O. MCKAY, in the dedicatory prayer for the Los Angeles Temple, expressed gratitude for the Constitution and for the fact that it made the establishment of the Church possible (IE 59 [Apr. 1956]:226). This idea is expressed frequently by Latter-day Saints and is more than patriotic rhetoric; a brief examination of the U.S. Constitution shows why.

The United States was especially hospitable to the restoration of the Church because its Constitution limits governments, both state and federal, thereby protecting individual rights. It limits governmental power in two ways: through two structural features commonly referred to as the separation of powers and federalism and through a series of express prohibitions.

The separation of powers refers to the division of governmental power on a horizontal plane among the three distinct branches of the federal government—legislative, executive, and judicial. Federalism divides governmental power on a vertical plane between the national government and the state governments. The separation of powers and federalism, by allocating governmental powers among several entities and by making each of these entities a competitor with the others, minimize the likelihood that government will trample individual rights.

The most famous of the express prohibitions against governmental action are contained in the first eight of the ten amendments to the Constitution that make up the Bill of Rights. By themselves, these provisions had been interpreted to apply only to the federal government, but the Fourteenth Amendment has now been held by the U.S. Supreme Court to make most of those Bill of Rights guarantees binding on state governments as well (see CIVIL RIGHTS). Because the Bill of Rights and the structural provisions of the Constitution protect individual rights against government intrusions, Latter-day Saints and other religious groups have been its distinct and identifiable beneficiaries.

Beyond its limitations on government, the Constitution sets a moral tone tolerating controversial religious views and rights of expression in general. This tone extends beyond its immediate impact on government. Without it, the public opposition to the Church, combined with the zeal of its adherents, might have brought about its demise. That Joseph SMITH was born soon after the adoption and ratification of the Constitution is no coincidence in the LDS view.

On November 28, 1843, the Church petitioned the United States government to help members obtain relief from their unconstitutional losses of property at the hands of mobs and the Missouri state militia, partly as a result of an executive order. This petition was signed by 3,419 people, including Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor, Orson Pratt, and Heber C. Kimball as Nauvoo city officials. The federal government took no action in what was then considered a matter outside federal jurisdiction.

Latter-day Saints have participated significantly in the development of American law dealing with constitutional protections of civil rights. The starting point for modern constitutional analysis of First Amendment freedoms—including not only the free exercise of religion but all First Amendment rights—is provided by REYNOLDS V. UNITED STATES (98 U.S. 145 [1879]), which involved the prosecution of a nineteenth-century Church leader for practicing polygamy. Reynolds was the first Supreme Court interpretation of the First Amendment. It draws a distinction between beliefs, which it holds are absolutely protected by the First Amendment, and conduct, which it says enjoys no protection.

That distinction between belief and conduct is still the cornerstone of First Amendment analysis. The first half of it (absolute protection for belief) is still good law, though the second half (no protection for conduct) is not. The present rule for religiously motivated conduct, which was not clearly developed until almost a century after the Reynolds decision was handed down, is that government actions adversely affecting religious behavior are prohibited by the First Amendment's free exercise clause unless government can show that its actions are based on a compelling state interest and that its regulation or other infringement is narrowly tailored to the achievement of that objective (Wisconsin v. Yoder et al., 406 U.S. 205 [1972]). The test strongly favors individual rights over government interests and is therefore conducive to RELIGIOUS FREEDOM. It is also a test from which the Church has benefited.

As a group, Latter-day Saints in the United States are deeply patriotic. They sustained the Constitution even when, in times of severe persecution, some of its protections were denied them. Partly because of the Church's history and partly because of their unique understanding of the nation's origins, most Latter-day Saints in the United States accept the responsibility to study and understand their Constitution as being rooted not only in patriotism but in religion as well. The devotion of the Church and its leaders to the Constitution can be traced to early times. Doctrine and Covenants 134, "A Declaration of Belief Regarding Governments and Laws," adopted by unanimous vote at a general assembly of the Church held at Kirtland, Ohio, on August 17, 1835, is a vigorous statement on the importance of preserving individual rights, particularly those relating to religious and other expressive freedoms. As expressed by one Church President, Latter-day Saints “have a tremendous obligation to be good citizens, to uphold the Constitution of this land, to adhere to its basic concepts” (Benson, pp. 615–16; see also POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS).

Another aspect of the LDS understanding of the Constitution is the belief gained from scripture concerning its divine origins, which enhances Latter-day Saints’ respect and even reverence for the document, particularly in the United States. The Lord revealed to Joseph Smith, “And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose” (D&C 101:80; cf. 3 Ne. 21:4). Some Church members espouse a view which goes beyond this scriptural language, esteeming the Constitution beyond criticism and as near scriptural. What the scripture in fact says is simple, informative, and understandable: this remarkably successful document did not emerge by chance or human wisdom alone. God had a hand in its creation—not in the same, direct, revelatory way that he creates scripture, but by assembling and inspiring, at the one crucial point in American history when it was sorely needed, probably the most talented collection of statesmen with which any nation has ever been blessed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Lee, Rex E. A Lawyer Looks at the Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1980.
- Mangrum, R. Collin. “Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution.” BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37.
- Reynolds, Noel B. “The Doctrine of an Inspired Constitution.” BYU Studies 16 (Spring 1976):315–40.

REX E. LEE

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

While LDS scripture reinforces the traditional Christian duty of “respect and deference” to civil laws and governments in general as “instituted of God for the benefit of man” (D&C 134:1, 6), Latter-day Saints attach special significance to the Constitution of the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. They believe that the Lord “established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom [he] raised up unto this very purpose” (D&C 101:80). The Prophet Joseph SMITH once described himself as “the greatest advocate of the Constitution of the United States there is on the earth” (HC 6:56–57). All of his successors as President of the Church have reaffirmed the doctrine of an inspired Constitution. This consistent endorsement is notable, for basic LDS teachings are far removed from the premises of American liberalism, and largely as a result of these differences, Latter-day Saints suffered considerable persecution before achieving an accommodation with mainstream America.

The idea of an inspired Constitution is rare in contemporary public discourse and wholly absent from contemporary constitutional and historical scholarship. Seeking to discern the hand of divinity in America’s beginnings, however, was once common not only in popular rhetoric but also among eminent nineteenth-century historians such as George Bancroft. Perhaps even more important is the repeated acknowledgment of divine aid by America’s founding fathers. Notably, George Washington frequently expressed gratitude to God for felicitous circumstances surrounding the rise of the United States and chose the occasion of his first inaugural address to recognize the providential character of the framing of the Constitution:

No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men, more than the People of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency. And in the important revolution just accomplished in the system of their united government, the tranquil deliberations and voluntary consent of so many distinct communities, from which the event has resulted, cannot be compared with the means by which most governments have been established, without some return of pious gratitude, along with an humble anticipation of the future blessings which the past [blessings] seem to presage [W. Allen, ed., George Washington: A Collection, p. 461. Indianapolis, Ind., 1988].

LDS teaching and revelation are in harmony with this self-understanding of the founding generation. Latter-day Saints believe that the Lord established vote at a general assembly of the Church held at Kirtland, Ohio, on August 17, 1835, is a vigorous statement on the importance of preserving individual rights, particularly those relating to religious and other expressive freedoms. As expressed by one Church President, Latter-day Saints “have a tremendous obligation to be good citizens, to uphold the Constitution of this land, to adhere to its basic concepts” (Benson, pp. 615–16; see also POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS).

Another aspect of the LDS understanding of the Constitution is the belief gained from scripture concerning its divine origins, which enhances Latter-day Saints’ respect and even reverence for the document, particularly in the United States. The Lord revealed to Joseph Smith, “And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose” (D&C 101:80; cf. 3 Ne. 21:4). Some Church members espouse a view which goes beyond this scriptural language, esteeming the Constitution beyond criticism and as near scriptural. What the scripture in fact says is simple, informative, and understandable: this remarkably successful document did not emerge by chance or human wisdom alone. God had a hand in its creation—not in the same, direct, revelatory way that he creates scripture, but by assembling and inspiring, at the one crucial point in American history when it was sorely needed, probably the most talented collection of statesmen with which any nation has ever been blessed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Lee, Rex E. A Lawyer Looks at the Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1980.
- Mangrum, R. Collin. “Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution.” BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37.
- Reynolds, Noel B. “The Doctrine of an Inspired Constitution.” BYU Studies 16 (Spring 1976):315–40.

REX E. LEE

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

While LDS scripture reinforces the traditional Christian duty of “respect and deference” to civil laws and governments in general as “instituted of God for the benefit of man” (D&C 134:1, 6), Latter-day Saints attach special significance to the Constitution of the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. They believe that the Lord “established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom [he] raised up unto this very purpose” (D&C 101:80). The Prophet Joseph SMITH once described himself as “the greatest advocate of the Constitution of the United States there is on the earth” (HC 6:56–57). All of his successors as President of the Church have reaffirmed the doctrine of an inspired Constitution. This consistent endorsement is notable, for basic LDS teachings are far removed from the premises of American liberalism, and largely as a result of these differences, Latter-day Saints suffered considerable persecution before achieving an accommodation with mainstream America.

The idea of an inspired Constitution is rare in contemporary public discourse and wholly absent from contemporary constitutional and historical scholarship. Seeking to discern the hand of divinity in America’s beginnings, however, was once common not only in popular rhetoric but also among eminent nineteenth-century historians such as George Bancroft. Perhaps even more important is the repeated acknowledgment of divine aid by America’s founding fathers. Notably, George Washington frequently expressed gratitude to God for felicitous circumstances surrounding the rise of the United States and chose the occasion of his first inaugural address to recognize the providential character of the framing of the Constitution:

No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men, more than the People of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency. And in the important revolution just accomplished in the system of their united government, the tranquil deliberations and voluntary consent of so many distinct communities, from which the event has resulted, cannot be compared with the means by which most governments have been established, without some return of pious gratitude, along with an humble anticipation of the future blessings which the past [blessings] seem to presage [W. Allen, ed., George Washington: A Collection, p. 461. Indianapolis, Ind., 1988].

LDS teaching and revelation are in harmony with this self-understanding of the founding generation. Latter-day Saints believe that the Lord established the Constitution, not by communicating specific measures through oracles, but by raising up and inspiring wise men to this purpose (see D&C 101:80). This emphasis on the extraordinary character of the American founders—and perhaps, more generally, on the founding generation as a whole—accords with assessments by contemporaries, as well as by later students of the period. Thomas Jefferson, then U.S. ambassador to France, described the Constitutional Convention of 1787 as “an assembly of demigods.” More than forty years later, Alexis de Tocqueville, the noted French observer of American society, included the American people as a whole in his praise of the founding:

That which is new in the history of societies is to see a great people, warned by its lawgivers that the wheels of government are stopping, turn its attention on itself without haste or fear, sound the depth of the ill, and then wait for two years to find the remedy at leisure, and then finally, when the remedy has been indicated, submit to it voluntarily without its costing humanity a single tear or drop of blood [Vol. 1, p. 113].

This understanding of the divine inspiration of the Constitution as mediated through the human wisdom of the founders and the founding generation invites the inference that new needs and circumstances might require the continued exercise of inspired human wisdom by statesmen and citizens alike. LDS leaders have taught that the Constitution is not to be considered perfect and complete in every detail (as evidenced most clearly by its accommodation with slavery, contrary to modern scripture; e.g., D&C 101:79) but as subject to development and adaptation. It was part of the wisdom of the founders to forbear from attempting to decide too much; they therefore provided constitutional means for constitutional amendment. President Brigham YOUNG explained that the Constitution “is a progressive—a gradual work”; the founders “laid the foundation, and it was for after generations to rear the superstructure upon it” (JD 7:13–15).

If the wisdom embodied in the Constitution is considered open to future development, so must it be understood as rooted in the past. J. Reuben Clark, Jr., perhaps the most thorough expositor of the Constitution among past LDS Church leaders, emphasized the dependence of the founders’ wisdom on “the wisdom of the long generations that had gone before and which had been transmitted to them through tradition and the pages of history” (1962, p. 3). He saw the Constitution as the product of Englishmen’s centuries-long struggle for self-government. This historical perspective fits well with the account of the Book of Mormon, according to which the Lord guided the discovery, colonization, and struggle for independence of America (1 Ne. 13:12–13), in order to establish it as a “land of liberty” (2 Ne. 10:11). Latter-day Saint teaching differs from the traditional providential view of the founding chiefly in holding this liberty not only a blessing in itself but also a condition for the restoration of the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

LDS teaching about the wisdom of the founders readily acknowledges that it was both conditioned by the past and open to the future. But there can be no question of completely reducing the Constitution to its historical conditions. If the document framed in 1787 remains a touchstone today, this is because, in some admittedly imperfect way, it aims at “the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles” (D&C 101:77). Church President David O. MCKAY affirmed that “there are some fundamental principles of this republic which, like eternal truths, never get out of date. . . . Such are the underlying principles of the Constitution” (p. 319).

The scriptural reference to “just and holy principles” appears to locate these fundamentals in certain “rights.” Section 98 of the Doctrine and Covenants recommends friendship to constitutional law based on the harmony between FREEDOM under its law and freedom under God (D&C 98:6, 8). Similarly, revelation links human “rights” with the opportunity to “act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment” (D&C 101:78). In this way, the reverence of Latter-day Saints for the Constitution is anchored in the fundamental doctrine of free AGENCY, or the idea that God makes possible people’s progress toward eternal life in part by exposing them to the consequences, good or bad, of their choices. LDS scholars who have examined the Constitution from the standpoint of this fundamental interest in moral freedom have exhibited its connection with the basic principles of the rule of law (Reynolds, in Hillam) and of the separation of powers (Hickman, in Hillam), both of which concepts are connected with the ideal of limited government.

If “moral agency” stands at the core of the doctrine of an inspired Constitution, then one might say that whereas LDS teaching in the nineteenth century emphasized the agency, Church leaders in the twentieth century have increasingly stressed the moral foundations of the Constitution, echoing the prophet Mosiah<sub>2</sub> in the Book of Mormon: “If the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you” (Mosiah 29:26–7; cf. Ether 2:8–12). Their praise of the Constitution has often been paired with warnings against the evils of Marxist communism, a system opposed to the Constitution and moral freedom.

LDS attachment to the Constitution has been further encouraged by an important oral tradition deriving from a statement attributed to Joseph Smith, according to which the Constitution would “hang by a thread” and be rescued, if at all, only with the help of the Saints. Church President John Taylor seemed to go further when he prophesied, “When the people shall have torn to shreds the Constitution of the United States the Elders of Israel will be found holding it up to the nations of the earth and proclaiming liberty and equal rights to all men” (JD 21:8). To defend the principles of the Constitution under circumstances where the “iniquity,” or moral decay, of the people has torn it to shreds might well require wisdom at least equal to that of the men raised up to found it. In particular, it would require great insight into the relationship between freedom and virtue in a political embodiment of moral agency.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. The Constitution: A Heavenly Banner. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- . The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988. Part 5, “Country,” collects many statements relative to the Constitution by a Mormon apostle and Church President and former U.S. secretary of agriculture.
- Cannon, Donald Q. Latter-day Prophets and the United States Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1991.
- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. Stand Fast by Our Constitution. Salt Lake City, 1962.
- Hillam, Ray C., ed. “By the Hands of Wise Men”: Essays on the U.S. Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1979. See in particular Richard L. Bushman, “Virtue and the Constitution,” pp. 29–38; Martin B. Hickman, “J. Reuben Clark, Jr.: The Constitution and the Great Fundamentals,” pp. 39–57, reprinted from BYU Studies 13 (Spring 1973):255–72; and Noel B. Reynolds, “The Doctrine of an Inspired Constitution,” pp. 1–28, reprinted from BYU Studies 16 (Spring 1976):315–40.
- Lec, Rex E. A Lawyer Looks at the Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1980.

Mangrum, R. Collin. “Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution.” BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37. Seeks a justification for Mormon celebration of the Constitution in a compatibility between Mormon theology and the liberal idea that “each individual is entitled to pursue whatever his or her individual nomos requires, subject to the equal right of others to do the same.”

Vetterli, Richard. The Constitution by a Thread. Salt Lake City, 1967. Advocates an interpretation of the U.S. Constitution as consistent with the fundamentals of “Mormon political and religious philosophy” and opposed to the philosophies of Marx, Freud, and the “new liberal intellectual.”

RALPH C. HANCOCK

CONTENTION

Ranging from hostile words spoken at home to international conflicts, contention is so prevalent in the world that people tend to think of it as normal, inevitable, and perhaps even necessary. In the Book of Mormon, however, Jesus states, “He that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger, one with another” (3 Ne. 11:29). Whether at home, at church, in business, or in the community, “such things should be done away” (3 Ne. 11:30). This is fundamental to the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Latter-day Saints place great value on directing their energy in positive ways: “Use boldness, but not overbearance; and also see that ye bridle all your passions, that ye may be filled with love” (Alma 38:12). Thus, scriptures admonish the faithful to “contend for the faith” (Jude 1:3; 1 Thes. 2:2), but not to the point of quarreling or arguing. Contention is especially detrimental at home (Mosiah 4:14) and over doctrine (1 Cor. 11:16; 3 Ne. 11:28).

Jesus taught not only that contention should cease, but anger too, along with derision, contempt, and scorn. Having such feelings place a person in danger of the judgments of the Church and of God (see Matt. 5:22; see also 3 Ne. 12:22, where the phrase “without a cause” is absent).

When people get into difficulties and disagreements with one another, the scriptures furnish wise counsel. If a person feels bad feelings, or discovers that someone has bad feelings against him or her, it is that person’s responsibility to go “quickly” and be reconciled (3 Ne. 12:23–25). Implicit in this injunction is the recognition that “we are members one of another” (Eph. 4:25). A troubled relationship is shared by all persons in-

If “moral agency” stands at the core of the doctrine of an inspired Constitution, then one might say that whereas LDS teaching in the nineteenth century emphasized the agency, Church leaders in the twentieth century have increasingly stressed the moral foundations of the Constitution, echoing the prophet Mosiah<sub>2</sub> in the Book of Mormon: “If the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you” (Mosiah 29:26–7; cf. Ether 2:8–12). Their praise of the Constitution has often been paired with warnings against the evils of Marxist communism, a system opposed to the Constitution and moral freedom.

LDS attachment to the Constitution has been further encouraged by an important oral tradition deriving from a statement attributed to Joseph Smith, according to which the Constitution would “hang by a thread” and be rescued, if at all, only with the help of the Saints. Church President John Taylor seemed to go further when he prophesied, “When the people shall have torn to shreds the Constitution of the United States the Elders of Israel will be found holding it up to the nations of the earth and proclaiming liberty and equal rights to all men” (JD 21:8). To defend the principles of the Constitution under circumstances where the “iniquity,” or moral decay, of the people has torn it to shreds might well require wisdom at least equal to that of the men raised up to found it. In particular, it would require great insight into the relationship between freedom and virtue in a political embodiment of moral agency.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. The Constitution: A Heavenly Banner. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- . The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988. Part 5, “Country,” collects many statements relative to the Constitution by a Mormon apostle and Church President and former U.S. secretary of agriculture.
- Cannon, Donald Q. Latter-day Prophets and the United States Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1991.
- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. Stand Fast by Our Constitution. Salt Lake City, 1962.
- Hillam, Ray C., ed. “By the Hands of Wise Men”: Essays on the U.S. Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1979. See in particular Richard L. Bushman, “Virtue and the Constitution,” pp. 29–38; Martin B. Hickman, “J. Reuben Clark, Jr.: The Constitution and the Great Fundamentals,” pp. 39–57, reprinted from BYU Studies 13 (Spring 1973):255–72; and Noel B. Reynolds, “The Doctrine of an Inspired Constitution,” pp. 1–28, reprinted from BYU Studies 16 (Spring 1976):315–40.
- Lec, Rex E. A Lawyer Looks at the Constitution. Provo, Utah, 1980.

Mangrum, R. Collin. “Mormonism, Philosophical Liberalism, and the Constitution.” BYU Studies 27 (Summer 1987):119–37. Seeks a justification for Mormon celebration of the Constitution in a compatibility between Mormon theology and the liberal idea that “each individual is entitled to pursue whatever his or her individual nomos requires, subject to the equal right of others to do the same.”

Vetterli, Richard. The Constitution by a Thread. Salt Lake City, 1967. Advocates an interpretation of the U.S. Constitution as consistent with the fundamentals of “Mormon political and religious philosophy” and opposed to the philosophies of Marx, Freud, and the “new liberal intellectual.”

RALPH C. HANCOCK

CONTENTION

Ranging from hostile words spoken at home to international conflicts, contention is so prevalent in the world that people tend to think of it as normal, inevitable, and perhaps even necessary. In the Book of Mormon, however, Jesus states, “He that hath the spirit of contention is not of me, but is of the devil, who is the father of contention, and he stirreth up the hearts of men to contend with anger, one with another” (3 Ne. 11:29). Whether at home, at church, in business, or in the community, “such things should be done away” (3 Ne. 11:30). This is fundamental to the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Latter-day Saints place great value on directing their energy in positive ways: “Use boldness, but not overbearance; and also see that ye bridle all your passions, that ye may be filled with love” (Alma 38:12). Thus, scriptures admonish the faithful to “contend for the faith” (Jude 1:3; 1 Thes. 2:2), but not to the point of quarreling or arguing. Contention is especially detrimental at home (Mosiah 4:14) and over doctrine (1 Cor. 11:16; 3 Ne. 11:28).

Jesus taught not only that contention should cease, but anger too, along with derision, contempt, and scorn. Having such feelings place a person in danger of the judgments of the Church and of God (see Matt. 5:22; see also 3 Ne. 12:22, where the phrase “without a cause” is absent).

When people get into difficulties and disagreements with one another, the scriptures furnish wise counsel. If a person feels bad feelings, or discovers that someone has bad feelings against him or her, it is that person’s responsibility to go “quickly” and be reconciled (3 Ne. 12:23–25). Implicit in this injunction is the recognition that “we are members one of another” (Eph. 4:25). A troubled relationship is shared by all persons involved and is not just the responsibility of the one who feels hurt or angry. The nature of the reconciliation depends upon the specifics of each situation. Rather than relying on human understanding or formulaic solutions, the Saints are taught to seek divine counsel and to trust the direction of the Lord, the reconciler of all (Prov. 3:5–6; D&C 112:10).

Standing in the way of most solutions to contention is pride: “Only by pride cometh contention” (Prov. 13:10). “The central feature of pride,” declared Ezra Taft BENSON, “is enmity—enmity toward God and . . . [toward] our fellowmen.” Underlying the solution to contention must be the desire for harmony between people which can come only as a person “yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit . . . and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord” (Mosiah 3:19). Atonement and reconciliation with God allow and evoke forgiveness and reconciliation among people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashton, Marvin J. “No Time for Contention.” Ensign 8 (May 1978):7–9.
- Benson, Ezra T. “Beware of Pride.” Ensign 19 (May 1989):4–7.
- Thornock, A. Lavar. “Contention—and How to Eliminate It.” Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):11–15.

CELIA HOKANSON

---

CONTRIBUTOR

Edited and published independently by Junius F. WELLS, the founder of the Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA; renamed YOUNG MEN in 1977), the Contributor (1879–1896) proposed “to represent the Mutual Improvement Associations, and to furnish a publication of peculiar interest to their members and to the mature youth of our people” (“Salutation,” p. 12). One of its purposes was to encourage and foster the development of literary talents among the young men and young women in the Church. It contained articles on such subjects as travel, philosophy, history, biography, and gospel topics. There were also letters from the General Authorities, conference reports, lesson outlines for the youth weekly meetings, hymns, fiction, and a little poetry.

The Contributor Company was formed on January 11, 1886, and Wells continued as editor, publisher, and business manager. But when it was purchased by the Cannon Publishing Company in 1892, Abraham H. Cannon became the editor and publisher. Cannon died suddenly in July 1896, and the Contributor ceased publication with the October issue.

In November 1897 the general board of the YMMIA launched an official magazine, the IMPROVEMENT ERA (1897–1970).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Edward H. “The Past of Mutual Improvement.” IE 1 (Dec. 1897):85–93.
- Wells, Junius F. “Salutation.” Contributor 1 (Oct. 1879):12.

PETREA GILLESPIE KELLY

---

CONVERSION

From its beginnings to the present day, the Church has had a strong missionary orientation. It teaches that conversion is essentially a process of REPENTANCE and personal spiritual experience (see TESTIMONY; RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE; JOINING THE CHURCH).

THE NATURE OF CONVERSION. A number of theories have been advanced by sociologists to explain why people are likely to convert to another religious denomination. Glenn M. Vernon indicated that conversion involves several subprocesses, which must be accounted for, including (1) the manner in which the convert becomes aware of the group possessing the ideology; (2) the acceptance of new religious definitions; and (3) the integration of the new convert into the group. John Lofland and Rodney Stark proposed that conversion is a problem-solving process in which the individual uses organizational facilities, programs, and ideologies to resolve various life problems. More recently, David A. Snow, Louis A. Zurcher, and Sheldon Ekland-Olson have emphasized structural proximity, availability, and affective interaction with members of the new denomination as the most powerful influences in determining who will join. Roger A. Straus has proposed that religious conversion is an active accomplishment by the person who converts. Straus thinks that previous theories focus too heavily on the idea that conversion is something which happens to a person as a result of circumstances external to himself. Similarly, C.

volved and is not just the responsibility of the one who feels hurt or angry. The nature of the reconciliation depends upon the specifics of each situation. Rather than relying on human understanding or formulaic solutions, the Saints are taught to seek divine counsel and to trust the direction of the Lord, the reconciler of all (Prov. 3:5–6; D&C 112:10).

Standing in the way of most solutions to contention is pride: “Only by pride cometh contention” (Prov. 13:10). “The central feature of pride,” declared Ezra Taft BENSON, “is enmity—enmity toward God and . . . [toward] our fellowmen.” Underlying the solution to contention must be the desire for harmony between people which can come only as a person “yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit . . . and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord” (Mosiah 3:19). Atonement and reconciliation with God allow and evoke forgiveness and reconciliation among people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashton, Marvin J. “No Time for Contention.” Ensign 8 (May 1978):7–9.
- Benson, Ezra T. “Beware of Pride.” Ensign 19 (May 1989):4–7.
- Thornock, A. Lavar. “Contention—and How to Eliminate It.” Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):11–15.

CELIA HOKANSON

---

CONTRIBUTOR

Edited and published independently by Junius F. WELLS, the founder of the Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA; renamed YOUNG MEN in 1977), the Contributor (1879–1896) proposed “to represent the Mutual Improvement Associations, and to furnish a publication of peculiar interest to their members and to the mature youth of our people” (“Salutation,” p. 12). One of its purposes was to encourage and foster the development of literary talents among the young men and young women in the Church. It contained articles on such subjects as travel, philosophy, history, biography, and gospel topics. There were also letters from the General Authorities, conference reports, lesson outlines for the youth weekly meetings, hymns, fiction, and a little poetry.

The Contributor Company was formed on January 11, 1886, and Wells continued as editor, publisher, and business manager. But when it was purchased by the Cannon Publishing Company in 1892, Abraham H. Cannon became the editor and publisher. Cannon died suddenly in July 1896, and the Contributor ceased publication with the October issue.

In November 1897 the general board of the YMMIA launched an official magazine, the IMPROVEMENT ERA (1897–1970).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Edward H. “The Past of Mutual Improvement.” IE 1 (Dec. 1897):85–93.
- Wells, Junius F. “Salutation.” Contributor 1 (Oct. 1879):12.

PETREA GILLESPIE KELLY

---

CONVERSION

From its beginnings to the present day, the Church has had a strong missionary orientation. It teaches that conversion is essentially a process of REPENTANCE and personal spiritual experience (see TESTIMONY; RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE; JOINING THE CHURCH).

THE NATURE OF CONVERSION. A number of theories have been advanced by sociologists to explain why people are likely to convert to another religious denomination. Glenn M. Vernon indicated that conversion involves several subprocesses, which must be accounted for, including (1) the manner in which the convert becomes aware of the group possessing the ideology; (2) the acceptance of new religious definitions; and (3) the integration of the new convert into the group. John Lofland and Rodney Stark proposed that conversion is a problem-solving process in which the individual uses organizational facilities, programs, and ideologies to resolve various life problems. More recently, David A. Snow, Louis A. Zurcher, and Sheldon Ekland-Olson have emphasized structural proximity, availability, and affective interaction with members of the new denomination as the most powerful influences in determining who will join. Roger A. Straus has proposed that religious conversion is an active accomplishment by the person who converts. Straus thinks that previous theories focus too heavily on the idea that conversion is something which happens to a person as a result of circumstances external to himself. Similarly, C.

volved and is not just the responsibility of the one who feels hurt or angry. The nature of the reconciliation depends upon the specifics of each situation. Rather than relying on human understanding or formulaic solutions, the Saints are taught to seek divine counsel and to trust the direction of the Lord, the reconciler of all (Prov. 3:5–6; D&C 112:10).

Standing in the way of most solutions to contention is pride: “Only by pride cometh contention” (Prov. 13:10). “The central feature of pride,” declared Ezra Taft BENSON, “is enmity—enmity toward God and . . . [toward] our fellowmen.” Underlying the solution to contention must be the desire for harmony between people which can come only as a person “yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit . . . and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord” (Mosiah 3:19). Atonement and reconciliation with God allow and evoke forgiveness and reconciliation among people.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashton, Marvin J. “No Time for Contention.” Ensign 8 (May 1978):7–9.
- Benson, Ezra T. “Beware of Pride.” Ensign 19 (May 1989):4–7.
- Thornock, A. Lavar. “Contention—and How to Eliminate It.” Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):11–15.

CELIA HOKANSON

---

CONTRIBUTOR

Edited and published independently by Junius F. WELLS, the founder of the Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Association (YMMIA; renamed YOUNG MEN in 1977), the Contributor (1879–1896) proposed “to represent the Mutual Improvement Associations, and to furnish a publication of peculiar interest to their members and to the mature youth of our people” (“Salutation,” p. 12). One of its purposes was to encourage and foster the development of literary talents among the young men and young women in the Church. It contained articles on such subjects as travel, philosophy, history, biography, and gospel topics. There were also letters from the General Authorities, conference reports, lesson outlines for the youth weekly meetings, hymns, fiction, and a little poetry.

The Contributor Company was formed on January 11, 1886, and Wells continued as editor, publisher, and business manager. But when it was purchased by the Cannon Publishing Company in 1892, Abraham H. Cannon became the editor and publisher. Cannon died suddenly in July 1896, and the Contributor ceased publication with the October issue.

In November 1897 the general board of the YMMIA launched an official magazine, the IMPROVEMENT ERA (1897–1970).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Edward H. “The Past of Mutual Improvement.” IE 1 (Dec. 1897):85–93.
- Wells, Junius F. “Salutation.” Contributor 1 (Oct. 1879):12.

PETREA GILLESPIE KELLY

---

CONVERSION

From its beginnings to the present day, the Church has had a strong missionary orientation. It teaches that conversion is essentially a process of REPENTANCE and personal spiritual experience (see TESTIMONY; RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE; JOINING THE CHURCH).

THE NATURE OF CONVERSION. A number of theories have been advanced by sociologists to explain why people are likely to convert to another religious denomination. Glenn M. Vernon indicated that conversion involves several subprocesses, which must be accounted for, including (1) the manner in which the convert becomes aware of the group possessing the ideology; (2) the acceptance of new religious definitions; and (3) the integration of the new convert into the group. John Lofland and Rodney Stark proposed that conversion is a problem-solving process in which the individual uses organizational facilities, programs, and ideologies to resolve various life problems. More recently, David A. Snow, Louis A. Zurcher, and Sheldon Ekland-Olson have emphasized structural proximity, availability, and affective interaction with members of the new denomination as the most powerful influences in determining who will join. Roger A. Straus has proposed that religious conversion is an active accomplishment by the person who converts. Straus thinks that previous theories focus too heavily on the idea that conversion is something which happens to a person as a result of circumstances external to himself. Similarly, C.

David Gartrell and Zane K. Shannon propose that conversion should be characterized as a rational choice based on the recruit's evaluation of the social and cognitive outcomes of converting or not converting.

Recovery from crisis, social proximity to members of the Church, and personal problem solving are certainly involved to some extent in at least some conversions. However, research about people who have converted to many churches, (Snow and Phillips; Heirich) including The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Seggar and Kunz), has failed to provide much support for the problem-solving theory of Lofland and Stark. Research by David A. Snow and Cynthia L. Phillips and by Max Heirich provides more evidence of the influence of social networks in conversion.

Most scientific theories, however, lack any significant reference to the influence of the HOLY SPIRIT in conversion, which is the dominant element in the Latter-day Saint understanding of conversion. The visitation of Jesus Christ to Paul on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:1–9) does not fit into any secular theoretical categories. Paul was not seeking a new faith to solve problems in his life. He did not begin to serve Christ in order to be accepted by his friends. He persecuted Christians because he thought they had fallen away from the true faith. As a religious man, he recognized the voice of God when it spoke to him.

Similar conversion stories are told in the Book of Mormon. For example, as Alma<sub>2</sub> and the sons of King Mosiah<sub>2</sub> were going about teaching that the religion of their fathers was not true, they were stopped by the angel of the Lord, who asked why they persecuted the believers. Alma<sub>2</sub> was struck dumb and fell to the ground unable to move. While his father and others fasted and prayed in his behalf for two days and two nights, Alma<sub>2</sub> suffered excruciating pains and torment and finally called upon Jesus Christ for mercy to take away his sins. Immediately, the pain left and his soul was filled with exquisite joy (Alma 36:6–22). Alma arose and proclaimed that he had been reborn through the spirit of the Lord. Alma and the sons of Mosiah spent the rest of their lives preaching of Christ and doing many good works (Mosiah 27:8–31; cf. the spiritual rebirth of the people of Zarahemla at the time of King BENJAMIN in Mosiah 4–5).

Most conversions are not as dramatic as those of Paul and Alma<sub>2</sub> and the sons of Mosiah. The conversion of Alma<sub>1</sub> is closer to the kind experienced by most people who join the Church (Mosiah 17:2–4; 18:1). When Abinadi called him and the other priests of the wicked king Noah to repentance, Alma<sub>1</sub> knew in his heart that Abinadi spoke the truth. He repented of his sins and began to keep the commandments, with which he was already basically familiar. This wrought a significant change in his life.

From these and other scriptural accounts of the conversion process, it is evident that conversion “implies not merely mental acceptance of Jesus and his teaching but also a motivating faith in him and his gospel—a faith which works a transformation, an actual change in one’s understanding of life’s meaning and in his allegiance to God—in interest, in thought, and in conduct” (Romney, p. 1065). Conversion involves a newness of life, which is effected by receiving divine forgiveness that remits sins (see BORN OF GOD). It is characterized by a determination to do good continually, forsaking all sins, and by the healing of the soul by the power of the Holy Spirit, being filled with peace and joy (cf. Romney, p. 1066).

THE PROCESS OF CONVERSION TO THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS. The three subprocesses proposed by Vernon fit quite well the three most obvious aspects of conversion to the Church. The first is “the manner in which the convert becomes aware of the group possessing the ideology.” This corresponds to what is referred to in LDS missionary circles as “finding.” People come into contact with missionaries in many ways. The most effective source is referral by current Church members who invite friends or family relatives to meet with the missionaries to be taught about the gospel. A second way is for missionaries to knock on doors to invite people to learn about the Church. They also may talk with people they meet on the street or in any other form of normal social contact. Missionaries occasionally set up booths at fairs or expositions. The Church has advertised through the broadcast and print media, offering Church literature. It also operates several VISITORS CENTERS, usually associated with a Church temple or historical site. Two of the best known are Temple Square in Salt Lake City, Utah, and at historic Nauvoo, Illinois. All these visitors centers offer interested people the opportunity to accept teaching visits by missionaries.

The second of Vernon’s subprocesses—acceptance of new religious definitions—corresponds to the second major missionary activity, teaching. Missionaries teach the basic principles of God's plan of salvation. They invite those they teach to learn more by studying the Bible and the Book of Mormon on their own. They encourage, inform, teach, and testify. Study is an important part of the conversion process, for the mind plays a role as the investigator learns to understand and ponder the wisdom, logic, and ethic of gospel principles. As B. H. Roberts once stated, "It is frequently the case that a proper setting-forth of a subject makes its truth self-evident. . . . To be known, the truth must be stated and the clearer and more complete the statement is, the better opportunity will the Holy Spirit have for testifying to the souls of men that the work is true" (Vol. 2, pp. vi–vii).

Prospective converts are invited to seek through prayer a spiritual witness from the Holy Ghost to let them know the truth. As Roberts stated regarding the Book of Mormon, "[The Holy Ghost] must ever be the chief source of evidence for the truth of the Book of Mormon. All other evidence is secondary to this, the primary and infallible. No arrangement of evidence, however skillfully ordered; no argument, however adroitly made, can ever take its place" (pp. vi–vii). A quotation from the Book of Mormon is generally used to invite the prospective convert to seek this spiritual manifestation of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon and of the gospel message: "And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the Eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost" (Moro. 10:4).

Most converts to the Church do not seem to have personal characteristics that predispose them to conversion. While those who begin looking into the Church tend to be younger than the average population and tend somewhat more often to be women, these factors do not predict who will ultimately accept BAPTISM. Those who seek baptism do not tend to have more personal problems than those who do not, nor do they differ significantly from others in personality traits or personal dispositions.

Conversion to the Church is usually not precipitous. The process begins with the first signs of interest, and may continue for many years, even after baptism. It is not simply a matter of accepting and believing the teachings of the Church. Many who do accept baptism indicate that they do not fully understand the teachings, but that they have come to feel that accepting baptism is the right thing to do. Most of them achieve a more complete understanding and acceptance of Church doctrine as they become integrated into membership. Such integration is the third process mentioned by Vernon (see FELLOWSHIPING).

Becoming a member of the Church has broader implications than simply adopting a new set of religious beliefs. For many new members it means adopting a new lifestyle quite different from the one to which they were accustomed. For nearly all new members, it also means that they become part of a new social network of friends and acquaintances. In some cases, the new Church member is rejected and ostracized by family and former friends. This social transition is made easier if the new convert has previously developed friends and acquaintances among members of the Church.

MISSIONARY WORK IN THE CHURCH. Those who have been converted usually want to share their newfound understanding with others (cf. Perry, pp. 16–18). Paul, Alma<sub>1</sub>, and Alma<sub>2</sub> passionately taught the truth of Christ's saving mission throughout the remainder of their lives following their conversions. To the convert who loves people, there is a balance to be achieved between having genuine tolerance for the beliefs of others and fulfilling the desire and obligation to share with them the joy of conversion. The major Jewish and Christian religions have gone through phases when the proselytizing spirit was dominant and other periods when the desire to proselytize was restrained (Marty and Greenspahn).

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has actively proselytized from its beginnings. Its leaders and members have accepted a mandate to proclaim the restored gospel to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6; D&C 133:37), to all who will listen. Soon after the formal organization of the Church, Samuel Smith, a brother of Joseph Smith, traveled from place to place offering the Book of Mormon to any who would receive it. Missionaries were soon bringing in converts from the United States, Canada, England, Scandinavia, and Western Europe.

After the main body of members moved to the Intermountain West, the missionary work continued. Increasingly the missionary responsibility was given to young men who had not yet married. Their converts continued to migrate to the American West until well into the twentieth century, in spite of the fact that around the turn of the century Church leaders began to encourage converts to remain where they were and to build up the Church in their homelands.

The Church growth rate since 1860 has never been less than 30 percent for any ten-year period. Since 1950, Church growth has accelerated (see VITAL STATISTICS), advancing to more than 50 percent in each ten-year period from 1950 to 1980 (Cowan).

In recent years the Church has become less and less a church confined to the western United States. As late as 1960, more than half of Church members were located in the Intermountain West, with only 10 percent outside the United States. In 1980, nearly one-third of Church members lived outside the United States, with only about 40 percent in the Intermountain West. In 1989 less than one convert in four was an American citizen.

By far the greatest convert growth outside the United States has been in Latin America, particularly in Mexico, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Argentina (see SOUTH AMERICA). There has also been considerable increase in the number of baptisms in Asia and the Philippines. In 1979 there were three missions in the Philippines; this increased to twelve by 1990, and the number of convert baptisms per year tripled in that same period (see ASIA). New missions were opened in eastern Europe in 1989 and 1990. In 1990 the Church had more than 40,000 full-time missionaries in 257 missions around the world.

Latter-day Saints believe, as stated by President Marion G. Romney: it may be that "relatively few among the billions of earth's inhabitants will be converted. Nevertheless . . . there is no other means by which the sin-sick souls of men can be healed or for a troubled world to find peace" (p. 1067).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Burton, Theodore M. "Convince or Convert?" In BYU Speeches of the Year. Provo, Utah, 1964.
- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Gartrell, C. David, and Zane K. Shannon. "Contacts, Cognitions, and Conversion: A Rational Choice Approach." Review of Religious Research 27 (Sept. 1985):32-48.

Heirich, Max. "Change of Heart: A Test of Some Widely Held Theories About Religious Conversion." American Journal of Sociology 83 (Nov. 1977):653-80.

Lofland, John, and Rodney Stark. "Becoming a World-Saver: A Theory of Conversion to a Deviant Perspective." American Sociological Review 30 (1965):862-75.

Marty, Martin E., and Frederick E. Greenspahn, eds. Pushing the Faith: Proselytism and Civility in a Pluralistic World. New York, 1988.

Perry, L. Tom. "When Thou Art Converted, Strengthen Thy Brethren," Ensign 4 (Nov. 1974):16-18.

Roberts, B. H. New Witnesses for God, Vol. 2, pp. vi-vii. Salt Lake City, 1926.

Romney, Marion G. "Conversion." IE 66 (1963):1065-67.

Seggar, John, and Phillip Kunz. "Conversion: Evaluation of a Step-like Process for Problem-solving." Review of Religious Research 13 (Spring, 1972):178-84.

Snow, David A., and Cynthia L. Phillips. "The Lofland-Stark Conversion Model: A Critical Reassessment." Social Problems 27 (Apr. 1980):430-47.

Snow, David A.; Louis A. Zurcher, Jr.; and Sheldon Ekland-Olson. "Social Networks and Social Movements: A Micro-structural Approach to Differential Recruitment." American Sociological Review 45 (Oct. 1980):787-801.

Straus, Roger A. "Religious Conversion as a Personal and Collective Accomplishment." Sociological Analysis 40 (Summer, 1979):158-65.

Vernon, Glenn M. Sociology of Religion, pp. 101-112. New York, 1962.

KAY H. SMITH

---

COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

See: Economic History of the Church

---

CORRELATION OF THE CHURCH, ADMINISTRATION

Correlation is the process of identifying the role of each part of the Church, placing each in its proper relationship to the others, and ensuring that each functions properly. The parts include doctrines and ordinances, organizations and agencies, programs and activities, meetings, and printed and audiovisual materials. All of these parts should be "fitly framed together" (Eph. 2:21). They function properly when they are connected systematically and operate in harmony and unity. Like the parts of a human body, each has its function, none is

After the main body of members moved to the Intermountain West, the missionary work continued. Increasingly the missionary responsibility was given to young men who had not yet married. Their converts continued to migrate to the American West until well into the twentieth century, in spite of the fact that around the turn of the century Church leaders began to encourage converts to remain where they were and to build up the Church in their homelands.

The Church growth rate since 1860 has never been less than 30 percent for any ten-year period. Since 1950, Church growth has accelerated (see VITAL STATISTICS), advancing to more than 50 percent in each ten-year period from 1950 to 1980 (Cowan).

In recent years the Church has become less and less a church confined to the western United States. As late as 1960, more than half of Church members were located in the Intermountain West, with only 10 percent outside the United States. In 1980, nearly one-third of Church members lived outside the United States, with only about 40 percent in the Intermountain West. In 1989 less than one convert in four was an American citizen.

By far the greatest convert growth outside the United States has been in Latin America, particularly in Mexico, Brazil, Chile, Peru, and Argentina (see SOUTH AMERICA). There has also been considerable increase in the number of baptisms in Asia and the Philippines. In 1979 there were three missions in the Philippines; this increased to twelve by 1990, and the number of convert baptisms per year tripled in that same period (see ASIA). New missions were opened in eastern Europe in 1989 and 1990. In 1990 the Church had more than 40,000 full-time missionaries in 257 missions around the world.

Latter-day Saints believe, as stated by President Marion G. Romney: it may be that "relatively few among the billions of earth's inhabitants will be converted. Nevertheless . . . there is no other means by which the sin-sick souls of men can be healed or for a troubled world to find peace" (p. 1067).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Burton, Theodore M. "Convince or Convert?" In BYU Speeches of the Year. Provo, Utah, 1964.
- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Gartrell, C. David, and Zane K. Shannon. "Contacts, Cognitions, and Conversion: A Rational Choice Approach." Review of Religious Research 27 (Sept. 1985):32-48.

Heirich, Max. "Change of Heart: A Test of Some Widely Held Theories About Religious Conversion." American Journal of Sociology 83 (Nov. 1977):653-80.

Lofland, John, and Rodney Stark. "Becoming a World-Saver: A Theory of Conversion to a Deviant Perspective." American Sociological Review 30 (1965):862-75.

Marty, Martin E., and Frederick E. Greenspahn, eds. Pushing the Faith: Proselytism and Civility in a Pluralistic World. New York, 1988.

Perry, L. Tom. "When Thou Art Converted, Strengthen Thy Brethren," Ensign 4 (Nov. 1974):16-18.

Roberts, B. H. New Witnesses for God, Vol. 2, pp. vi-vii. Salt Lake City, 1926.

Romney, Marion G. "Conversion." IE 66 (1963):1065-67.

Seggar, John, and Phillip Kunz. "Conversion: Evaluation of a Step-like Process for Problem-solving." Review of Religious Research 13 (Spring, 1972):178-84.

Snow, David A., and Cynthia L. Phillips. "The Lofland-Stark Conversion Model: A Critical Reassessment." Social Problems 27 (Apr. 1980):430-47.

Snow, David A.; Louis A. Zurcher, Jr.; and Sheldon Ekland-Olson. "Social Networks and Social Movements: A Micro-structural Approach to Differential Recruitment." American Sociological Review 45 (Oct. 1980):787-801.

Straus, Roger A. "Religious Conversion as a Personal and Collective Accomplishment." Sociological Analysis 40 (Summer, 1979):158-65.

Vernon, Glenn M. Sociology of Religion, pp. 101-112. New York, 1962.

KAY H. SMITH

---

COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

See: Economic History of the Church

---

CORRELATION OF THE CHURCH, ADMINISTRATION

Correlation is the process of identifying the role of each part of the Church, placing each in its proper relationship to the others, and ensuring that each functions properly. The parts include doctrines and ordinances, organizations and agencies, programs and activities, meetings, and printed and audiovisual materials. All of these parts should be "fitly framed together" (Eph. 2:21). They function properly when they are connected systematically and operate in harmony and unity. Like the parts of a human body, each has its function, none is sufficient of itself, and none can usurp the tasks of others (cf. 1 Cor. 12:12–28; D&C 84:108–110).

Correlation is a unifying process in which each organization of the Church subordinates limited views to the good of the whole Church. It is not censorship in the sense of inhibiting or channeling free expression and creativity. Rather, it is the way the Church ensures suitable and effective use of its resources.

Correlation serves under the direction of the First Presidency and the Twelve. It provides order to the many parts of the Church (cf. 1 Cor. 14:40; D&C 28:13; 107:84; 132:8) and systematic reviews of proposed action (cf. Matt. 18:16; D&C 6:28). It helps organizations avoid unnecessary duplication. Correlation ensures that Church programs, materials, and activities

- Support and strengthen families in learning and living the gospel.
- Are directed by the PRIESTHOOD.
- Use the scriptures and the words of the prophets as the basis for teaching.
- Comply with policies and meet standards approved by the COUNCIL OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY and QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.
- Are simple to comprehend and use.
- Conserve demands in effort, time, or money on Church members.
- Encourage people to use local resources whenever appropriate and authorized, rather than to make them totally dependent on Church headquarters.

When the Church was organized in 1830, its structure and operation were relatively simple. However, as the RESTORATION of the gospel unfolded, the Church grew rapidly in numbers and organizational complexity. Various Church Presidents created or adopted the following auxiliary organizations: RELIEF SOCIETY in 1842 (for women), SUNDAY SCHOOL in 1849, Young Ladies' RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION in 1869 (which developed into the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association for teaching YOUNG WOMEN), Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association in 1875 (for teaching YOUNG MEN), and PRIMARY in 1878 (for children). (See also AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS.) Church leaders also organized priesthood quorums, expanded missionary work into many countries, acquired family records to identify ancestors, constructed temples and meetinghouses, held religion classes, established schools, and implemented a program for assisting needy people.

As the programs and activities of Church organizations expanded in number and complexity, they came to have their own general and local officers, curricula, reporting systems, meetings, magazines, funding, and lines of communication.

Part of the role of correlation was to maintain order among these organizations. In 1907, the First Presidency appointed the Committee of Correlation and Adjustments; in 1908, the Correlation Committee and the General Priesthood Committee on Outlines; in 1916, the Social Advisory Committee (combined with the Correlation Committee in 1920); in 1939, the Committee of Correlation and Coordination; and in 1940, the Union Board of the Auxiliaries. Relying on the mandates found in latter-day scripture, these groups were to correlate Church organizations in their structures, curricula, activities, and meetings.

In 1960, the First Presidency directed a committee of General Authorities to review the purposes and courses of study of the priesthood and auxiliaries. The work of this committee laid the foundation for present-day correlation efforts. The committee identified the purposes of each organization from its inception, traced its expansions and changes, and reviewed its courses of study and activities. On the basis of the committee's recommendations, the First Presidency established three coordinating committees in 1961—one for children, one for youth, and one for adults—and a coordinating council that directed the activities of the three committees. The council and committees, each headed by a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, were to correlate the instructional and activity programs of priesthood quorums, auxiliaries, and other Church agencies.

By 1962, the Church had organized its curricula and activities around three groups: children, youth, and adults. In 1965, it introduced a FAMILY HOME EVENING program with a study manual for families to learn gospel principles and values in their homes. By 1971, the Church had reformatted its magazines by age group rather than by organization—Ensign for adults, New Era for youth, and Friend for children.

In 1972, the First Presidency created the Department of Internal Communications to plan, correlate, prepare, translate, print, and distribute instructional materials and periodicals. As part of this reorganization, the First Presidency created the Correlation Department and placed all organizations, curricula, and periodicals under the direction of the priesthood.

In 1979 the Church published its own edition of the Bible in English, using the text of the King James Version. New editions of the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price were published in 1981.

The Church instituted a consolidated meeting schedule in 1980 to decrease the time required for meetings and allow more time for family instruction and activities, placing most local Sabbath meetings within a three-hour period.

Strengthening priesthood direction, the First Presidency organized the First Quorum of the SEVENTY in 1975 and, in 1980, assigned its Presidents to be executive directors of departments at Church headquarters. In 1984, the First Presidency appointed AREA PRESIDENCIES from the Quorums of the Seventy to supervise the affairs of the Church in assigned areas of the world.

In 1987, the First Presidency restated the role of correlation: All proposed official Churchwide materials, programs, and activities must be submitted for evaluation by the Correlation Department. Moreover, no proposed item could be developed under Church auspices or placed in formally authorized use without written direction to do so from the Council of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve.

During the 1990s, the focus of Church correlation shifted from maintaining order among Church entities to simplifying and reducing programs and materials, and to limiting volume, complexity, and cost.

Church leaders have determined that excessively complex and expensive programs and materials can impede taking the gospel to "all nations, kindreds, tongues and people" (D&C 42:58). As the Church grows in developing areas of the world, it will include many members who have limited education and resources.

The present (1990) correlation process at Church headquarters permits representatives of departments and auxiliaries to propose annually the materials, programs, and activities they want to have considered. An originator proceeds with a proposed item only after it has appropriate concept and final production approval.

From Church headquarters, all communications are transmitted through a single priesthood line from the First Presidency and Council of the Twelve to STAKES and WARDS and thereby to families and individuals.

In local stakes and wards (congregations), leaders correlate programs and activities through councils whose members represent everyone within stake or ward boundaries. These councils ensure that Church programs and resources are available to the people to help them learn and live the principles of the gospel.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Church News*. Oct. 21, 1961, p. 3; Jan. 20, 1962, pp. 6, 14; Dec. 5, 1970, p. 3; Jan. 8, 1972, p. 3.
- Cowan, Richard O. Priesthood Programs of the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- First Presidency letters. June 7, 1922; Mar. 24, 1960; Apr. 10, 1973; Jan. 15, 1976; June 7, 1978; Apr. 15, 1981; June 30, 1987; June 15, 1989.
- Lee, Harold B. "The Plan of Coordination Explained." IE 65 (Jan. 1962):34-37.
- . "Report from the Correlation Committee." IE 65 (Dec. 1962):936-41.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

---

COUNCIL BLUFFS (KANESVILLE), IOWA

Between 1846 and 1852, Council Bluffs, then known as Kanesville, was the headquarters for a substantial LDS presence in western Iowa. During the exodus from Illinois to the Rocky Mountains in the late 1840s, thousands of Latter-day Saints wintered at the Missouri River. After many proceeded westward, WINTER QUARTERS, their original headquarters on the western bank, was abandoned in early 1848 in response to governmental pressure to leave Indian lands. Latter-day Saints who had not gone west relocated on the east bank of the river, in Iowa.

The new townsite was laid out in December 1847, on what originally had been Henry W. Miller's encampment on Indian Creek, in a hollow below the east bluffs of the Missouri River. That same month, Brigham YOUNG was sustained as PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH in a reorganization of the FIRST PRESIDENCY in Kanesville. The new town of Kanesville took its name from a non-Mormon emissary of U.S. President James K.

instructional materials and periodicals. As part of this reorganization, the First Presidency created the Correlation Department and placed all organizations, curricula, and periodicals under the direction of the priesthood.

In 1979 the Church published its own edition of the Bible in English, using the text of the King James Version. New editions of the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price were published in 1981.

The Church instituted a consolidated meeting schedule in 1980 to decrease the time required for meetings and allow more time for family instruction and activities, placing most local Sabbath meetings within a three-hour period.

Strengthening priesthood direction, the First Presidency organized the First Quorum of the SEVENTY in 1975 and, in 1980, assigned its Presidents to be executive directors of departments at Church headquarters. In 1984, the First Presidency appointed AREA PRESIDENCIES from the Quorums of the Seventy to supervise the affairs of the Church in assigned areas of the world.

In 1987, the First Presidency restated the role of correlation: All proposed official Churchwide materials, programs, and activities must be submitted for evaluation by the Correlation Department. Moreover, no proposed item could be developed under Church auspices or placed in formally authorized use without written direction to do so from the Council of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve.

During the 1990s, the focus of Church correlation shifted from maintaining order among Church entities to simplifying and reducing programs and materials, and to limiting volume, complexity, and cost.

Church leaders have determined that excessively complex and expensive programs and materials can impede taking the gospel to "all nations, kindreds, tongues and people" (D&C 42:58). As the Church grows in developing areas of the world, it will include many members who have limited education and resources.

The present (1990) correlation process at Church headquarters permits representatives of departments and auxiliaries to propose annually the materials, programs, and activities they want to have considered. An originator proceeds with a proposed item only after it has appropriate concept and final production approval.

From Church headquarters, all communications are transmitted through a single priesthood line from the First Presidency and Council of the Twelve to STAKES and WARDS and thereby to families and individuals.

In local stakes and wards (congregations), leaders correlate programs and activities through councils whose members represent everyone within stake or ward boundaries. These councils ensure that Church programs and resources are available to the people to help them learn and live the principles of the gospel.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Church News*. Oct. 21, 1961, p. 3; Jan. 20, 1962, pp. 6, 14; Dec. 5, 1970, p. 3; Jan. 8, 1972, p. 3.
- Cowan, Richard O. Priesthood Programs of the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- First Presidency letters. June 7, 1922; Mar. 24, 1960; Apr. 10, 1973; Jan. 15, 1976; June 7, 1978; Apr. 15, 1981; June 30, 1987; June 15, 1989.
- Lee, Harold B. "The Plan of Coordination Explained." IE 65 (Jan. 1962):34-37.
- . "Report from the Correlation Committee." IE 65 (Dec. 1962):936-41.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

---

COUNCIL BLUFFS (KANESVILLE), IOWA

Between 1846 and 1852, Council Bluffs, then known as Kanesville, was the headquarters for a substantial LDS presence in western Iowa. During the exodus from Illinois to the Rocky Mountains in the late 1840s, thousands of Latter-day Saints wintered at the Missouri River. After many proceeded westward, WINTER QUARTERS, their original headquarters on the western bank, was abandoned in early 1848 in response to governmental pressure to leave Indian lands. Latter-day Saints who had not gone west relocated on the east bank of the river, in Iowa.

The new townsite was laid out in December 1847, on what originally had been Henry W. Miller's encampment on Indian Creek, in a hollow below the east bluffs of the Missouri River. That same month, Brigham YOUNG was sustained as PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH in a reorganization of the FIRST PRESIDENCY in Kanesville. The new town of Kanesville took its name from a non-Mormon emissary of U.S. President James K.

Polk, Colonel Thomas L. KANE, who had proven himself a friend of the Latter-day Saints.

President Brigham Young assigned Orson HYDE of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to remain in Kanesville to supervise the movement of Latter-day Saints to the West as quickly as possible. The town's location on the Missouri River was particularly advantageous for several thousand British converts who had postponed their migration to America until a new gathering place and headquarters in the West had been established. By sailing to New Orleans, steamboating to St. Louis, and then upriver to Kanesville, these immigrants were spared the rigors of overland travel at least that far.

At one time, as many as thirty-one small encampments were clustered in and about Kanesville. At its height, Kanesville consisted of 350 log cabins, two log tabernacles, a post office, and numerous shops, stores, and other business establishments. Wheat, corn, and many vegetables thrived then, as they do today, in the rich riverbed soil near the bluffs. The town's most pressing problem, to provide adequate food, shelter, employment, and wagon outfits for large numbers of poor immigrants "passing through," was made easier by the California Gold Rush of 1849–1851, which resulted in a boom for Kanesville and other outfitting towns. The gold rush greatly expedited LDS migration while transforming Kanesville from a Mormon into a "Gentile" town.

By the summer of 1852, more than 12,000 Latter-day Saints—6,100 from Great Britain alone—had traveled west via Kanesville, ending the period of concentrated LDS presence in the area. In December 1853, non-LDS residents incorporated Kanesville and renamed it Council Bluffs, in memory of Lewis and Clark's council with the Indians in 1804 on or near the city site.

Kanesville is also remembered as the place where Oliver COWDERY was rebaptized by Orson Hyde in November 1848, ending years of estrangement from the Church he had helped organize in 1830.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Aitchison, Clyde B. "The Mormon Settlements in the Missouri Valley." The Quarterly of the Oregon Historical Society 8 (1907):276–89.
- Bennett, Richard E. Mormons at the Missouri 1846–1852. Norman, Okla., 1987.
- Webb, Lynn Robert. "The Contributions of the Temporary Settlements Garden Grove, Mount Pisgah and Kanesville, Iowa, to Mormon Emigration, 1846–1852." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1954.

Wyman, Walker D. "Council Bluffs and the Westward Movement." Iowa Journal of History 47 (Apr. 1949):99–118.

RICHARD E. BENNETT

---

COUNCIL OF FIFTY

The Council of Fifty, a council formed in Nauvoo in 1844, provided a pattern of political government under PRIESTHOOD and REVELATION. It was, to its members, the nucleus or focus of God's latter-day kingdom.

Old Testament prophecy speaks of a stone "cut out of the mountain without hands" that will roll forth to fill the whole earth (Dan. 2:44–45). Joseph Smith and his associates believed that the "little stone" represented in part a political kingdom similar to the other kingdoms referred to by DANIEL. Joseph Smith taught that in this, the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES, "all things" would be set in place for Christ's return, including the basic principles and organization for a system that would govern the earth during the MILLENNIUM (JD 1:202–203; 2:189; 17:156–57).

On April 7, 1842, Joseph Smith received a revelation giving the formal name of the "Living Constitution"—or, as it came to be known by the number of its members, the Council of Fifty—and indicating that the nucleus of a government of God would be organized. Two years later, in the spring of 1844, after a small group of faithful Church leaders and members had received their TEMPLE ENDOWMENT, the Prophet formally established the Council of Fifty.

Members of the council understood its principles to be consistent with the ethics of scripture and with the protections and responsibilities of the CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES. Non-Latter-day Saints could be members (three were among the founding members), but all were to follow God's law and seek to know his will. The PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH sat as council president, with others seated according to age, beginning with the oldest. Revealed rules governed proceedings, including one that required that decisions be unanimous.

The council had some practical responsibilities for organizing Joseph Smith's presidential campaign in 1844, the exodus from Nauvoo in 1845–1846 (see WESTWARD MIGRATION), and early

Polk, Colonel Thomas L. KANE, who had proven himself a friend of the Latter-day Saints.

President Brigham Young assigned Orson HYDE of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles to remain in Kanesville to supervise the movement of Latter-day Saints to the West as quickly as possible. The town's location on the Missouri River was particularly advantageous for several thousand British converts who had postponed their migration to America until a new gathering place and headquarters in the West had been established. By sailing to New Orleans, steamboating to St. Louis, and then upriver to Kanesville, these immigrants were spared the rigors of overland travel at least that far.

At one time, as many as thirty-one small encampments were clustered in and about Kanesville. At its height, Kanesville consisted of 350 log cabins, two log tabernacles, a post office, and numerous shops, stores, and other business establishments. Wheat, corn, and many vegetables thrived then, as they do today, in the rich riverbed soil near the bluffs. The town's most pressing problem, to provide adequate food, shelter, employment, and wagon outfits for large numbers of poor immigrants "passing through," was made easier by the California Gold Rush of 1849–1851, which resulted in a boom for Kanesville and other outfitting towns. The gold rush greatly expedited LDS migration while transforming Kanesville from a Mormon into a "Gentile" town.

By the summer of 1852, more than 12,000 Latter-day Saints—6,100 from Great Britain alone—had traveled west via Kanesville, ending the period of concentrated LDS presence in the area. In December 1853, non-LDS residents incorporated Kanesville and renamed it Council Bluffs, in memory of Lewis and Clark's council with the Indians in 1804 on or near the city site.

Kanesville is also remembered as the place where Oliver COWDERY was rebaptized by Orson Hyde in November 1848, ending years of estrangement from the Church he had helped organize in 1830.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Aitchison, Clyde B. "The Mormon Settlements in the Missouri Valley." The Quarterly of the Oregon Historical Society 8 (1907):276–89.
- Bennett, Richard E. Mormons at the Missouri 1846–1852. Norman, Okla., 1987.
- Webb, Lynn Robert. "The Contributions of the Temporary Settlements Garden Grove, Mount Pisgah and Kanesville, Iowa, to Mormon Emigration, 1846–1852." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1954.

Wyman, Walker D. "Council Bluffs and the Westward Movement." Iowa Journal of History 47 (Apr. 1949):99–118.

RICHARD E. BENNETT

---

COUNCIL OF FIFTY

The Council of Fifty, a council formed in Nauvoo in 1844, provided a pattern of political government under PRIESTHOOD and REVELATION. It was, to its members, the nucleus or focus of God's latter-day kingdom.

Old Testament prophecy speaks of a stone "cut out of the mountain without hands" that will roll forth to fill the whole earth (Dan. 2:44–45). Joseph Smith and his associates believed that the "little stone" represented in part a political kingdom similar to the other kingdoms referred to by DANIEL. Joseph Smith taught that in this, the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES, "all things" would be set in place for Christ's return, including the basic principles and organization for a system that would govern the earth during the MILLENNIUM (JD 1:202–203; 2:189; 17:156–57).

On April 7, 1842, Joseph Smith received a revelation giving the formal name of the "Living Constitution"—or, as it came to be known by the number of its members, the Council of Fifty—and indicating that the nucleus of a government of God would be organized. Two years later, in the spring of 1844, after a small group of faithful Church leaders and members had received their TEMPLE ENDOWMENT, the Prophet formally established the Council of Fifty.

Members of the council understood its principles to be consistent with the ethics of scripture and with the protections and responsibilities of the CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES. Non-Latter-day Saints could be members (three were among the founding members), but all were to follow God's law and seek to know his will. The PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH sat as council president, with others seated according to age, beginning with the oldest. Revealed rules governed proceedings, including one that required that decisions be unanimous.

The council had some practical responsibilities for organizing Joseph Smith's presidential campaign in 1844, the exodus from Nauvoo in 1845–1846 (see WESTWARD MIGRATION), and early government in the Great Basin. But what interested council members most was, not their specific duties, but the expectation that the council represented something much larger: it was a working demonstration of the principles and pattern for a future KINGDOM OF GOD on earth. The Church already had a well-developed apocalyptic outlook, including belief in the latter-day collapse of existing governments before Christ's return. In this framework, the Council of Fifty was viewed as the seed of a new political order that would rule, under Christ, following the prophesied cataclysmic events of the last days.

The council, therefore, did not challenge existing systems of law and government (even in Nauvoo), but functioned more as a private organization learning to operate in a pluralistic society. Its exercise of actual political power was modest, but provided a symbol of the future theocratic kingdom of God. Always, the Fifty functioned under the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, who were also members of the council.

After the westward migration and the early pioneer period, the Council of Fifty largely disappeared as a functioning body, except for a brief resurgence during John TAYLOR's presidency when the Church again faced intense political challenges. Still, the Saints found consolation in the belief that one day, when the Savior returned, the Council of Fifty, or a council based on its principles, would rise again to govern the world under the King of Kings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Andrus, Hyrum L. Joseph Smith and World Government. Salt Lake City, 1958.
- Ehat, Andrew F. "It Seems Like Heaven Began on Earth: Joseph Smith and the Constitution of the Kingdom of God." BYU Studies 20 (Spring 1980):253-79.
- Hansen, Klaus J. Quest for Empire. East Lansing, Mich., 1967.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "The Council of Fifty and Its Members, 1844 to 1945." BYU Studies 20 (Winter 1980):163-97.

KENNETH W. GODFREY

---

COUNCIL OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND THE QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES

Each week the two presiding quorums of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints meet jointly as the Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. Meeting in a room in the Salt Lake Temple, this council discusses and decides all major Church appointments and policy matters.

The presiding members in this council are the FIRST PRESIDENCY, consisting of the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, who has ultimate authority for all matters in the Church, and his counselors, who assist him in directing the affairs of the Church. The Council also includes the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. The members of these two quorums are the only men on earth who hold all the KEYS, or authorization, of the priesthood, and only they are sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators for the Church.

N. Eldon Tanner, counselor to four Church Presidents, said, "It is in this body [the Council] that any change in administration or policy is considered and approved, and it then becomes the official policy of the Church" (Tanner, 1979, p. 47). Responsibilities of the Council include such matters as approval of new bishops; changes in ward, stake, mission, and temple boundaries and organizations; and approval of general officers and central administration of the auxiliary organizations of the Church, such as the Primary, Sunday School, and Relief Society.

The order and procedure of the Council are rarely discussed in public, but can be inferred from published accounts of the process by which a revelation was announced in 1978. After a considerable period of prayer and discussion among the General Authorities, President Spencer W. KIMBALL felt inspired to extend eligibility for the priesthood to all worthy male members of the Church. He first presented it to his counselors, who accepted and approved it, and then to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in the Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. The same inspiration came to the members of the Council, who then approved it unanimously (McConkie, p. 128). After the Council had sustained the President in this action, the revelation was subsequently presented to all other GENERAL AUTHORITIES and to the general membership of the Church, who approved it unanimously (Tanner, 1978).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. "The New Revelation on Priesthood." In Priesthood. Salt Lake City, 1981.

government in the Great Basin. But what interested council members most was, not their specific duties, but the expectation that the council represented something much larger: it was a working demonstration of the principles and pattern for a future KINGDOM OF GOD on earth. The Church already had a well-developed apocalyptic outlook, including belief in the latter-day collapse of existing governments before Christ's return. In this framework, the Council of Fifty was viewed as the seed of a new political order that would rule, under Christ, following the prophesied cataclysmic events of the last days.

The council, therefore, did not challenge existing systems of law and government (even in Nauvoo), but functioned more as a private organization learning to operate in a pluralistic society. Its exercise of actual political power was modest, but provided a symbol of the future theocratic kingdom of God. Always, the Fifty functioned under the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, who were also members of the council.

After the westward migration and the early pioneer period, the Council of Fifty largely disappeared as a functioning body, except for a brief resurgence during John TAYLOR's presidency when the Church again faced intense political challenges. Still, the Saints found consolation in the belief that one day, when the Savior returned, the Council of Fifty, or a council based on its principles, would rise again to govern the world under the King of Kings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Andrus, Hyrum L. Joseph Smith and World Government. Salt Lake City, 1958.
- Ehat, Andrew F. "It Seems Like Heaven Began on Earth: Joseph Smith and the Constitution of the Kingdom of God." BYU Studies 20 (Spring 1980):253-79.
- Hansen, Klaus J. Quest for Empire. East Lansing, Mich., 1967.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "The Council of Fifty and Its Members, 1844 to 1945." BYU Studies 20 (Winter 1980):163-97.

KENNETH W. GODFREY

---

COUNCIL OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND THE QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES

Each week the two presiding quorums of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints meet jointly as the Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. Meeting in a room in the Salt Lake Temple, this council discusses and decides all major Church appointments and policy matters.

The presiding members in this council are the FIRST PRESIDENCY, consisting of the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, who has ultimate authority for all matters in the Church, and his counselors, who assist him in directing the affairs of the Church. The Council also includes the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. The members of these two quorums are the only men on earth who hold all the KEYS, or authorization, of the priesthood, and only they are sustained as prophets, seers, and revelators for the Church.

N. Eldon Tanner, counselor to four Church Presidents, said, "It is in this body [the Council] that any change in administration or policy is considered and approved, and it then becomes the official policy of the Church" (Tanner, 1979, p. 47). Responsibilities of the Council include such matters as approval of new bishops; changes in ward, stake, mission, and temple boundaries and organizations; and approval of general officers and central administration of the auxiliary organizations of the Church, such as the Primary, Sunday School, and Relief Society.

The order and procedure of the Council are rarely discussed in public, but can be inferred from published accounts of the process by which a revelation was announced in 1978. After a considerable period of prayer and discussion among the General Authorities, President Spencer W. KIMBALL felt inspired to extend eligibility for the priesthood to all worthy male members of the Church. He first presented it to his counselors, who accepted and approved it, and then to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles in the Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. The same inspiration came to the members of the Council, who then approved it unanimously (McConkie, p. 128). After the Council had sustained the President in this action, the revelation was subsequently presented to all other GENERAL AUTHORITIES and to the general membership of the Church, who approved it unanimously (Tanner, 1978).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. "The New Revelation on Priesthood." In Priesthood. Salt Lake City, 1981.

The Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (as of 1898–1901). On floor: Matthias F. Cowley, Abraham O. Woodruff. Seated (left to right): Brigham Young, Jr., George Q. Cannon, President Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, Franklin D. Richards. Standing (left to right): Anthon H. Lund, John W. Taylor, John Henry Smith, Heber J. Grant, Francis M. Lyman, George Teasdale, Marriner W. Merrill.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "Revelation on Priesthood Accepted, Church Officers Sustained." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):16–17.

———. "The Administration of the Church." Ensign 9 (Nov. 1979):42–48.

W. KEITH WARNER

COUNCIL IN HEAVEN

The Council in Heaven, sometimes called the Grand Council, refers to a meeting of God the Father with his spirit sons and daughters to discuss the terms and conditions by which these spirits could come to earth as physical beings. The terms "Council in Heaven" and "Grand Council" do not appear in the scriptures, but are used by the Prophet Joseph SMITH in referring to these pre-mortal activities, allusions to which are found in many scriptures (Job 38:4–7; Jer. 1:5; Rev. 12:3–7; Alma 13:3–9; D&C 29:36–38; 76:25–29; Moses 4:1–4; Abr. 3:23–28; cf. TPJS, pp. 348–49, 357, 365; T&S 4 [Feb. 1, 1843]:82).

One purpose of the heavenly council was to allow the spirits the opportunity to accept or reject the Father's PLAN OF SALVATION, which proposed that an earth be created whereon his spirit children could dwell, each in a PHYSICAL BODY. Such a life would serve as a probationary state "to see if they [would] do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them" (Abr. 3:25). The spirits of all mankind were free to accept or reject

The Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (as of 1898–1901). On floor: Matthias F. Cowley, Abraham O. Woodruff. Seated (left to right): Brigham Young, Jr., George Q. Cannon, President Lorenzo Snow, Joseph F. Smith, Franklin D. Richards. Standing (left to right): Anthon H. Lund, John W. Taylor, John Henry Smith, Heber J. Grant, Francis M. Lyman, George Teasdale, Marriner W. Merrill.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "Revelation on Priesthood Accepted, Church Officers Sustained." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):16–17.

———. "The Administration of the Church." Ensign 9 (Nov. 1979):42–48.

W. KEITH WARNER

COUNCIL IN HEAVEN

The Council in Heaven, sometimes called the Grand Council, refers to a meeting of God the Father with his spirit sons and daughters to discuss the terms and conditions by which these spirits could come to earth as physical beings. The terms "Council in Heaven" and "Grand Council" do not appear in the scriptures, but are used by the Prophet Joseph SMITH in referring to these pre-mortal activities, allusions to which are found in many scriptures (Job 38:4–7; Jer. 1:5; Rev. 12:3–7; Alma 13:3–9; D&C 29:36–38; 76:25–29; Moses 4:1–4; Abr. 3:23–28; cf. TPJS, pp. 348–49, 357, 365; T&S 4 [Feb. 1, 1843]:82).

One purpose of the heavenly council was to allow the spirits the opportunity to accept or reject the Father's PLAN OF SALVATION, which proposed that an earth be created whereon his spirit children could dwell, each in a PHYSICAL BODY. Such a life would serve as a probationary state "to see if they [would] do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them" (Abr. 3:25). The spirits of all mankind were free to accept or reject the Father's plan but they were also responsible for their choice. The Creation, the Fall, mortality, the Atonement, the Resurrection, and the Final Judgment were contemplated and explained in the council (TPJS, p. 220, 348–50; MD, pp. 163–64; see also FIRST ESTATE). The plan anticipated mistakes from inexperience and sin and provided remedies. Many spirits were foreordained to specific roles and missions during their mortal experience, conditional upon their willingness and faithfulness in the premortal sphere and their promised continued faithfulness upon the earth. The Prophet Joseph Smith explained, "Every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of heaven before this world was. I suppose I was ordained to this very office in that Grand Council" (TPJS, p. 365; cf. 1 Pet. 1:20; Jer. 1:5; Abr. 3:22–23).

Although spoken of as a single council, there may have been multiple meetings where the gospel was taught and appointments were made. Jesus and the prophets were foreordained in the council. A redeemer was to perform a twofold mission in redeeming mankind from the physical and spiritual deaths brought about by the FALL OF ADAM and also in providing redemption, upon repentance, for sins committed by individuals. At a certain point in the council, the Father asked, "Whom shall I send [as the Redeemer]?" Jesus Christ, known then as the great I AM and as Jehovah, answered, "Here am I, send me," and agreed to follow the Father's plan (Moses 4:1–4; Abr. 3:27). As a counter-measure, Lucifer offered himself and an amendment to the Father's plan of saving mankind that would not respect their AGENCY. The substitute proposal was also designed to exalt Lucifer above the throne of God. The Father's response was, "I will send the first" (meaning Jehovah). Lucifer rebelled and became Satan, or "the devil." A division developed among the spirits, and no spirits were neutral (DS 1:65–66). There was WAR IN HEAVEN (Rev. 12:7–8), and the third of the hosts who followed Lucifer were cast out (Rev. 12:4; D&C 29:36). These rebellious spirits, along with Lucifer, were thrust down to the earth without physical bodies (Rev. 12:9; cf. Isa. 14:12–17). The Prophet Joseph Smith explained: "The contention in heaven was—Jesus said there would be certain souls that would not be saved; and the devil said he could save them all, and laid his plans before the grand council, who gave their vote in favor of Jesus Christ. So the devil rose up in rebellion against God, and was cast down, with all who put up their heads for him" (TPJS, p. 357). Heavenly Father and the faithful spirits in heaven wept over them (D&C 76:25–29). Satan and his followers are still at war with those spirits who have been born into mortality (Rev. 12:9; cf. "War in Heaven," p. 788).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bible Dictionary. "War in Heaven." In LDS Edition of the King James Version of the Bible, p. 788. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- McConkie, Joseph F. "Premortal Existence, Forcinations and Heavenly Councils." In Apocryphal Writings and the Latter-day Saints, ed. W. Griggs, pp. 173–98. Provo, Utah, 1986.

JOHN L. LUND

---

COURTS

See: Disciplinary Procedures

---

COURTS, ECCLESIASTICAL, NINETEENTH-CENTURY

In the nineteenth century, the LDS court system functioned in adjudicating virtually all kinds of legal disputes among Church members. Since the late 1800s, however, the Church courts, now entitled disciplinary councils, have not been used for the arbitration of private disputes.

The scriptural basis for Church courts originated in the early 1830s. At first, elders conducted trials for determining membership status. In 1831, a bishop, designated as a "judge in Israel" (D&C 58:17), and his counselors were authorized to function as a bishop's court. In 1834, Doctrine and Covenants 102 established the HIGH COUNCIL court and its procedures for hearing original cases and appeals from bishop's courts. The high council court consists of a STAKE PRESIDENT, his two counselors, and the twelve members of the stake high council. The FIRST PRESIDENCY court is the highest available for considering appeals from high council courts (D&C 102:27).

The roles of these courts have varied. In the 1830s, years marked by rapid expansion in Church membership and extensive migration to escape persecution in Ohio and Missouri, Church courts usually provided members an easy, appropriate, the Father's plan but they were also responsible for their choice. The Creation, the Fall, mortality, the Atonement, the Resurrection, and the Final Judgment were contemplated and explained in the council (TPJS, p. 220, 348–50; MD, pp. 163–64; see also FIRST ESTATE). The plan anticipated mistakes from inexperience and sin and provided remedies. Many spirits were foreordained to specific roles and missions during their mortal experience, conditional upon their willingness and faithfulness in the premortal sphere and their promised continued faithfulness upon the earth. The Prophet Joseph Smith explained, "Every man who has a calling to minister to the inhabitants of the world was ordained to that very purpose in the Grand Council of heaven before this world was. I suppose I was ordained to this very office in that Grand Council" (TPJS, p. 365; cf. 1 Pet. 1:20; Jer. 1:5; Abr. 3:22–23).

Although spoken of as a single council, there may have been multiple meetings where the gospel was taught and appointments were made. Jesus and the prophets were foreordained in the council. A redeemer was to perform a twofold mission in redeeming mankind from the physical and spiritual deaths brought about by the FALL OF ADAM and also in providing redemption, upon repentance, for sins committed by individuals. At a certain point in the council, the Father asked, "Whom shall I send [as the Redeemer]?" Jesus Christ, known then as the great I AM and as Jehovah, answered, "Here am I, send me," and agreed to follow the Father's plan (Moses 4:1–4; Abr. 3:27). As a counter-measure, Lucifer offered himself and an amendment to the Father's plan of saving mankind that would not respect their AGENCY. The substitute proposal was also designed to exalt Lucifer above the throne of God. The Father's response was, "I will send the first" (meaning Jehovah). Lucifer rebelled and became Satan, or "the devil." A division developed among the spirits, and no spirits were neutral (DS 1:65–66). There was WAR IN HEAVEN (Rev. 12:7–8), and the third of the hosts who followed Lucifer were cast out (Rev. 12:4; D&C 29:36). These rebellious spirits, along with Lucifer, were thrust down to the earth without physical bodies (Rev. 12:9; cf. Isa. 14:12–17). The Prophet Joseph Smith explained: "The contention in heaven was—Jesus said there would be certain souls that would not be saved; and the devil said he could save them all, and laid his plans before the grand council, who gave their vote in favor of Jesus Christ. So the devil rose up in rebellion against God, and was cast down, with all who put up their heads for him" (TPJS, p. 357). Heavenly Father and the faithful spirits in heaven wept over them (D&C 76:25–29). Satan and his followers are still at war with those spirits who have been born into mortality (Rev. 12:9; cf. "War in Heaven," p. 788).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bible Dictionary. "War in Heaven." In LDS Edition of the King James Version of the Bible, p. 788. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- McConkie, Joseph F. "Premortal Existence, Forcinations and Heavenly Councils." In Apocryphal Writings and the Latter-day Saints, ed. W. Griggs, pp. 173–98. Provo, Utah, 1986.

JOHN L. LUND

---

COURTS

See: Disciplinary Procedures

---

COURTS, ECCLESIASTICAL, NINETEENTH-CENTURY

In the nineteenth century, the LDS court system functioned in adjudicating virtually all kinds of legal disputes among Church members. Since the late 1800s, however, the Church courts, now entitled disciplinary councils, have not been used for the arbitration of private disputes.

The scriptural basis for Church courts originated in the early 1830s. At first, elders conducted trials for determining membership status. In 1831, a bishop, designated as a "judge in Israel" (D&C 58:17), and his counselors were authorized to function as a bishop's court. In 1834, Doctrine and Covenants 102 established the HIGH COUNCIL court and its procedures for hearing original cases and appeals from bishop's courts. The high council court consists of a STAKE PRESIDENT, his two counselors, and the twelve members of the stake high council. The FIRST PRESIDENCY court is the highest available for considering appeals from high council courts (D&C 102:27).

The roles of these courts have varied. In the 1830s, years marked by rapid expansion in Church membership and extensive migration to escape persecution in Ohio and Missouri, Church courts usually provided members an easy, appropriate, and friendly forum for settling non-Church related disputes. Then for several years prior to the NAUVOO CHARTER, and again in the westward migration until 1850, Church courts pronounced, enforced, and adjudicated a full range of civil and criminal ordinances. Thereafter, until the passage of the Poland Act (1874), Church courts continued to handle civil disputes even though alternative courts were available through the federal territorial government (judges appointed by the president of the United States) and through the county probate judges (appointed by the territorial legislature). Probate judges were almost always Mormon PRIESTHOOD leaders, including local stake presidents and bishops, and the probate courts had broad powers over all criminal and civil court matters in addition to normal probate functions. During this period, however, Church courts handled most disputes between members of the Church. Latter-day Saints turned to the county probate courts mostly in criminal actions, in actions against non-Mormons, and when it was important to obtain a formal court decree.

With passage in 1874 of the Poland Act and with the Supreme Court decision in Reynolds v. United States (1879), the federal assault on Mormon polygamy intensified, and the Church courts provided the only forum to assist wives and children in settling disputes with their polygamous husbands and fathers. Government courts could offer little assistance because polygamous marriages were outside the law.

In the nineteenth century members used Church courts in private disputes largely because of the principle of exclusive jurisdiction widely enforced by the Church. Applying this principle, leaders used sermons and scripture to encourage members to avoid the civil courts; they also imposed disfellowshipment or excommunication on members who sued another member in the civil courts. Thus non-Mormons initiated most of the cases in the civil courts of the UTAH TERRITORY even though the population was overwhelmingly Mormon.

After Utah acquired statehood in 1896, a regular state court system was instituted. Thereafter the Church court system ceased to consider temporal disputes.

Historically, at all times, many Church court cases have involved sexual offenses. In the early Utah decades land disputes were adjudicated by Church courts because the bishops had allocated land holdings to members according to their needs and abilities to put the land into productive use. In deciding contract matters, the main objective was reconciliation of brothers and sisters in the gospel. In such cases, Church courts gave weight to the likely outcome of a similar dispute in civil court. However, they never felt strictly bound by common law precedents; they used inspiration, custom, scripture, and ecclesiastical instructions to reach equitable solutions with reconciliation and benefit to the entire community as the guiding objectives.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Firmage, Edwin B., and Richard C. Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Chicago, 1988.
- Leone, Mark P. "Ecclesiastical Courts: Inventing Labels and Enforcing Definitions." Roots of Modern Mormonism. Cambridge, Mass., 1979.
- Swenson, Raymond T. "Resolution of Civil Disputes by Mormon Ecclesiastical Courts." Utah Law Review (1978):573–95.

JAMES H. BACKMAN

---

COVENANT ISRAEL, LATTER-DAY

God established a COVENANT with ABRAHAM, reaffirming it with Isaac and Jacob and then with the children of Israel. In the LDS view, this covenant has been renewed repeatedly and then breached, largely because God's people, after receiving his COMMANDMENTS and promises, have fallen into APOSTASY and disbelief. Today, as prophesied anciently, this covenant has been restored through the Prophet Joseph SMITH and is included in the NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT of the gospel (D&C 22:1; cf. Jer. 31:31–34; 32:36–40).

The term "Covenant Israel" refers to ancient Israel, to the New Testament era, and to modern times. Anciently God stated, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee [Abraham] and thy seed after thee . . . for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed" (Gen. 17:7). Yet this covenant was conditional. Those who would be "his people" had to prove themselves through obedience and faithful commitment to the laws and ORDINANCES of the covenant (cf. Abr. 2:6–11). Later, Jehovah said through Moses, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above and friendly forum for settling non-Church related disputes. Then for several years prior to the NAUVOO CHARTER, and again in the westward migration until 1850, Church courts pronounced, enforced, and adjudicated a full range of civil and criminal ordinances. Thereafter, until the passage of the Poland Act (1874), Church courts continued to handle civil disputes even though alternative courts were available through the federal territorial government (judges appointed by the president of the United States) and through the county probate judges (appointed by the territorial legislature). Probate judges were almost always Mormon PRIESTHOOD leaders, including local stake presidents and bishops, and the probate courts had broad powers over all criminal and civil court matters in addition to normal probate functions. During this period, however, Church courts handled most disputes between members of the Church. Latter-day Saints turned to the county probate courts mostly in criminal actions, in actions against non-Mormons, and when it was important to obtain a formal court decree.

With passage in 1874 of the Poland Act and with the Supreme Court decision in Reynolds v. United States (1879), the federal assault on Mormon polygamy intensified, and the Church courts provided the only forum to assist wives and children in settling disputes with their polygamous husbands and fathers. Government courts could offer little assistance because polygamous marriages were outside the law.

In the nineteenth century members used Church courts in private disputes largely because of the principle of exclusive jurisdiction widely enforced by the Church. Applying this principle, leaders used sermons and scripture to encourage members to avoid the civil courts; they also imposed disfellowshipment or excommunication on members who sued another member in the civil courts. Thus non-Mormons initiated most of the cases in the civil courts of the UTAH TERRITORY even though the population was overwhelmingly Mormon.

After Utah acquired statehood in 1896, a regular state court system was instituted. Thereafter the Church court system ceased to consider temporal disputes.

Historically, at all times, many Church court cases have involved sexual offenses. In the early Utah decades land disputes were adjudicated by Church courts because the bishops had allocated land holdings to members according to their needs and abilities to put the land into productive use. In deciding contract matters, the main objective was reconciliation of brothers and sisters in the gospel. In such cases, Church courts gave weight to the likely outcome of a similar dispute in civil court. However, they never felt strictly bound by common law precedents; they used inspiration, custom, scripture, and ecclesiastical instructions to reach equitable solutions with reconciliation and benefit to the entire community as the guiding objectives.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Firmage, Edwin B., and Richard C. Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Chicago, 1988.
- Leone, Mark P. "Ecclesiastical Courts: Inventing Labels and Enforcing Definitions." Roots of Modern Mormonism. Cambridge, Mass., 1979.
- Swenson, Raymond T. "Resolution of Civil Disputes by Mormon Ecclesiastical Courts." Utah Law Review (1978):573–95.

JAMES H. BACKMAN

---

COVENANT ISRAEL, LATTER-DAY

God established a COVENANT with ABRAHAM, reaffirming it with Isaac and Jacob and then with the children of Israel. In the LDS view, this covenant has been renewed repeatedly and then breached, largely because God's people, after receiving his COMMANDMENTS and promises, have fallen into APOSTASY and disbelief. Today, as prophesied anciently, this covenant has been restored through the Prophet Joseph SMITH and is included in the NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT of the gospel (D&C 22:1; cf. Jer. 31:31–34; 32:36–40).

The term "Covenant Israel" refers to ancient Israel, to the New Testament era, and to modern times. Anciently God stated, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee [Abraham] and thy seed after thee . . . for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed" (Gen. 17:7). Yet this covenant was conditional. Those who would be "his people" had to prove themselves through obedience and faithful commitment to the laws and ORDINANCES of the covenant (cf. Abr. 2:6–11). Later, Jehovah said through Moses, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people. . . . And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Ex. 19:5–6).

Because ancient Israel rejected God's word and thereby lost his promises, the prophet Hosea warned:

The Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, . . . my people are destroyed. . . . I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children [Hosea 4:1–6; cf. Amos 8:11–12; Isa. 24:1–6; Jer. 2:11–13].

In New Testament times, Jesus Christ lamented a similar apostasy: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens, . . . and ye would not!" (Matt. 23:37–38; cf. 3 Ne. 10:4–6). Covenant Israel was meant to be expanded in Old Testament times (Abr. 2:9–11; 1 Ne. 17:36–40), and again in the New Testament era, to include all followers of Christ, both literal descendants of Abraham and GENTILES who became part of Abraham's lineage by adoption. "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham . . . . For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:7, 27–29; cf. Rom. 4:12–13; Eph. 2:11–12).

The same doctrine applies today: Membership in latter-day covenant Israel, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is not limited to a certain lineage but is open to all who willingly accept and abide by its covenantal terms through the LAW OF ADOPTION. Latter-day Saints accept God's covenant with Abraham and his lineage, a covenant reestablished at the time of Joseph Smith (D&C 110:12). Known as the "new and everlasting covenant" (D&C 22:1; Jer. 31:31–34; 32:36–40), it is included in the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is considered "new" in each age when it is given to God's people, yet it is "everlasting" because the conditions and promises never change. Further, covenant Israel implies a community willing to accept God's complete law, which is based in latter-day revelation of the same covenant that was revealed in the Old and New Testaments. This requires an acknowledgment that God has spoken to both ancient and latter-day prophets and continues to do so.

Covenants and accompanying ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ are the essence of religious life. LDS teaching holds that all of God's commandments are based in covenant. Thus the ordinances of BAPTISM, receiving the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, and the SACRAMENT, as well as keeping the SABBATH DAY holy and TEMPLE WORSHIP—including eternal marriage—embody covenants with promises, obligations, and opportunities for blessings. These covenants are mutual promises between God in heaven and men and women on earth. Those willing to abide by such agreements are considered part of covenant Israel, with all the attendant blessings and opportunities. Thus the Church teaches that any law or commandment from God to his children, that helps ensure their SALVATION and ETERNAL LIFE is part of the "everlasting covenant."

The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that "the ancients . . . obtained from God promises of such weight and glory, that our hearts are often filled with gratitude that we are even permitted to look upon them. . . . If we are the children of the Most High, . . . and embrace the same covenant that they embraced, and are faithful to the testimony of our Lord as they were, we can approach the Father in the name of Christ as they approached Him, and for ourselves obtain the same promises" (TPJS, pp. 65–66).

[See also Abrahamic Covenant.]

JAMES B. MAYFIELD

COVENANTS

The word "covenant" in the Bible is a translation of the Hebrew berith and of the Greek diathēkē. The Book of Mormon concept seems close to the Hebrew indication of any formalized relation between two parties, such as a bond, pact, or agreement. As such, the term is used for nonaggression pacts between nations (Gen. 26:26–31), a promise of land-ownership (Gen. 15:18–21), a bond for free slaves (Jer. 34:8–9), or an oath of secrecy (2 Kgs. 11:4). The Greek diathēkē is a more legalistic term, implying a formal will, a legal bequest (Gal. 3:17). In the New Testament the term is often translated as all people. . . . And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Ex. 19:5–6).

Because ancient Israel rejected God's word and thereby lost his promises, the prophet Hosea warned:

The Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, . . . my people are destroyed. . . . I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children [Hosea 4:1–6; cf. Amos 8:11–12; Isa. 24:1–6; Jer. 2:11–13].

In New Testament times, Jesus Christ lamented a similar apostasy: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens, . . . and ye would not!" (Matt. 23:37–38; cf. 3 Ne. 10:4–6). Covenant Israel was meant to be expanded in Old Testament times (Abr. 2:9–11; 1 Ne. 17:36–40), and again in the New Testament era, to include all followers of Christ, both literal descendants of Abraham and GENTILES who became part of Abraham's lineage by adoption. "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham . . . . For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:7, 27–29; cf. Rom. 4:12–13; Eph. 2:11–12).

The same doctrine applies today: Membership in latter-day covenant Israel, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is not limited to a certain lineage but is open to all who willingly accept and abide by its covenantal terms through the LAW OF ADOPTION. Latter-day Saints accept God's covenant with Abraham and his lineage, a covenant reestablished at the time of Joseph Smith (D&C 110:12). Known as the "new and everlasting covenant" (D&C 22:1; Jer. 31:31–34; 32:36–40), it is included in the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is considered "new" in each age when it is given to God's people, yet it is "everlasting" because the conditions and promises never change. Further, covenant Israel implies a community willing to accept God's complete law, which is based in latter-day revelation of the same covenant that was revealed in the Old and New Testaments. This requires an acknowledgment that God has spoken to both ancient and latter-day prophets and continues to do so.

Covenants and accompanying ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ are the essence of religious life. LDS teaching holds that all of God's commandments are based in covenant. Thus the ordinances of BAPTISM, receiving the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, and the SACRAMENT, as well as keeping the SABBATH DAY holy and TEMPLE WORSHIP—including eternal marriage—embody covenants with promises, obligations, and opportunities for blessings. These covenants are mutual promises between God in heaven and men and women on earth. Those willing to abide by such agreements are considered part of covenant Israel, with all the attendant blessings and opportunities. Thus the Church teaches that any law or commandment from God to his children, that helps ensure their SALVATION and ETERNAL LIFE is part of the "everlasting covenant."

The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that "the ancients . . . obtained from God promises of such weight and glory, that our hearts are often filled with gratitude that we are even permitted to look upon them. . . . If we are the children of the Most High, . . . and embrace the same covenant that they embraced, and are faithful to the testimony of our Lord as they were, we can approach the Father in the name of Christ as they approached Him, and for ourselves obtain the same promises" (TPJS, pp. 65–66).

[See also Abrahamic Covenant.]

JAMES B. MAYFIELD

COVENANTS

The word "covenant" in the Bible is a translation of the Hebrew berith and of the Greek diathēkē. The Book of Mormon concept seems close to the Hebrew indication of any formalized relation between two parties, such as a bond, pact, or agreement. As such, the term is used for nonaggression pacts between nations (Gen. 26:26–31), a promise of land-ownership (Gen. 15:18–21), a bond for free slaves (Jer. 34:8–9), or an oath of secrecy (2 Kgs. 11:4). The Greek diathēkē is a more legalistic term, implying a formal will, a legal bequest (Gal. 3:17). In the New Testament the term is often translated as “testament,” but clearly is used for the same kind of bond as “covenant” (cf. Heb. 7:22; 8:6; Anderson, p. 5). This legal aspect is also clear in the Doctrine and Covenants (e.g., D&C 132:7), where certain organizational issues are couched in covenantal terms (e.g., D&C 82:11–12). The English term “covenant,” meaning “coming together,” stresses the relational aspect. In other languages the terms used may have more legal connotations.

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints speak of themselves as a “covenant people,” both collectively and individually. Entering into righteous and authorized covenants with God is one of the most important aspects of their lives. They see their covenants as modern counterparts of covenant making in biblical times.

Most covenants mentioned in scripture are made by God with mankind, either with individuals or a group. In a group covenant, like that of ancient Israel or of the NEPHITES, the leader or king “cuts the covenant” (as it is said in Hebrew) for, and in behalf of, his people, who in turn affirm their entrance into the covenant by a collective oath or by REPENTANCE (for example, 2 Chr. 34:29–32). This covenant may be reaffirmed and reestablished, as occurs in King Benjamin’s speech (Mosiah 1–6; see Ricks, 1984). When such covenants are established, the collective bond with God holds as long as people are obedient to the commandments stated or implied in the covenant. Yet a gradual shift of emphasis from collective toward individual covenant making is discernible from the Old to the New Testament. It is also within the Book of Mormon and in the teachings of the Church. Some tension between the association with the “elect” (Ps. 89:3–4; D&C 88:130–133) and the more general covenant for all mankind (Isa. 55:3) remains. Individual covenants, in any event, are essential in LDS doctrine and religion, both in sacred history and in present practice.

In covenant making, God takes the initiative with a conditional promise, specifying attainable blessings and setting the terms for people to receive them. Sometimes a sign is given to commemorate the pact, like the tables of the covenant (Deut. 9:9–11). Revelations (Jer. 11:1–5) and miracles (Deut. 5:1–6) sometimes accompany covenants. One enters the covenant, usually through a ritual, a visible sign. Blood sacrifices (“the blood of the covenant,” Ex. 24:8), the “salt covenant” (Num. 18:19; 2 Chr. 13:5), the circumcision of boys (Acts 7:8), baptism (D&C 22:1; Mosiah 18:7–11), the sacrament (Heb. 8:6; 3 Ne. 18:1–14), the conferral of the priesthood with its “oath and covenant” (D&C 84:33–42), marriage (D&C 132) and other temple rites, all these revealed rituals are called sacraments or ORDINANCES, which have been given as covenants. They serve as a signal that individuals enter into or reaffirm personal covenants with the Lord. As God is bound by his promises (D&C 82:10), covenant making has to be guided by revelation and performed through the AUTHORITY of the priesthood. Otherwise, God is not truly made party to the accord and agreement. Since covenant rites are essential for man’s salvation and EXALTATION, the role of the priesthood in administering these covenantal sacraments is crucial. Without priesthood authority, there are no everlasting covenants. Still, these overt covenant obligations are always directly related to the general commandment of loving God and one’s neighbor, called the “covenant of the heart” (Heb. 10:16; Jer. 31:31–34; Isa. 55:3).

The Lord’s covenants essentially cover the whole PLAN OF SALVATION. God’s promise is to send a Savior for all humans, asking on their part for their obedience to the will of the Lord. Each covenant reflects aspects of the “fulness of his gospel” (D&C 133:57). Though various DISPENSATIONS may have their specific focus, such as Israel’s “covenant of works” and Paul’s “covenant of grace,” Latter-day Saints categorize all divine covenants under the unity of one gospel. As a consequence, all covenants are always new, everlasting, and continually renewed.

Latter-day Saints enter into an eternal covenant with God at baptism, wherein they promise to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, to keep his commandments, to bear one another’s burdens, to stand as a witness of God at all times, to repent, and to serve and remember Christ always (see BAPTISMAL COVENANT; Mosiah 18:8–10; D&C 20:37). They renew this covenant by partaking of the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper. Other covenants involving obligations of faithfulness, magnifying one’s calling, sacrifice, obedience, righteousness, chastity, and consecration are made when one is ordained to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (see OATH AND COVENANT OF THE PRIESTHOOD), when one receives the temple ENDOWMENT, and when a man and woman enter into eternal marriage (see MARRIAGE: ETERNAL).

Many commentaries stress the one-sidedness of scriptural covenants. Since the Lord’s promises greatly exceed human obligations, the blessings of deity significantly overshadow the efforts demanded (see Mosiah 2:21), even though a notion of reciprocity is always present. Something is demanded in return, as a covenant is essentially two-sided; before anything else, it is a relation, the means by which God and man become reconciled in the atonement afforded to all by Jesus Christ.

A covenant is a special relationship with the Lord into which a person or a group may enter. The terms have been set by the Lord both for the rewards (blessings, salvation, exaltation) and the efforts demanded (obedience to rules and commandments). A covenant is fulfilled when people keep their promises and endure to the end in faith, with the Lord giving blessings during life, and salvation and exaltation upon completion.

A broken covenant results from a willful breach of promise, that is, transgression of commandments. By breaking this relationship, a person forfeits blessings. These can be restored in full only by repentance and reentering the covenant. Covenants comfort the righteous (Dan. 9:4) and lift the hearts of the oppressed (Ps. 74:20–21), but shame the unrepentant (Ezek. 16:60–63).

Latter-day Saints hold that the first personal covenants were made in PREMORTAL LIFE, later to be taken again on earth. In the sacred history of the earth, covenants have been made by God with Adam and Eve and with all the ancient patriarchs and prophets and their wives. For example, God made covenants of various kinds with Enoch; Abraham and Sarah; Moses; the kings of Israel and Judah, including David, Solomon, and Josiah (2 Chr. 34:29–32); and many of the prophets. Jesus Christ instituted the sacrament as a covenant establishing a personal relationship with his individual followers (Heb. 8:6), his blood replacing the old sacrificial “blood of the everlasting covenant” (Heb. 13:20). Through Joseph Smith, the everlasting covenants were established anew (see NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT; D&G 1:15, 22; 22:1; 132).

For each respective group of covenant people, this meaningful relation with the deity is also an identity marker, singling out people or a group from among their peers. Often outward signs are used: circumcision (Gen. 17:2–14), the SABBATH DAY (Ex. 31:12–17), endogamy or prohibitions on marriage outside the group (Ezra 10:3), greetings (D&C 88:131–133), and dietary proscriptions, such as the food taboos of Leviticus or the latter-day health code of the WORD OF WISDOM (D&G 89).

Among Christian churches historically, the focus on making covenants has risen since the Reformation. In John Calvin’s Geneva the notion of covenant was crucial (Lillback, 1987), a tradition that was passed on to many Protestant denominations, including the Puritans (van Pohr, 1986). In early American ecclesiastical history, covenants were also crucial, and the New England Puritans clearly saw themselves as the covenant people of the Lord (Miller, 1966). This concept has remained important in American culture and is a vital and essential part of LDS religion.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. “Religious Validity: The Sacramental Covenants in 3 Nephi.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 1–51. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Cooper, Rex E. Promises Made to the Fathers: Mormon Covenant Organization. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Lillback, P. A. The Binding of God: Calvin’s Role in the Development of Covenant Theology. Ann Arbor, Mich., 1987.
- Miller, P. Life of the Mind in America from the Revolution to the Civil War. London, 1966.
- Pohr, J. van. The Covenant of Grace in Puritan Thought. AAR Studies in Religion 45. Atlanta, Georgia, 1986.
- Ricks, Stephen D. “The Treaty/Covenant Pattern in King Benjamin’s Address (Mosiah 1–6).” BYU Studies 24 (Spring 1984):151–62.

WOUTER VAN BEEK

---

COVENANTS IN BIBLICAL TIMES

The idea of making and keeping covenants is essential to Latter-day Saints, who would readily agree “that the central message of the Bible is God’s covenant with men” (Bruce, p. 139). The “covenant theme pervades Old Testament teachings” and all scripture (Ludlow). A consistent and enduring pattern in God’s dealings with mankind from the beginning of the earth’s history down to present time is that sacred covenants are used to unite individuals to God and to each other.

Bringing extrabiblical revelations to bear on their understanding of biblical covenants, Latter-day Saints consider the history of God’s dealings with mankind to be arranged according to DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL, in which the gospel (including the priesthood and all the necessary greatly exceed human obligations, the blessings of deity significantly overshadow the efforts demanded (see Mosiah 2:21), even though a notion of reciprocity is always present. Something is demanded in return, as a covenant is essentially two-sided; before anything else, it is a relation, the means by which God and man become reconciled in the atonement afforded to all by Jesus Christ.

A covenant is a special relationship with the Lord into which a person or a group may enter. The terms have been set by the Lord both for the rewards (blessings, salvation, exaltation) and the efforts demanded (obedience to rules and commandments). A covenant is fulfilled when people keep their promises and endure to the end in faith, with the Lord giving blessings during life, and salvation and exaltation upon completion.

A broken covenant results from a willful breach of promise, that is, transgression of commandments. By breaking this relationship, a person forfeits blessings. These can be restored in full only by repentance and reentering the covenant. Covenants comfort the righteous (Dan. 9:4) and lift the hearts of the oppressed (Ps. 74:20–21), but shame the unrepentant (Ezek. 16:60–63).

Latter-day Saints hold that the first personal covenants were made in PREMORTAL LIFE, later to be taken again on earth. In the sacred history of the earth, covenants have been made by God with Adam and Eve and with all the ancient patriarchs and prophets and their wives. For example, God made covenants of various kinds with Enoch; Abraham and Sarah; Moses; the kings of Israel and Judah, including David, Solomon, and Josiah (2 Chr. 34:29–32); and many of the prophets. Jesus Christ instituted the sacrament as a covenant establishing a personal relationship with his individual followers (Heb. 8:6), his blood replacing the old sacrificial “blood of the everlasting covenant” (Heb. 13:20). Through Joseph Smith, the everlasting covenants were established anew (see NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT; D&G 1:15, 22; 22:1; 132).

For each respective group of covenant people, this meaningful relation with the deity is also an identity marker, singling out people or a group from among their peers. Often outward signs are used: circumcision (Gen. 17:2–14), the SABBATH DAY (Ex. 31:12–17), endogamy or prohibitions on marriage outside the group (Ezra 10:3), greetings (D&C 88:131–133), and dietary proscriptions, such as the food taboos of Leviticus or the latter-day health code of the WORD OF WISDOM (D&G 89).

Among Christian churches historically, the focus on making covenants has risen since the Reformation. In John Calvin’s Geneva the notion of covenant was crucial (Lillback, 1987), a tradition that was passed on to many Protestant denominations, including the Puritans (van Pohr, 1986). In early American ecclesiastical history, covenants were also crucial, and the New England Puritans clearly saw themselves as the covenant people of the Lord (Miller, 1966). This concept has remained important in American culture and is a vital and essential part of LDS religion.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. “Religious Validity: The Sacramental Covenants in 3 Nephi.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 1–51. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Cooper, Rex E. Promises Made to the Fathers: Mormon Covenant Organization. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Lillback, P. A. The Binding of God: Calvin’s Role in the Development of Covenant Theology. Ann Arbor, Mich., 1987.
- Miller, P. Life of the Mind in America from the Revolution to the Civil War. London, 1966.
- Pohr, J. van. The Covenant of Grace in Puritan Thought. AAR Studies in Religion 45. Atlanta, Georgia, 1986.
- Ricks, Stephen D. “The Treaty/Covenant Pattern in King Benjamin’s Address (Mosiah 1–6).” BYU Studies 24 (Spring 1984):151–62.

WOUTER VAN BEEK

---

COVENANTS IN BIBLICAL TIMES

The idea of making and keeping covenants is essential to Latter-day Saints, who would readily agree “that the central message of the Bible is God’s covenant with men” (Bruee, p. 139). The “covenant theme pervades Old Testament teachings” and all scripture (Ludlow). A consistent and enduring pattern in God’s dealings with mankind from the beginning of the earth’s history down to present time is that sacred covenants are used to unite individuals to God and to each other.

Bringing extrabiblical revelations to bear on their understanding of biblical covenants, Latter-day Saints consider the history of God’s dealings with mankind to be arranged according to DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL, in which the gospel (including the priesthood and all the necessary ordinances) is bestowed by God upon man, and received by covenant. Each dispensation is presided over by priesthood leaders who hold KEYS entitling them to put people under covenantal obligations that are bound in heaven as well as on earth. Thus, Moses (Deut. 29:10–15), Joshua (Josh. 24:14–28), and Peter (Matt. 16:19) were among those having authority to act on behalf of God in making and renewing binding covenants between God and his people.

God's covenant relationship with mankind began with Adam and Eve. Texts in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE show that Adam and Eve were the first after the Fall to enter into a covenant relationship with God—through sacrifice, baptism (Moses 6:64–66), and receiving the priesthood and ordinances associated with the temple: “Thus all things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance” (Moses 5:59; see also 4:4–5, 8, 10–12). Adam and Eve were promised a savior and were instructed to be obedient, to be repentant, and to do all things in the name of the Son of God (Moses 5:6–8).

Whereas the Bible first uses the term “covenant” in conjunction with Noah (Gen. 6:18; 9:9–17), its first use in other LDS scriptures is with Enoch (Moses 7:51; 8:2). Non-LDS Bible scholars (e.g., Fensham) usually arrange the principal biblical covenants into a fivefold sequence (Noah, Abraham, Moses, David, and the New Testament covenant), but Latter-day Saints follow a sequence of seven main dispensations (Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Christ and his apostles, and Joseph SMITH), and recognize those also of the brother of Jared, Lehi, and Alma in Book of Mormon history. Where non-LDS scholars explore both connections and distinctions between the covenants mentioned in the Bible (e.g., the patriarchal covenant of Abraham continued even when the covenant at Sinai was broken), Latter-day Saints see general uniformity of the principal covenant occurrences, all of them reflecting the same underlying principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Central as they are to subsequent biblical references to covenants (e.g., Ex. 2:24; Luke 1:72–73; Acts 3:25; Gal. 3:13–14), the promises made explicit in the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT receive particular emphasis in LDS teachings (Ricks, 1985; Nyman). The BOOK OF ABRAHAM in the Pearl of Great Price adds to the understanding of the promises to Abraham and Sarah. To the promises of a land of inheritance (Gen. 15:18; 17:8; cf. Abr. 2:6) and of innumerable posterity (Gen. 15:5; 17:2–6; cf. Abr. 2:9; 3:14), the book of Abraham adds priesthood blessings (Abr. 1:3–4, 18) and the promise that Abraham's seed will be the means whereby the gospel will be ministered throughout the earth so that all people might receive the gospel and obtain salvation (Abr. 2:10–11). Latter-day Saints believe that the power to give these ancient promises by way of covenant was reinstated on April 3, 1836, when Elijah, Elias, Moses, and other ancient prophets restored to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY the keys of “the dispensation of the gospel of Abraham, saying that in us and our seed all generations after us should be blessed” (D&C 110:12; 124:58; 132:30–31).

In biblical times, political and legal covenants were made in various ways. Religious covenants often drew upon these secular practices by way of analogy. For example, in the language of the Bible, one “cuts” a covenant, reminiscent of the legal procedure of cutting a small animal in a ceremony when solemnizing a contract or treaty (Gen. 15:10; Hillers, pp. 40–45).

The process of renewing covenants, individually and communally, was also an important part of religious life in biblical times. Just as individual Latter-day Saints “renew” their covenant of baptism by partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, so there are scriptural instances of communal rites of covenant renewal (e.g., Deut. 31:10–13; Josh. 1:16–18). Covenant renewals are also found in the Book of Mormon, where Near Eastern (especially Hittite) analogues are evident (Ricks, 1984, 1990).

Despite such renewals, it is clear that the old covenant, or Mosaic law, was to be replaced by a new one, as Jeremiah prophesied (Jer. 31:31). Latter-day Saints believe that this prophecy was fulfilled in the New Testament (or, more exactly, the New Covenant). Christ “is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises” (Heb. 8:6). The recurring symbol of renewal in the new covenant is the sacrament, instituted at the Last Supper and centered in the commitment to remember Christ always, evoking the Passover imagery of the old covenant and the covenantal cry of the prophets to know God (Hosea 4:6).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bruce, F. F. “Bible.” In The New Bible Dictionary, 2nd ed., ed. J. D. Douglas et al., pp. 137–40. Wheaton, Ill., 1982.

Fensham, F. C., "Covenant, Alliance." In The New Bible Dictionary, 2nd ed., ed. J. D. Douglas et al., pp. 137–40. Wheaton, Ill., 1982.

Hillers, Delbert R. Covenant: The History of a Biblical Idea. Baltimore, 1969.

Ludlow, Victor L. "Unlocking the Covenant Teachings in the Scriptures." Religious Studies Center Newsletter, Brigham Young University 4, no. 2 (1990):1, 4.

Nyman, Monte S. "The Covenant of Abraham." In The Pearl of Great Price: Revelations from God, pp. 155–70, ed. H. Donl Peterson and C. Tate. Provo, Utah, 1989.

Ricks, Stephen D. "The Treaty/Covenant Pattern in King Benjamin's Address (Mosiah 1–6)." BYU Studies 25 (Spring 1984):151–62.

———. "The Early Ministry of Abraham." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 2, pp. 217–24. Salt Lake City, 1985.

———. "Deuteronomy: A Covenant of Love." Ensign 20 (Apr. 1990):55–59.

Whittaker, David J. "A Covenant People: Old Testament Light on Modern Covenants." Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):36–40.

GEORGE S. TATE

COWDERY, OLIVER

Oliver Cowdery (1806–1850) was next in authority to Joseph SMITH in 1830 (D&C 21:10–12), and was a second witness of many critical events in the restoration of the gospel. As one of the three BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES, Oliver Cowdery testified that an angel displayed the GOLD PLATES and that the voice of God proclaimed them correctly translated. He was with Joseph Smith when John the Baptist restored to them the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD and when Peter, James, and John ordained them to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and the apostleship, and again during the momentous KIRTLAND TEMPLE visions (D&C 110).

Oliver came from a New England family with strong traditions of patriotism, individuality, learning, and religion. He was born at Wells, Vermont, on October 3, 1806. His younger sister gave the only reliable information about his youth: "Oliver was brought up in Poultney, Rutland County, Vermont, and when he arrived at the age of twenty, he went to the state of New York, where his older brothers were married and settled. . . . Oliver's occupation was clerking in a store until 1829, when he taught the district school in the town of Manchester" (Lucy Cowdery Young to Andrew Jenson, March 7, 1887, Church Archives).

While boarding with Joseph Smith's parents,

he learned of their convictions about the ancient record that their son was again translating after Martin HARRIS had lost the manuscript in 1828. The young teacher prayed and received answers that Joseph Smith mentioned in a revelation (D&C 6:14–24). The Prophet's first history states the "Lord appeared unto . . . Oliver Cowdery and shewed unto him the plates in a vision and . . . what the Lord was about to do through me, his unworthy servant. Therefore he was desirous to come and write for me to translate" (PJS 1:10).

From April 7 through the end of June 1829, when they finished the translation, Joseph dictated while Oliver wrote, with "utmost gratitude" for the privilege (Messenger and Advocate 1:14). Oliver penned a letter then, expressing deep love for Oliver Cowdery (1806–1850), scribe to Joseph Smith and witness of the Book of Mormon (1829), Second Elder of the Church (1830), and Assistant President of the Church (1834), editor, and lawyer. Cowdery was with Joseph Smith when the Aaronic and Melchizedek priest-hoods and keys were restored. After ten years of separation from the Church, he was rebaptized. He died at age forty-three, faithful to his testimony. Photograph, c. 1848, C. W. Carter Collection.

Fensham, F. C., "Covenant, Alliance." In The New Bible Dictionary, 2nd ed., ed. J. D. Douglas et al., pp. 137–40. Wheaton, Ill., 1982.

Hillers, Delbert R. Covenant: The History of a Biblical Idea. Baltimore, 1969.

Ludlow, Victor L. "Unlocking the Covenant Teachings in the Scriptures." Religious Studies Center Newsletter, Brigham Young University 4, no. 2 (1990):1, 4.

Nyman, Monte S. "The Covenant of Abraham." In The Pearl of Great Price: Revelations from God, pp. 155–70, ed. H. Donl Peterson and C. Tate. Provo, Utah, 1989.

Ricks, Stephen D. "The Treaty/Covenant Pattern in King Benjamin's Address (Mosiah 1–6)." BYU Studies 25 (Spring 1984):151–62.

———. "The Early Ministry of Abraham." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 2, pp. 217–24. Salt Lake City, 1985.

———. "Deuteronomy: A Covenant of Love." Ensign 20 (Apr. 1990):55–59.

Whittaker, David J. "A Covenant People: Old Testament Light on Modern Covenants." Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):36–40.

GEORGE S. TATE

COWDERY, OLIVER

Oliver Cowdery (1806–1850) was next in authority to Joseph SMITH in 1830 (D&C 21:10–12), and was a second witness of many critical events in the restoration of the gospel. As one of the three BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES, Oliver Cowdery testified that an angel displayed the GOLD PLATES and that the voice of God proclaimed them correctly translated. He was with Joseph Smith when John the Baptist restored to them the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD and when Peter, James, and John ordained them to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and the apostleship, and again during the momentous KIRTLAND TEMPLE visions (D&C 110).

Oliver came from a New England family with strong traditions of patriotism, individuality, learning, and religion. He was born at Wells, Vermont, on October 3, 1806. His younger sister gave the only reliable information about his youth: "Oliver was brought up in Poultney, Rutland County, Vermont, and when he arrived at the age of twenty, he went to the state of New York, where his older brothers were married and settled. . . . Oliver's occupation was clerking in a store until 1829, when he taught the district school in the town of Manchester" (Lucy Cowdery Young to Andrew Jenson, March 7, 1887, Church Archives).

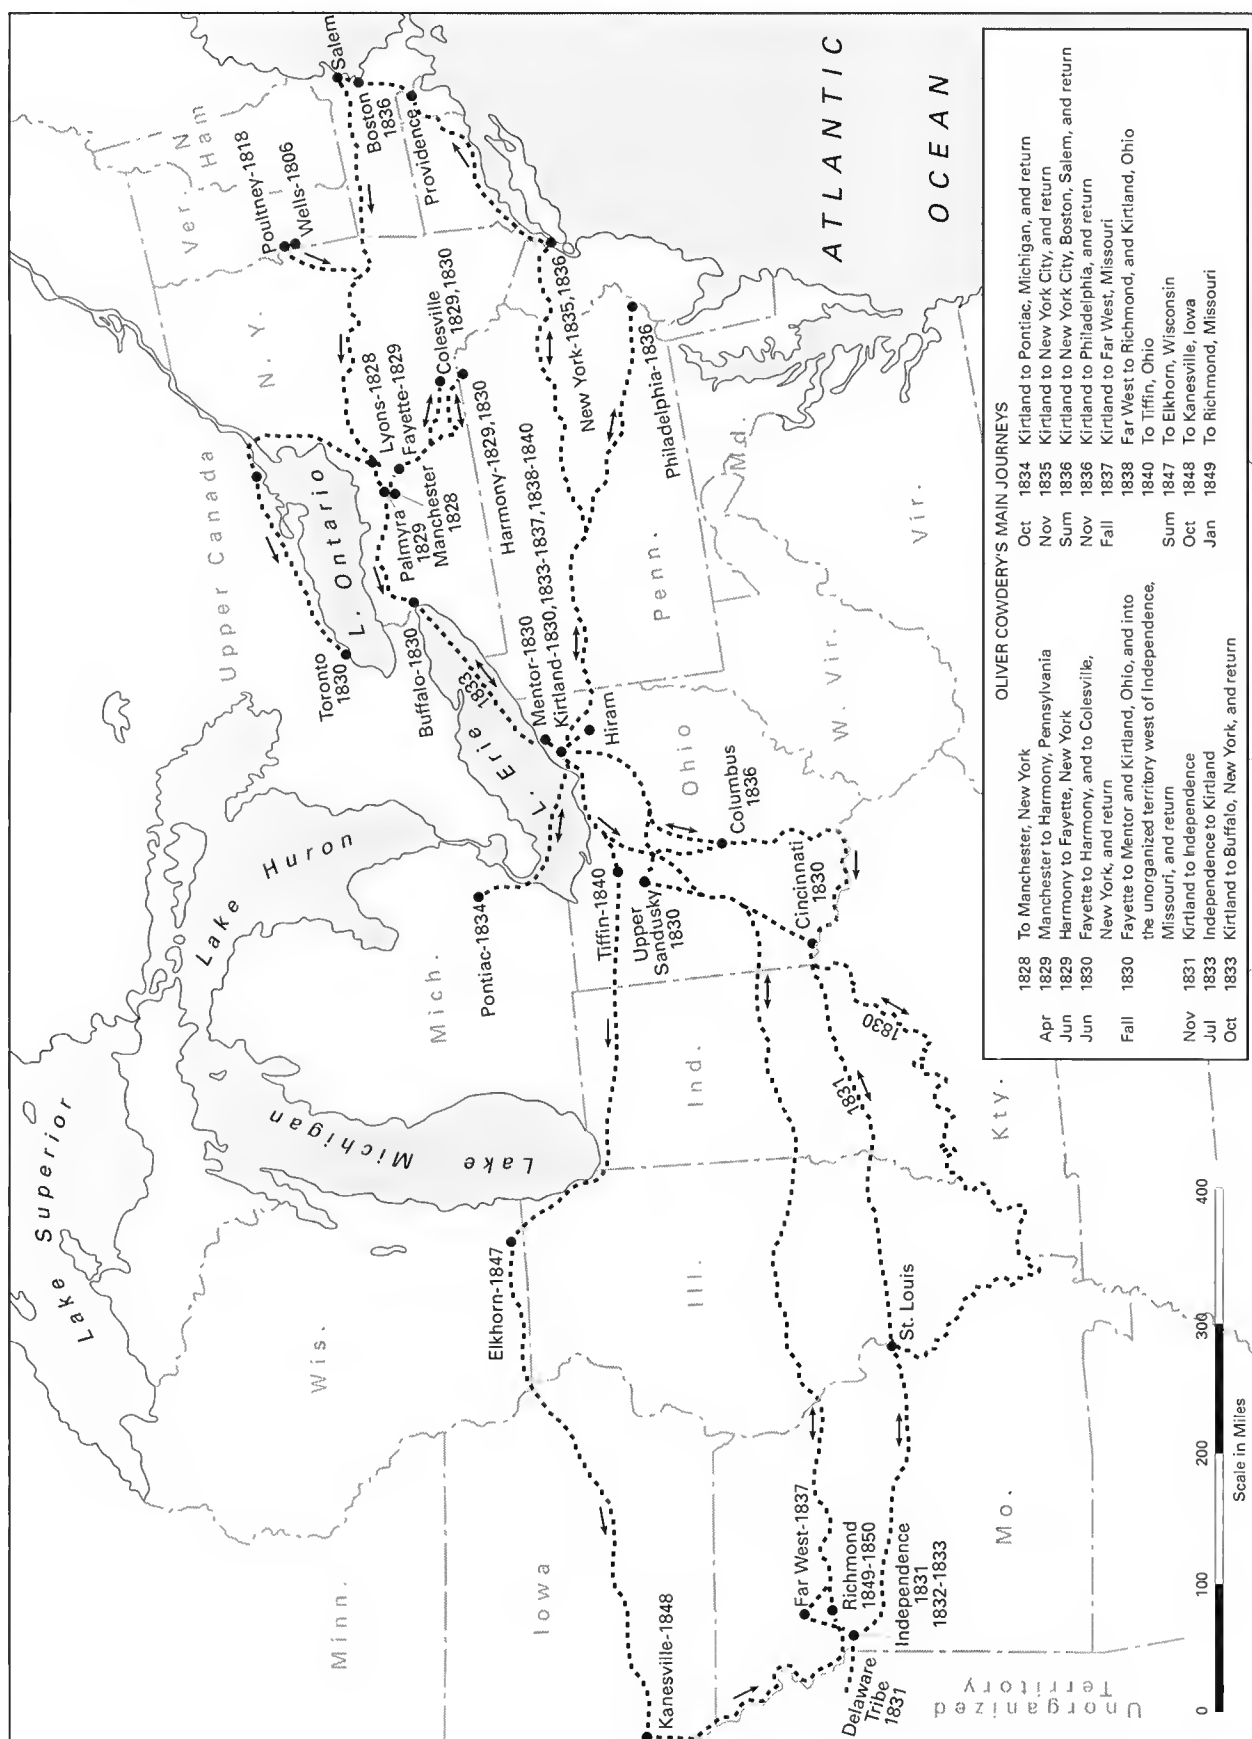

While boarding with Joseph Smith's parents,

he learned of their convictions about the ancient record that their son was again translating after Martin HARRIS had lost the manuscript in 1828. The young teacher prayed and received answers that Joseph Smith mentioned in a revelation (D&C 6:14–24). The Prophet's first history states the "Lord appeared unto . . . Oliver Cowdery and shewed unto him the plates in a vision and . . . what the Lord was about to do through me, his unworthy servant. Therefore he was desirous to come and write for me to translate" (PJS 1:10).

From April 7 through the end of June 1829, when they finished the translation, Joseph dictated while Oliver wrote, with "utmost gratitude" for the privilege (Messenger and Advocate 1:14). Oliver penned a letter then, expressing deep love for Oliver Cowdery (1806–1850), scribe to Joseph Smith and witness of the Book of Mormon (1829), Second Elder of the Church (1830), and Assistant President of the Church (1834), editor, and lawyer. Cowdery was with Joseph Smith when the Aaronic and Melchizedek priest-hoods and keys were restored. After ten years of separation from the Church, he was rebaptized. He died at age forty-three, faithful to his testimony. Photograph, c. 1848, C. W. Carter Collection.

Christ, a lifetime theme. He later told how he and Joseph interrupted their work as they were translating the record of the Savior's post-resurrection American ministry, and how, as they prayed about baptism, they heard the "voice of the Redeemer" and were ministered to by John the Baptist, who gave them authority to baptize (JS—II 1:71, note).

In 1835 Oliver helped Joseph Smith correct and publish the revelations for the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS. Section 27 lists the major priesthood messengers of the restoration: John the Baptist, whom "I have sent unto you, my servants, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood" (D&C 27:8); and "Peter, James, and John, whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry" (D&C 27:12).

The lesser priesthood was restored on May 15, 1829, two weeks before the Prophet and Cowdery moved to the Whitmers' in New York to complete the translation of the Book of Mormon (HC 1:39–41, 48–49). The higher priesthood also came before this move; David Whitmer remembered he was ordained as an elder only weeks after their first arrival at his upstate farm (Whitmer, p. 32). The ancient apostles appeared with priesthood KEYS as Joseph and Oliver traveled between their Pennsylvania home and Colesville, New York (D&C 128:20), where Joseph Knight, Sr., lived. Knight remembered their seeking help to sustain them while translating in April or May (Jessee, p. 36).

After the move to the Whitmer farm, the angel showed the plates to Joseph Smith and the Three Witnesses in June 1829. Oliver supervised the printing of the Book of Mormon that fall and winter. After the publication of the book on March 26, the Church was organized on April 6, 1830. Oliver spoke in meeting the next Sunday, which was "the first public discourse that was delivered by any of our number" (HC 1:81).

Few exceeded Cowdery in logical argument and elevated style. Moreover, his speeches and writings carry the tone of personal knowledge. Generally serving as editor or associate editor in the first publications of the Church, Oliver wrote with unusual consistency through two decades of published writings and personal letters. He insisted that a relationship with God required constant contact: "Whenever [God] has had a people on earth, he always has revealed himself to them by the Holy Ghost, the ministering of angels, or his own voice" (Messenger and Advocate 1:2). Oliver Cowdery led the LAMANITE MISSION, the first major mission of the Church (D&C 28:8; 30:5), which doubled Church membership and took the Book of Mormon to Native Americans. After the temple site was designated in Jackson County in 1831, he traveled there with copies of the revelations for their first printing. Because publishing was vital for spreading the gospel and instructing members, Oliver was called to work with William W. Phelps, an experienced editor (D&C 55:4; 57:11–13). After Missouri ruffians destroyed the press, Cowdery returned to Ohio to counsel with Church leaders, who assigned him to relocate Church publications there. Because of the importance of accurate information, he and Sidney RIGDON remained in Ohio in 1834 when many faithful men marched to Missouri with ZION'S CAMP to assist the Saints in returning to their homes and land in Jackson County.

In 1830–1831, Oliver Cowdery served as the first Church Recorder, a calling he again resumed between 1835 and 1837 (see HISTORIANS, CHURCH). Even in other years, he often kept the official minutes of meetings, and was often editor and contributor for the first Church newspapers. He wrote articles for the MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE that help document early LDS history. From June to October 1830, Oliver served as scribe while the Prophet completed important portions of the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE.

An 1830 revelation named Oliver Cowdery next only to Joseph Smith in priesthood leadership (D&C 20:2–3), a status formalized in December 1834, when he was ranked above Sidney RIGDON, who had long served as Joseph's first counselor. Each would "officiate in the absence of the President, according to his rank and appointment, viz.: President Cowdery first; President Rigdon second, and President Williams third" (PJS 1:21). Cowdery wrote that this calling was foretold in the first heavenly ordination, though Missouri printing duties had intervened: "This promise was made by the angel while in company with President Smith, at the time they received the office of the lesser priesthood" (PJS 1:21; cf. HIC 1:40–41). His office next to the Prophet—sometimes called “associate president”—was given to Hyrum SMITH in 1841 (D&C 124: 194–6), after Cowdery’s excommunication (see FIRST PRESIDENCY).

Oliver’s Church career peaked from 1834 to 1836. Minutes and letters picture him as a highly effective preacher, writer, and administrator. His 1836 journal survives, showing his devotion to religion and family, his political activities, his study of Hebrew, and the spiritual power he shared at the completion of the Kirtland Temple. Cowdery’s last entry in this journal, penned the day of the temple dedication, says of the evening meeting: “I saw the glory of God, like a great cloud, come down and rest upon the house. . . . I also saw cloven tongues like as of fire rest upon many . . . while they spake with other tongues and prophesied” (Arrington, p. 426).

Oliver also alluded to more. A year later he penned an editorial “Valedictory.” After mentioning “my mission from the holy messenger” prior to the organization of the Church, he wrote that such manifestations were to be expected, since the Old Testament promised that God would “reveal his glorious arm” in the latter days “and talk with his people face to face” (Messenger and Advocate 3:548). The words he italicized match his recent temple vision of Christ on April 3, 1836, which he experienced in company with the Prophet (D&C 110:1–10). This was also the time that these first priesthood leaders received special priesthood keys from Moses, Elias, and Elijah, completing restoration of the “keys of the kingdom” (D&C 27:6–13) and completing Cowdery’s mission as “second witness” to such restoration. Oliver had deep confidence in divine appearances. In 1835 he charged the newly appointed Twelve: “Never cease striving until you have seen God face to face” (HIC 2:195).

Despite these profound spiritual experiences, Oliver’s letters reveal a crisis of personal and family estrangement from Joseph Smith by early 1838. The Three Witnesses had seen an angel with Joseph Smith, but later they tended to compete rather than cooperate with his leadership. Cowdery disagreed with the Prophet’s economic and political program and sought a personal financial independence that ran counter to the cooperative economics essential to the Zion society that Joseph Smith envisioned. Nonetheless, when Oliver was tried for his membership, he sent a resignation letter in which he insisted that the truth of modern revelation was not at issue: “Take no view of the foregoing remarks, other than my belief on the outward government of this Church” (Far West Record, pp. 165–66).

This trial was related to the excommunications of Oliver’s brothers-in-law John Whitmer and David Whitmer, also at this time; this paralleled Oliver’s earlier support of the Whitmer family in the matter of Hiram Page’s competing revelations (D&C 28:11–13). The Church court considered five charges against Cowdery: inactivity, accusing the Prophet of adultery, and three charges of beginning law practice and seeking to collect debts after the Kirtland bank failure (see KIRTLAND ECONOMY).

Oliver’s charge of adultery against the Prophet was simplistic, for Oliver already knew about the principle of PLURAL MARRIAGE. Rather than deny the charge, the Prophet testified that because Oliver had been his “bosom friend,” he had “intrusted him with many things” (Far West Record, 168). Brigham YOUNG later said that the doctrine was revealed to Joseph and Oliver during the Book of Mormon translation (cf. Jacob 2:30); clearly a fuller understanding of the principle of plural marriage came by 1832, in connection with Joseph Smith’s translation of Genesis (cf. D&C 130:1–2). Brigham Young added that Oliver impetuously proceeded without Joseph’s permission, not knowing “the order and pattern and the results” (Charles Walker Journal, July 26, 1872, Church Archives). Oliver married Elizabeth Ann Whitmer in 1832, and problems with polygamy apparently influenced him and the Whitmer family to oppose the principle later.

In 1838, following his excommunication, Oliver returned to Ohio, though he did not, as a fictitious deed states, then pay Bishop Edward Partridge $1,000 for the temple lot in Independence on behalf of his children, John, Jane, and Joseph Cowdery. Such children never existed; Oliver had no such money and showed no interest in Jackson County then or later. In fact, he continued law study and practiced in Kirtland, but in 1840 he moved to Tiffin, Ohio, where he became a prominent civic leader as an ardent Democrat. His law notices and public service regularly appeared in local newspapers, and he was personally sketched in the warm recollections of the prominent Ohio lawyer William Lang, who apprenticed under Cowdery and described him as being of slight build, about five and a half feet tall, clean, and courteous. Professionally, Cowdery was characterized as “an able lawyer,” well informed, with “brilliant” speaking ability; yet “he was modest and reserved, never spoke ill of anyone, never complained” (Anderson, 1981, p. 41).

In 1847 Oliver moved to Wisconsin, where he continued his law practice and was almost elected to the first state legislature, in spite of newspaper accounts ridiculing his published declaration of seeing the angel and the plates. In his ten years outside the Church, Cowdery never succumbed to the considerable pressure to deny his Book of Mormon testimony. Indeed, letters to his LDS relatives show that he was hurt at the Church’s rejection but remained a deep believer. Feeling that his character had been slandered, he asked for public exoneration, explaining that anyone would be sensitive about reputation “had you stood in the presence of John with our departed Brother Joseph, to receive the Lesser Priesthood, and in the presence of Peter, to receive the Greater” (Gunn, pp. 250–51).

These statements contradict a pamphlet that Oliver was alleged to have published in 1839 as a “Defense” for leaving the Church (see FORGERIES). Surfacing in 1906, it portrays Oliver as confused about seeing John the Baptist. But no original exists, nor does any reference to it in Cowdery’s century. Its style borrows published Cowdery phrases but rearranges his conclusions. A clumsier forgery is the “Confession of Oliver Overstreet,” which claims that the author was bribed to impersonate Cowdery and return to the Church. Abundant documents show that Oliver returned to Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1848 with his wife and young daughter.

Diaries and official minutes record Oliver Cowdery’s words in rejoining the Church. He sought only rebaptism and fellowship, not office. He publicly declared that he had seen and handled the Book of Mormon plates, and that he was present with Joseph Smith on the occasions when “holy angels” restored the two priesthoods (Anderson, BYU Studies, 1968, p. 278). The High Council questioned him closely about his published letter (to David Whitmer) in which Oliver claimed that he retained the keys of priesthood leadership after Joseph Smith’s death. That was his opinion, Oliver said, before seeing the Nauvoo revelation giving all powers to Hyrum Smith “that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery” (D&C 124:95). “It was that revelation which changed my views on this subject” (Anderson, IE, Nov. 1968, p. 19).

Because they had started for Council Bluffs late in the season, the Cowdery family were forced to winter in Richmond, Missouri, where most of the Whitmer family lived. Letters throughout 1849 repeat Oliver’s hope to move west and also disclose his lack of means. They speak of his coughing up blood, a long-term respiratory condition that finally took his life March 3, 1850. The circuit court recorded a resolution of fellow lawyers that in the death of “Oliver Cowdery, his profession has lost an accomplished member, and the community a valuable and worthy citizen” (Anderson, 1981, p. 46).

David Whitmer and other relatives living near Oliver Cowdery in his final year later claimed that he disagreed with many Kirtland and Nauvoo doctrines, but Oliver’s documented criticisms at this time concern only intolerance and a continuing concern about polygamy. Although David Whitmer considered Joseph a fallen prophet, in 1848 Cowdery said publicly and privately “that Joseph Smith had fulfilled his mission faithfully before God until death” (Geo. A. Smith to Orson Pratt, MS 11 [Oct. 20, 1848]:14), and “that the priesthood was with this people, and the ‘Twelve’ were the only men that could lead the Church after the death of Joseph” (Anderson, IE, Nov. 1968, p. 18). In his last known letter, Oliver accepted an assignment from the Twelve to lobby in Washington, and acknowledged the leadership of the “good brethren of the [Salt Lake] valley” (Gunn, p. 261).

Oliver’s wife, Elizabeth Ann Whitmer Cowdery (1815–1892), had known him when he was taking dictation during the translation of the Book of Mormon, before their marriage. Said she of his lifelong commitment: “He always without one doubt . . . affirmed the divinity and truth of the Book of Mormon” (Anderson, 1981, p. 63). This confidence stood the test of persecution, poverty, loss of status, failing health, and the tragic deaths of five of his six children. Dying at forty-three, Oliver was surrounded by family members who told how he reaffirmed the divinity of the Book of Mormon and the restored priesthood—and voiced total trust in Christ. Just before rejoining the Church, he penned his inner hopes to fellow witness David Whitmer: “Let the Lord vindicate our characters, and cause our testimony to shine, and then will men be saved in his kingdom” (Oliver Cowdery to David Whitmer, July 28, 1847, Ensign of Liberty, 1:92).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Reuben Miller, Recorder of Oliver Cowdery's Reaffirmations." BYU Studies 8 (Spring 1968):277-93.
- . "The Second Witness of Priesthood Restoration." IE 71 (Sept. 1968):15-24; and 71 (Nov. 1968):14-20.
- . Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Arrington, Leonard J. "Oliver Cowdery's Kirtland, Ohio, 'Sketch Book.'" BYU Studies 12 (Summer 1972):410-26.
- Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook. Far West Record. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Gunn, Stanley R. Oliver Cowdery, Second Elder and Scribe. Salt Lake City, 1962.
- Jessee, Dean C. "Joseph Knight's Recollection of Early Mormon History." BYU Studies 17 [1976]:36.
- Porter, Larry C. "Dating the Restoration of the Melchizedek Priesthood." Ensign 9 (June 1979):5-10.
- Whitmer, David. Address to All Believers in Christ. Richmond, Mo., 1887.

RICHARD LLOYD ANDERSON

CREATION, CREATION ACCOUNTS

Latter-day Saints have, in addition to the biblical Genesis, two modern restorations of ancient scriptural accounts of the Creation in the BOOK OF MOSES and the BOOK OF ABRAHAM. Related authoritative information also appears in the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the LDS temple ceremony. Drawing on this wealth of creation literature, Latter-day Saints understand that Jesus Christ, acting under the direction of God the Father, created this and other worlds to make possible the immortality and eternal life of human beings who already existed as spirit children of the Father. This understanding differs from both scientific and traditional Christian accounts in that it affirms God's purpose and role, while recognizing creation as organization of pre-existing materials, and not as an ex nihilo event (creation from nothing). Furthermore, these accounts describe an active role for God's spirit children in the Creation and include a more detailed version of the origins of EVIL.

The frequent occurrence of creation accounts in LDS scriptures and sacred ceremonies reflects a pattern of the ancient world generally, and ancient Israel in particular, where the Creation was regularly recited or reenacted. The Creation—including its ritual recitation and reenactment—was viewed by the Israelites and other peoples of the ancient Near East as possessing a dynamic, not a static, quality. According to Raffaele Pettazzoni, a noted historian of religions, "What happened in the beginning has an exemplary and defining value for what is happening today and what will happen in the future" (p. 26).

Creation plays a central theological role in the Book of Mormon. The events surrounding creation are linked with the fall of that angel who became the DEVIL (2 Ne. 2:17; 9:8). His fall, in turn, led to the FALL OF ADAM; opposition as a feature of mortal existence; and, ultimately, the need for a divine redemption of mankind (2 Ne. 2:18-27). Book of Mormon prophets invoked the Creation as a symbol of God's goodness and a touchstone of human stewardship: "The Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it" (1 Ne. 17:36). Those who reject God's goodness, as symbolized by the Creation (and the Atonement), will inevitably be judged and punished (cf. 2 Ne. 1:10).

The creation account in the book of Moses (revealed in 1830 as the beginning of the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE) provides several insights in addition to those found in Genesis.

First, the book of Moses establishes Mosaic authorship of its creation account indicating explicitly that it resulted from a revelation given to Moses sometime between the time of the burning bush and the exodus (Moses 1:17, 25).

Second, it clarifies the role of Jesus Christ in the Creation: "By the word of my power have I created [these lands and their inhabitants], which is mine Only Begotten Son" (Moses 1:32-33); "I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image" (Moses 2:26-27); "And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil" (Moses 4:28). This is consistent with the teachings of John and Paul in the New Testament (John 1:3, 10; Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:13-16; Heb. 1:2, 10).

Third, the Creation is placed in a much larger context of ongoing creations of innumerable inhabited earths with their respective heavens (in all of which Christ played a central role): "And worlds without number have I created . . . for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is Cowdery to David Whitmer, July 28, 1847, Ensign of Liberty, 1:92).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Reuben Miller, Recorder of Oliver Cowdery's Reaffirmations." BYU Studies 8 (Spring 1968):277-93.
- . "The Second Witness of Priesthood Restoration." IE 71 (Sept. 1968):15-24; and 71 (Nov. 1968):14-20.
- . Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Arrington, Leonard J. "Oliver Cowdery's Kirtland, Ohio, 'Sketch Book.'" BYU Studies 12 (Summer 1972):410-26.
- Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook. Far West Record. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Gunn, Stanley R. Oliver Cowdery, Second Elder and Scribe. Salt Lake City, 1962.
- Jessee, Dean C. "Joseph Knight's Recollection of Early Mormon History." BYU Studies 17 [1976]:36.
- Porter, Larry C. "Dating the Restoration of the Melchizedek Priesthood." Ensign 9 (June 1979):5-10.
- Whitmer, David. Address to All Believers in Christ. Richmond, Mo., 1887.

RICHARD LLOYD ANDERSON

CREATION, CREATION ACCOUNTS

Latter-day Saints have, in addition to the biblical Genesis, two modern restorations of ancient scriptural accounts of the Creation in the BOOK OF MOSES and the BOOK OF ABRAHAM. Related authoritative information also appears in the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the LDS temple ceremony. Drawing on this wealth of creation literature, Latter-day Saints understand that Jesus Christ, acting under the direction of God the Father, created this and other worlds to make possible the immortality and eternal life of human beings who already existed as spirit children of the Father. This understanding differs from both scientific and traditional Christian accounts in that it affirms God's purpose and role, while recognizing creation as organization of pre-existing materials, and not as an ex nihilo event (creation from nothing). Furthermore, these accounts describe an active role for God's spirit children in the Creation and include a more detailed version of the origins of EVIL.

The frequent occurrence of creation accounts in LDS scriptures and sacred ceremonies reflects a pattern of the ancient world generally, and ancient Israel in particular, where the Creation was regularly recited or reenacted. The Creation—including its ritual recitation and reenactment—was viewed by the Israelites and other peoples of the ancient Near East as possessing a dynamic, not a static, quality. According to Raffaele Pettazzoni, a noted historian of religions, "What happened in the beginning has an exemplary and defining value for what is happening today and what will happen in the future" (p. 26).

Creation plays a central theological role in the Book of Mormon. The events surrounding creation are linked with the fall of that angel who became the DEVIL (2 Ne. 2:17; 9:8). His fall, in turn, led to the FALL OF ADAM; opposition as a feature of mortal existence; and, ultimately, the need for a divine redemption of mankind (2 Ne. 2:18-27). Book of Mormon prophets invoked the Creation as a symbol of God's goodness and a touchstone of human stewardship: "The Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it" (1 Ne. 17:36). Those who reject God's goodness, as symbolized by the Creation (and the Atonement), will inevitably be judged and punished (cf. 2 Ne. 1:10).

The creation account in the book of Moses (revealed in 1830 as the beginning of the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE) provides several insights in addition to those found in Genesis.

First, the book of Moses establishes Mosaic authorship of its creation account indicating explicitly that it resulted from a revelation given to Moses sometime between the time of the burning bush and the exodus (Moses 1:17, 25).

Second, it clarifies the role of Jesus Christ in the Creation: "By the word of my power have I created [these lands and their inhabitants], which is mine Only Begotten Son" (Moses 1:32-33); "I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image" (Moses 2:26-27); "And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil" (Moses 4:28). This is consistent with the teachings of John and Paul in the New Testament (John 1:3, 10; Eph. 3:9; Col. 1:13-16; Heb. 1:2, 10).

Third, the Creation is placed in a much larger context of ongoing creations of innumerable inhabited earths with their respective heavens (in all of which Christ played a central role): "And worlds without number have I created . . . for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten. . . . And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works" (Moses 1:33, 38; see also WORLDS). Moses is given details of the creation of "this heaven, and this earth" only (Moses 2:1; cf. 1:35).

Fourth, the origin of evil is traced back to the rebellion of Satan, who sought (1) to replace God's Beloved Son, who had been "chosen from the beginning," and (2) to receive and use God's own power to redeem all humans by destroying their agency (Moses 4:1–4). The importance of human agency is reaffirmed in the command to ADAM and EVE concerning the tree of knowledge of good and evil: "Thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but remember that I forbid it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Moses 3:17).

Fifth, the account in Moses makes clear that there was a spirit creation of all living things in heaven before they were created physically upon the earth: "I, the Lord God, created all things, of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. . . . And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men; and not yet a man to till the ground; for in heaven created I them; and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air" (Moses 3:5).

Certain LDS commentators have explored the possibility that the Moses account could resolve the apparent conflict in the order of God's creative acts between Genesis 1 and Genesis 2 by treating the first as a spirit creation (O. Pratt, pp. 21–22; Roberts, pp. 264–68; cf. DS 1:74–76, which explains a different view). Later revelations make it clear that mankind's spirit creation had taken place long before the events described in any of the accounts of the earth's creation. God, our Heavenly Father, is literally the "Father of spirits" (Heb. 12:9). "Man as a spirit was begotten and born of heavenly parents, and reared to maturity in the eternal mansions of the Father, prior to coming upon the earth in a temporal body" (see First Presidency, "The Origin of Man," Nov. 1909 [Appendix]; see also SPIRIT BODY).

The Abrahamic account is distinctive among creation accounts. It describes a structured cosmos, with many stars, one above another, with their different periods and orders of government (Abr. 3:1–10). Within this context Abraham also learns about eternally existing SPIRITS, one above the other in intelligence, all the way up to "the Lord thy God," who is "more intelligent than they all" (Abr. 3:19; see speeches cited in bibliography). He is shown a group of organized intelligences (or spirits, or souls—the words are here used interchangeably), over whom God rules and among whom he dwells, and is taught that "in the beginning" God came down in the midst of them, and said of some who were "noble and great": "These I will make my rulers. . . . And he said unto me: Abraham, thou art one of them; thou wast chosen before thou wast born" (Abr. 3:18–23). A purpose of this premortal assembly in heaven is explained by "one among them that was like unto God," who says to those who are with him, "We will go down . . . and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; and we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them" (Abr. 3:24–25). This is followed by a pronouncement of the glory to come upon those who prove worthy, the choosing of one "like unto the Son of Man" (who is to be sent to bring this about), and the rejection of Satan—all done by "the Lord," who is identified elsewhere as Jehovah (Abr. 3:25–28; cf. Abr. 1:15–16; 2:7–8). Thereafter, "the Lord said: Let us go down," whereupon the Gods "organized and formed the heavens and the earth" (Abr. 4:1). A significant feature of this revealed account is that both the space and the materials for the earth explicitly existed before its creation.

Within this context of the divine assembly, or COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, Abraham's account of the Creation proceeds, generally following the structural outline of Genesis. By the time Joseph Smith published this "translation" in 1842, he had gained a much deeper understanding both through additional revelation and some through study of Hebrew. In light of the doctrine of the council in heaven, Joseph Smith had pointed out that the Hebrew term Elohim, a plural form, should be rendered the "Gods" in the creation account, not as the traditional "God" (WJS, p. 379). It is so rendered throughout Abraham's account. In light of the doctrine of the eternal nature of matter, the word traditionally translated as "created" becomes "organized." The phrase "without form and void" (Hebrew tohu wa-bohu) is rendered, quite properly, "empty and desolate" and describes the condition of the earth after it was organized, not before (Abr. 4:2).

The term "day" (Hebrew yom) for the seven “days” of creation is given as “time,” a permissible alternative in both Hebrew and English; and it is explicitly pointed out that the “time” in which Adam should die if he partook of the forbidden fruit “was after the Lord’s time, which was after the time of Kolob [a great star that Abraham had seen nearest to the throne of God, whose revolution, one thousand years by our reckoning, is a day unto the Lord]; for as yet the Gods had not appointed unto Adam his reckoning” (Abr. 5:13; 3:2–4).

On the basis of the above passage, which clearly excludes the possibility of earthly twenty-four-hour days being the “days” or “times” of creation, some Latter-day Saint commentators have argued for one-thousand-year periods as the “times” of creation as well as the “time” of Adam’s earthly life after the fall; others have argued for indefinite periods of time, as long as it would take to accomplish the work involved. Abraham’s account does contain the interesting passage, in connection with the “organizing” of the lights in the “expanse” of heaven, “The Gods watched those things which they had ordered until they obeyed” (Abr. 4:14–18). Abraham’s account actually includes twelve different “labors” of the Gods, divided up among the “days” in the manner of Genesis. The later temple account of creation gives an abbreviated version of those labors, divided up differently among the seven days while retaining the same order, suggesting that it may not be significant which labor is assigned to which day.

Abraham connects the seemingly differing accounts of Genesis 1 and 2 within the context of the council in heaven. Abraham’s seven-day account proceeds through the work of the first five creative times and part of the sixth as the physical creation of the earth and its preparation to support life before life was actually placed upon it. Thus, during the third time, “the Gods organized the earth to bring forth grass . . . and the earth to bring forth the tree from its own seed” (Abr. 4:12; emphasis added). And during the fifth time, the Gods “prepared the waters that they might bring forth great whales, and every living creature, . . . and every winged fowl after their kind” (Abr. 4:21). Similarly, on the sixth time “the Gods prepared the earth to bring forth the living creature after his kind. . . . And the Gods saw they would obey” (Abr. 4:24–25). Then upon the sixth time, the Gods again took counsel among themselves and determined to form man, and to give them dominion over the plants and animals that should come upon the earth (Abr. 4:26–29). “And the Gods said among themselves: On the seventh time we will end our work, which we have counseled; and we will rest. . . . And thus were their decisions at the time that they counseled among themselves” (Abr. 5:2–3). The account paralleling Genesis 2 then follows smoothly as an account of the actual placing of life upon the earth: “And the Gods came down and formed these the generations of the heavens and of the earth, when they were formed in the day that the Gods formed the earth and the heavens, according to all that which they had said concerning every plant of the field before it was in the earth” (Abr. 5:4–5).

Several themes in other ancient creation accounts—premortal conflict in heaven, divine victory over the opposing powers of chaos, and the promulgation of law at the time of creation—are also familiar from creation accounts in LDS scripture and theology (2 Ne. 2:17; 9:8; Moses 4:3–4; Abr. 3:27–28; see also WAR IN HEAVEN; PRE-EXISTENCE). These ideas are alluded to in several places in the Bible (cf. Ex. 15; Job 38–41; Isa. 40–42; Ps. 18; 19; 24; 33; 68; 93; 104; Prov. 8:22–33; Hab. 3:8; Rev. 12:7–12). From the early Christian era until the end of the nineteenth century, traditional Christian interpretation has generally treated these biblical texts allegorically or has not considered them at all in discussions of the Creation. A profound transformation in the Christian interpretation of these passages took place during the latter part of the nineteenth century with the discovery and translation of creation accounts from ancient Mesopotamia and Egypt. While these accounts vary considerably in detail, they usually mention premortal combats, the establishment of the divine order before creation, and creation from chaos. The biblical passages mentioned above are now often understood in light of these descriptions of extrabiblical accounts.

The doctrine of ex nihilo creation has been the traditional Christian explanation. In recent discussion of the subject, many Jewish scholars agreed that the belief in an ex nihilo creation is not to be found before the Hellenistic period, while Christian scholars see no evidence of this doctrine in the Christian church until the end of the second century A.D. The rejection of ex nihilo creation in the teaching of the Latter-day Saints thus accords with the evidence of the earliest understanding of the Creation in ancient Israel and in early Christianity. Similarly, Latter-day Saints have understood such biblical passages as John 9:2 and Jeremiah 1:4–5 to refer to individual premortal existence, with implications for subsequent earthly existence. In support of this, it may be pointed out that various Christians and Christian groups in the early Christian centuries taught the same doctrine (cf. Origen, De principiis 1:7; 2:8; 4:1), and that it is also to be found in Jewish belief of the same period, including Philo (De mutatione nominum 39; De opificio mundi 51; De cherubim 32); in some apocryphal writings (Wisdom of Solomon 8:19–20; 15:3); and among the Essenes (Josephus, Jewish War 2.8.11, as well as in the Jewish Talmud and Midrash).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Bernhard W. "Creation." In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1, pp. 725–32. New York, 1962.
- Eliade, Mircea. "The Prestige of the Cosmogonic Myth." Diogenes 23 (Fall 1958):1–13.
- Goldstein, Jonathan A. "The Origins of the Doctrine of Creation Ex Nihilo." Journal of Jewish Studies 35 (Autumn 1984):127–35.
- McConkie, Bruce R. "Christ and the Creation." Ensign 12 (June 1982):9–15.
- Pettazzoni, Raffaele. "Myths of Beginnings and Creation-Myths." In Pettazzoni, Essays on the History of Religions, II. J. Rose, trans., Vol. 1, pp. 24–36. Leiden, 1954.
- Pratt, Orson. "The Pre-existence of Man." Serialized in The Seer (1853–1854). Photo repr., Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Pratt, Parley P. "Origin of the Universe." In Pratt, The Key to the Science of Theology, pp. 26–32. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Roberts, B. H. The Gospel and Man's Relationship to Deity, pp. 256–73. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Salisbury, Frank B. The Creation. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Smith, Joseph. See speeches reported in WJS, pp. 9, 33, 60, 341, 346, 351–52, and 359 and their contexts.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Winston, David. "Creation Ex Nihilo Revisited: A Reply to Jonathan Goldstein." Journal of Jewish Studies 37 (Spring 1986):88–91.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, chaps. 2, 4, 9. Salt Lake City, 1954.

F. KENT NIELSEN
STEPHEN D. RICKS

CREEDS

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has no creed, as that term is understood in traditional theology. Truth and the things of God are comprehended by study, faith, reason, science, experience, personal revelation, and revelation received through the prophets of God. Creeds, on the other hand, tend to delimit this process.

From the beginning of the Church until the present, its view has always been that such formulas are incompatible with the gospel's inclusive commitment to truth and continual revelation. The Doctrine and Covenants states, "He that receiveth light, and continueth in God, receiveth more light and that light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day" (D&C 50:24). In his FIRST VISION in 1820, the young Prophet Joseph SMITH was told that the creeds of the competing churches around him "were an abomination in [God's] sight" (HC 1:19). These sweeping words were clarified in his WENTWORTH LETTER (1842): "all were teaching incorrect doctrines." During the April 1843 conference of the Church, the Prophet said: "It does not prove that a man is not a good man because he errs in doctrine" (HC 5:340), and later he elaborated: "I cannot believe in any of the creeds of the different denominations, though all of them have some truth. I want to come up into the presence of God, and learn all things, but the creeds set up stakes, and say, 'Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further,' which I cannot subscribe to" (HC 6:67).

Since Joseph Smith's day, the Christian world has moved in this direction by acknowledging that creeds are "historically conditioned," and that confessions of faith are to be seen as "guidelines" rather than as final pronouncements.

Authoritative statements found in LDS literature are not viewed as elements in a creed. For example, although its thirteen ARTICLES OF FAITH are scriptural, they are open-ended. One of them says, "We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" (A of F 9). During fast and testimony meetings, usually on the first Sunday of each month, the conviction is often expressed by members that they know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and that Joseph Smith and the living prophets are true prophets of God. These words in some respects parallel the Islamic confession of faith, or Shahadah, which is also not considered a creed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gerrish, B. A. "Creeds." In Encyclopedia of Religion, ed. Mircea Eliade. New York, 1987.
- McConkie, Bruce R. MD, pp. 170–72. Salt Lake City, 1966.

GARY P. GILLUM

refer to individual premortal existence, with implications for subsequent earthly existence. In support of this, it may be pointed out that various Christians and Christian groups in the early Christian centuries taught the same doctrine (cf. Origen, De principiis 1:7; 2:8; 4:1), and that it is also to be found in Jewish belief of the same period, including Philo (De mutatione nominum 39; De opificio mundi 51; De cherubim 32); in some apocryphal writings (Wisdom of Solomon 8:19–20; 15:3); and among the Essenes (Josephus, Jewish War 2.8.11, as well as in the Jewish Talmud and Midrash).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Bernhard W. "Creation." In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1, pp. 725–32. New York, 1962.
- Eliade, Mircea. "The Prestige of the Cosmogonic Myth." Diogenes 23 (Fall 1958):1–13.
- Goldstein, Jonathan A. "The Origins of the Doctrine of Creation Ex Nihilo." Journal of Jewish Studies 35 (Autumn 1984):127–35.
- McConkie, Bruce R. "Christ and the Creation." Ensign 12 (June 1982):9–15.
- Pettazzoni, Raffaele. "Myths of Beginnings and Creation-Myths." In Pettazzoni, Essays on the History of Religions, II. J. Rose, trans., Vol. 1, pp. 24–36. Leiden, 1954.
- Pratt, Orson. "The Pre-existence of Man." Serialized in The Seer (1853–1854). Photo repr., Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Pratt, Parley P. "Origin of the Universe." In Pratt, The Key to the Science of Theology, pp. 26–32. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Roberts, B. H. The Gospel and Man's Relationship to Deity, pp. 256–73. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Salisbury, Frank B. The Creation. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Smith, Joseph. See speeches reported in WJS, pp. 9, 33, 60, 341, 346, 351–52, and 359 and their contexts.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Winston, David. "Creation Ex Nihilo Revisited: A Reply to Jonathan Goldstein." Journal of Jewish Studies 37 (Spring 1986):88–91.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, chaps. 2, 4, 9. Salt Lake City, 1954.

F. KENT NIELSEN
STEPHEN D. RICKS

CREEDS

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has no creed, as that term is understood in traditional theology. Truth and the things of God are comprehended by study, faith, reason, science, experience, personal revelation, and revelation received through the prophets of God. Creeds, on the other hand, tend to delimit this process.

From the beginning of the Church until the present, its view has always been that such formulas are incompatible with the gospel's inclusive commitment to truth and continual revelation. The Doctrine and Covenants states, "He that receiveth light, and continueth in God, receiveth more light and that light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day" (D&C 50:24). In his FIRST VISION in 1820, the young Prophet Joseph SMITH was told that the creeds of the competing churches around him "were an abomination in [God's] sight" (HC 1:19). These sweeping words were clarified in his WENTWORTH LETTER (1842): "all were teaching incorrect doctrines." During the April 1843 conference of the Church, the Prophet said: "It does not prove that a man is not a good man because he errs in doctrine" (HC 5:340), and later he elaborated: "I cannot believe in any of the creeds of the different denominations, though all of them have some truth. I want to come up into the presence of God, and learn all things, but the creeds set up stakes, and say, 'Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further,' which I cannot subscribe to" (HC 6:67).

Since Joseph Smith's day, the Christian world has moved in this direction by acknowledging that creeds are "historically conditioned," and that confessions of faith are to be seen as "guidelines" rather than as final pronouncements.

Authoritative statements found in LDS literature are not viewed as elements in a creed. For example, although its thirteen ARTICLES OF FAITH are scriptural, they are open-ended. One of them says, "We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" (A of F 9). During fast and testimony meetings, usually on the first Sunday of each month, the conviction is often expressed by members that they know that God lives, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and that Joseph Smith and the living prophets are true prophets of God. These words in some respects parallel the Islamic confession of faith, or Shahadah, which is also not considered a creed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gerrish, B. A. "Creeds." In Encyclopedia of Religion, ed. Mircea Eliade. New York, 1987.
- McConkie, Bruce R. MD, pp. 170–72. Salt Lake City, 1966.

GARY P. GILLUM

CREMATION

Since the organization of the Church in 1830, Latter-day Saints have been encouraged by their leaders to avoid cremation, unless it is required by law, and, wherever possible, to consign the body to burial in the earth and leave the dissolution of the body to nature, "for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). President Spencer W. KIMBALL wrote, "The meaning of death has not changed. It releases a spirit for growth and development and places a body in . . . Mother Earth" (p. 45). In due time the mortal body returns to native element, and whether it is laid away in a family-selected site or buried in the depths of the sea, every essential part will be restored in the Resurrection: "Every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost; but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame" (Alma 40:23).

To understand the LDS feeling about cremation, it is essential to understand the doctrine of the Church regarding the body. In a general conference Elder James E. Talmage, an apostle, stated, "It is peculiar to the theology of the Latter-day Saints that we regard the body as an essential part of the soul. Read your dictionaries, the lexicons, and encyclopedias, and you will find that nowhere, outside of The Church of Jesus Christ, is the solemn and eternal truth taught that the soul of man is the body and the spirit combined" (CR, Oct. 1913, p. 117).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Edward L., ed. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, p. 45. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Lockhart, Barbara. "The Body: A Burden or a Blessing?" Ensign 15 (Feb. 1985):57-60.
- Nelson, Russell M. "The Magnificence of Man." Ensign 18 (Jan. 1988):64-69.

BRUCE L. OLSEN

CROSS

The cross, a traditional symbol of Christianity, is displayed extensively in Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy, and Protestantism. In each tradition, the symbol of the cross focuses the worshiper's attention on central elements of the Christian faith.

The Crucifixion, by Carl Heinrich Bloch (1834-1890; oil on copper plate; 20" × 30"). The Savior Jesus Christ is crucified on Calvary, offering himself as a sacrifice for mankind. Courtesy the Frederiksborg Museum, Hillerød, Denmark.

However, different theological points may be emphasized. For example, in Catholicism the crucifix (the cross with the dead Christ hanging on it) symbolizes the crucifixion of Christ and invites meditation on the Atonement. In contrast, the plain cross used by Protestants symbolizes not only the crucifixion but also the RESURRECTION of Christ, for the cross is empty. The Eastern Orthodox crucifix is a symbolic concept somewhere between those of Catholicism and Protestantism: Christ hangs on the cross, but as the living Lord, his head not bowed in death but raised in triumph. Thus, the crucifixion, the atonement, the resurrection, and the Lordship of Christ are all graphically presented in the Orthodox crucifix.

Latter-day Saints do not use the symbol of the cross in their ARCHITECTURE or in their chapels. They, like the earliest Christians, are reluctant to display the cross because they view the "good news" of the gospel as Christ's resurrection more than his crucifixion.

CREMATION

Since the organization of the Church in 1830, Latter-day Saints have been encouraged by their leaders to avoid cremation, unless it is required by law, and, wherever possible, to consign the body to burial in the earth and leave the dissolution of the body to nature, "for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). President Spencer W. KIMBALL wrote, "The meaning of death has not changed. It releases a spirit for growth and development and places a body in . . . Mother Earth" (p. 45). In due time the mortal body returns to native element, and whether it is laid away in a family-selected site or buried in the depths of the sea, every essential part will be restored in the Resurrection: "Every limb and joint shall be restored to its body; yea, even a hair of the head shall not be lost; but all things shall be restored to their proper and perfect frame" (Alma 40:23).

To understand the LDS feeling about cremation, it is essential to understand the doctrine of the Church regarding the body. In a general conference Elder James E. Talmage, an apostle, stated, "It is peculiar to the theology of the Latter-day Saints that we regard the body as an essential part of the soul. Read your dictionaries, the lexicons, and encyclopedias, and you will find that nowhere, outside of The Church of Jesus Christ, is the solemn and eternal truth taught that the soul of man is the body and the spirit combined" (CR, Oct. 1913, p. 117).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Edward L., ed. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, p. 45. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Lockhart, Barbara. "The Body: A Burden or a Blessing?" Ensign 15 (Feb. 1985):57-60.
- Nelson, Russell M. "The Magnificence of Man." Ensign 18 (Jan. 1988):64-69.

BRUCE L. OLSEN

CROSS

The cross, a traditional symbol of Christianity, is displayed extensively in Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy, and Protestantism. In each tradition, the symbol of the cross focuses the worshiper's attention on central elements of the Christian faith.

The Crucifixion, by Carl Heinrich Bloch (1834-1890; oil on copper plate; 20" × 30"). The Savior Jesus Christ is crucified on Calvary, offering himself as a sacrifice for mankind. Courtesy the Frederiksborg Museum, Hillerød, Denmark.

However, different theological points may be emphasized. For example, in Catholicism the crucifix (the cross with the dead Christ hanging on it) symbolizes the crucifixion of Christ and invites meditation on the Atonement. In contrast, the plain cross used by Protestants symbolizes not only the crucifixion but also the RESURRECTION of Christ, for the cross is empty. The Eastern Orthodox crucifix is a symbolic concept somewhere between those of Catholicism and Protestantism: Christ hangs on the cross, but as the living Lord, his head not bowed in death but raised in triumph. Thus, the crucifixion, the atonement, the resurrection, and the Lordship of Christ are all graphically presented in the Orthodox crucifix.

Latter-day Saints do not use the symbol of the cross in their ARCHITECTURE or in their chapels. They, like the earliest Christians, are reluctant to display the cross because they view the "good news" of the gospel as Christ's resurrection more than his crucifixion.

The LDS conception of the PLAN OF SALVATION is comprehensive. It encompasses a COUNCIL IN HEAVEN; JEHOVAH's (Jesus') acceptance of his role as Savior; the VIRGIN BIRTH; Jesus' life and ministry; his saving suffering, beginning in Gethsemane and ending with his death at Golgotha; his burial; his preaching to the spirits of the righteous dead; his physical resurrection; and his exaltation to the right hand of the Father. No one symbol is sufficient to convey all this. Moreover, the cross, with its focus on the death of Christ, does not symbolize the message of a living, risen, exalted Lord who changes the lives of his followers. Thus, President Gordon B. Hinckley, counselor in the First Presidency, stated that the lives of people must become a "meaningful expression of our faith and, in fact, therefore, the symbol of our worship" (p. 92).

While the symbol of the cross is not visually displayed among the Latter-day Saints, the centrality of the Atonement is ever present in their observance of BAPTISM, the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper, and the temple ordinances, and in their hymns and TESTIMONIES. Without the atonement of Jesus Christ, there is no hope for the human family. Scripture is replete with the admonition that disciples of Christ must "take up their cross," yielding themselves in humility to their Heavenly Father (D&C 56:2, 14-16; 112:14-15), releasing themselves from the ties of WORLDLINESS (3 Ne. 12:20), and submitting themselves to PERSECUTION and even martyrdom for the gospel of Jesus Christ (2 Ne. 9:18; Jacob 1:8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Symbol of Christ." Ensign 5 (May 1975):92-94.

Pocknee, Cyril E. Cross and Crucifix. London, 1962.

ROGER R. KELLER

CULT

The word "cult" has usages that range from neutral to pejorative. It derives from the Latin cultus, meaning "care" or "adoration." A neutral usage of the word refers to the system of beliefs and rituals connected to the worship of a deity. By this definition, virtually all religions, including The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, exhibit some cultic aspects.

However, the term "cult" more commonly refers to a minority religion that is regarded as unorthodox or spurious and that requires great or even excessive devotion. While the term is commonly used by the mass media and anticult movement in the late twentieth century as a negative label for such recently formed groups as the Unification Church and the International Society for Krishna Consciousness (the Hare Krishna movement), it has also been used to describe Pauline Christianity, Islam during the life of Muhammad, and MORMONISM in the nineteenth century.

The most common social-scientific definition identifies a cult as the beginning phase of an entirely new religion. As defined by this approach, a cult's central characteristic is that it provides a radical break from existing religious traditions (Roberts). The LDS Church's self-understanding of being a restoration movement that restored divine truths, rather than a reformation movement that purified existing truths, is consistent with the social-scientific understanding that nineteenth-century Mormonism was a cult due to its break from the existing religious traditions.

References to cult and other organizational classifications describe the characteristics of religious groups at particular moments in their history. Social scientists use these classifications to describe the normal process of religious evolution. Most groups that start as cults fail to survive more than a single generation; very few evolve into a developed new religion recognized by nonadherents as legitimate or conventional. Obviously, both Christianity and Islam successfully survived the transition from cult to new religion. Social scientists generally agree that The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is no longer properly classified as a cult and should instead be viewed as a new religion. For example, sociologist Rodney Stark identified the LDS Church as the single most important case on the agenda of the scientific study of religion because it demonstrates how a successful new religious movement differs from the thousands of cults that fail to survive or develop into new religions.

[See also SECT.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Roberts, Keith A. Religion in Sociological Perspective, 2nd ed. Belmont, Calif., 1990.

Stark, Rodney. "The Rise of a New World Faith." Review of Religious Research 26, no. 1 (1984):18-27.

The LDS conception of the PLAN OF SALVATION is comprehensive. It encompasses a COUNCIL IN HEAVEN; JEHOVAH's (Jesus') acceptance of his role as Savior; the VIRGIN BIRTH; Jesus' life and ministry; his saving suffering, beginning in Gethsemane and ending with his death at Golgotha; his burial; his preaching to the spirits of the righteous dead; his physical resurrection; and his exaltation to the right hand of the Father. No one symbol is sufficient to convey all this. Moreover, the cross, with its focus on the death of Christ, does not symbolize the message of a living, risen, exalted Lord who changes the lives of his followers. Thus, President Gordon B. Hinckley, counselor in the First Presidency, stated that the lives of people must become a "meaningful expression of our faith and, in fact, therefore, the symbol of our worship" (p. 92).

While the symbol of the cross is not visually displayed among the Latter-day Saints, the centrality of the Atonement is ever present in their observance of BAPTISM, the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper, and the temple ordinances, and in their hymns and TESTIMONIES. Without the atonement of Jesus Christ, there is no hope for the human family. Scripture is replete with the admonition that disciples of Christ must "take up their cross," yielding themselves in humility to their Heavenly Father (D&C 56:2, 14-16; 112:14-15), releasing themselves from the ties of WORLDLINESS (3 Ne. 12:20), and submitting themselves to PERSECUTION and even martyrdom for the gospel of Jesus Christ (2 Ne. 9:18; Jacob 1:8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Symbol of Christ." Ensign 5 (May 1975):92-94.

Pocknee, Cyril E. Cross and Crucifix. London, 1962.

ROGER R. KELLER

CULT

The word "cult" has usages that range from neutral to pejorative. It derives from the Latin cultus, meaning "care" or "adoration." A neutral usage of the word refers to the system of beliefs and rituals connected to the worship of a deity. By this definition, virtually all religions, including The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, exhibit some cultic aspects.

However, the term "cult" more commonly refers to a minority religion that is regarded as unorthodox or spurious and that requires great or even excessive devotion. While the term is commonly used by the mass media and anticult movement in the late twentieth century as a negative label for such recently formed groups as the Unification Church and the International Society for Krishna Consciousness (the Hare Krishna movement), it has also been used to describe Pauline Christianity, Islam during the life of Muhammad, and MORMONISM in the nineteenth century.

The most common social-scientific definition identifies a cult as the beginning phase of an entirely new religion. As defined by this approach, a cult's central characteristic is that it provides a radical break from existing religious traditions (Roberts). The LDS Church's self-understanding of being a restoration movement that restored divine truths, rather than a reformation movement that purified existing truths, is consistent with the social-scientific understanding that nineteenth-century Mormonism was a cult due to its break from the existing religious traditions.

References to cult and other organizational classifications describe the characteristics of religious groups at particular moments in their history. Social scientists use these classifications to describe the normal process of religious evolution. Most groups that start as cults fail to survive more than a single generation; very few evolve into a developed new religion recognized by nonadherents as legitimate or conventional. Obviously, both Christianity and Islam successfully survived the transition from cult to new religion. Social scientists generally agree that The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is no longer properly classified as a cult and should instead be viewed as a new religion. For example, sociologist Rodney Stark identified the LDS Church as the single most important case on the agenda of the scientific study of religion because it demonstrates how a successful new religious movement differs from the thousands of cults that fail to survive or develop into new religions.

[See also SECT.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Roberts, Keith A. Religion in Sociological Perspective, 2nd ed. Belmont, Calif., 1990.

Stark, Rodney. "The Rise of a New World Faith." Review of Religious Research 26, no. 1 (1984):18-27.

———. "How New Religions Succeed: A Theoretical Model." In The Future of New Religious Movements, ed. D. Bromley and P. Hammond, pp. 11–29. Macon, Ga., 1987.

LAWRENCE A. YOUNG

CUMORAH

Cumorah in the Book of Mormon refers to a hill and surrounding area where the final battle between the NEPHITES and LAMANITES took place, resulting in the annihilation of the Nephite people (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). Sensing the impending destruction of his people, Mormon records that he concealed the plates of Nephi<sub>1</sub> and all the other records entrusted to him in a hill called Cumorah to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Lamanites (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS). He delivered his own abridgment of these records, called the plates of

The north end of the hill Cumorah, near Palmyra, New York, as it appeared c. 1900. More than thirty years after the final Nephite battle in A.D. 385, Moroni deposited the gold plates on the west side of this hill not far from the top. In 1827, the angel Moroni here entrusted those Book of Mormon plates to Joseph Smith, who translated them into English. The hill is a drumlin, a long hill with steep sides and a sloping end formed under an advancing continental ice sheet. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Mormon, and the small plates of Nephi, which he placed with them, to his son MORONI<sub>2</sub> (W of M 1:5; Morm. 6:6), who continued writing on them before burying them in an unmentioned site more than thirty-six years later (Moro. 10:1–2).

The Book of Mormon mentions a number of separate records that would have been part of Mormon's final record repository in the hill Cumorah. Though the contents of these can be known to us only to the extent that they are summarized or mentioned in the Book of Mormon, Latter-day Saints expect them someday to become available. Alma<sub>2</sub> prophesied to his son Helaman that the brass plates of Laban (the Nephites' version of the Old Testament) would be "kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord until they should go forth unto every nation" (Alma 37:4; cf. 1 Ne. 5:17–19). He further explained that "all the plates" containing scripture are the "small and simple" means by which "great things are brought to pass" and by which the Lord will "show forth his power . . . unto future generations" (Alma 37:5–6, 19).

Cumorah had also been the site of the destruction of the JAREDITES roughly 900 years earlier. Moroni states in the book of Ether that the Jaredites gathered for battle near "the hill Ramah," the same hill where his father, Mormon, hid up "the records unto the Lord, which were sacred" (Ether 15:11). It was near the first landing site of the people of Mulek (Alma 22:30), just north of the land Bountiful and a narrow neck of land (Alma 22:32).

The more common reference to Cumorah among Latter-day Saints is to the hill near present-day Palmyra and Manchester, New York, where the plates from which the Prophet Joseph SMITH translated the Book of Mormon were found. During the night of September 21, 1823, Moroni<sub>2</sub> appeared to Joseph Smith as an angel sent from God to show him where these plates were deposited (JS—H 1:29–47).

In 1928 the Church purchased the western New York hill and in 1935 erected a monument recognizing the visit of the angel Moroni (see ANGEL MORONI STATUE). A visitors center was later built at the base of the hill. Each summer since 1937, the Church has staged the CUMORAH PAGEANT at this site. Entitled America's Witness for Christ, it depicts important events from Book of Mormon history. This annual pageant has reinforced the common assumption that Moroni buried the plates of Mormon in the same hill where his

———. "How New Religions Succeed: A Theoretical Model." In The Future of New Religious Movements, ed. D. Bromley and P. Hammond, pp. 11–29. Macon, Ga., 1987.

LAWRENCE A. YOUNG

CUMORAH

Cumorah in the Book of Mormon refers to a hill and surrounding area where the final battle between the NEPHITES and LAMANITES took place, resulting in the annihilation of the Nephite people (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). Sensing the impending destruction of his people, Mormon records that he concealed the plates of Nephi<sub>1</sub> and all the other records entrusted to him in a hill called Cumorah to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Lamanites (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS). He delivered his own abridgment of these records, called the plates of

The north end of the hill Cumorah, near Palmyra, New York, as it appeared c. 1900. More than thirty years after the final Nephite battle in A.D. 385, Moroni deposited the gold plates on the west side of this hill not far from the top. In 1827, the angel Moroni here entrusted those Book of Mormon plates to Joseph Smith, who translated them into English. The hill is a drumlin, a long hill with steep sides and a sloping end formed under an advancing continental ice sheet. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Mormon, and the small plates of Nephi, which he placed with them, to his son MORONI<sub>2</sub> (W of M 1:5; Morm. 6:6), who continued writing on them before burying them in an unmentioned site more than thirty-six years later (Moro. 10:1–2).

The Book of Mormon mentions a number of separate records that would have been part of Mormon's final record repository in the hill Cumorah. Though the contents of these can be known to us only to the extent that they are summarized or mentioned in the Book of Mormon, Latter-day Saints expect them someday to become available. Alma<sub>2</sub> prophesied to his son Helaman that the brass plates of Laban (the Nephites' version of the Old Testament) would be "kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord until they should go forth unto every nation" (Alma 37:4; cf. 1 Ne. 5:17–19). He further explained that "all the plates" containing scripture are the "small and simple" means by which "great things are brought to pass" and by which the Lord will "show forth his power . . . unto future generations" (Alma 37:5–6, 19).

Cumorah had also been the site of the destruction of the JAREDITES roughly 900 years earlier. Moroni states in the book of Ether that the Jaredites gathered for battle near "the hill Ramah," the same hill where his father, Mormon, hid up "the records unto the Lord, which were sacred" (Ether 15:11). It was near the first landing site of the people of Mulek (Alma 22:30), just north of the land Bountiful and a narrow neck of land (Alma 22:32).

The more common reference to Cumorah among Latter-day Saints is to the hill near present-day Palmyra and Manchester, New York, where the plates from which the Prophet Joseph SMITH translated the Book of Mormon were found. During the night of September 21, 1823, Moroni<sub>2</sub> appeared to Joseph Smith as an angel sent from God to show him where these plates were deposited (JS—H 1:29–47).

In 1928 the Church purchased the western New York hill and in 1935 erected a monument recognizing the visit of the angel Moroni (see ANGEL MORONI STATUE). A visitors center was later built at the base of the hill. Each summer since 1937, the Church has staged the CUMORAH PAGEANT at this site. Entitled America's Witness for Christ, it depicts important events from Book of Mormon history. This annual pageant has reinforced the common assumption that Moroni buried the plates of Mormon in the same hill where his father had buried the other plates, thus equating this New York hill with the Book of Mormon Cumorah. Because the New York site does not readily fit the Book of Mormon description of BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY, some Latter-day Saints have looked for other possible explanations and locations, including Mesoamerica. Although some have identified possible sites that may seem to fit better (Palmer), there are no conclusive connections between the Book of Mormon text and any specific site that has been suggested.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, John. "A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geographies." Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 1 (1989):20–70.
- Palmer, David A. In Search of Cumorah: New Evidences for the Book of Mormon from Ancient Mexico. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.
- Sorenson, John L. "Digging into the Book of Mormon: Part One." Ensign 14 (1984):26–37.

DAVID A. PALMER

---

CUMORAH PAGEANT

America's Witness for Christ has been presented at the hill CUMORAH in upstate New York nearly every summer since 1937. Recognized as one of America's largest and most spectacular outdoor theatrical events, it attracts an annual audience of almost 100,000 visitors to its seven performances.

This tradition dates back to 1917, when B. H. Roberts and a group of missionaries went to the Joseph Smith farm outside Palmyra, New York, to celebrate PIONEER DAY. Commencing in 1922, the "Palmyra Celebration" became an annual missionary conference for the Eastern States Mission. In July 1935, as part of the dedicatory exercises for the Angel Moroni Monument, trumpeters at the crest of the hill heralded the commencement of the first production at Cumorah. The next year a pageant, "Truth from the Earth," was presented, and plans were announced to make a pageant at the hill Cumorah an annual event.

Two pageants were presented in 1937: a play about the Mormon pioneer handcart companies, The Builders by Oliver R. Smith, on July 24, and America's Witness For Christ by H. Wayne Driggs on July 23 and 25. The latter script, with occasional revisions, was then presented annually for fifty years (excluding 1943–47). Harold I. Hansen, a missionary with theatrical training, was named codirector and thereafter continued as director for forty years, overseeing the installation of a sound system built by stereophonic sound pioneer Harvey Fletcher, the expansion of the all-volunteer cast and crew to almost six hundred participants, and the run extended to seven performances. In 1957 the pageant was recorded with original music by Crawford Gates.

On July 22, 1988, a new America's Witness for Christ, written by Orson Scott Card with music again by Crawford Gates, premiered. Its major theme—the reality of Christ's atonement, resurrection, and ministry to the Nephites—is boldly portrayed through events recorded in the Book of Mormon. The visual aspects of the pageant were also updated, with new stages, seating, properties, costumes, and special effects, and a recontoured and landscaped hill.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Argetsinger, Gerald S. "Palmyra: A Look at 40 Years of Pageant." Ensign 7 (Dec. 1977):70–71.
- Armstrong, Richard N., and Gerald S. Argetsinger. "The Hill Cumorah Pageant: Religious Pageantry as Suasive Form." Text and Performance Quarterly 2 (1989):153–64.
- Whitman, Charles W. "A History of the Hill Cumorah Pageant, 1937–1964." Ph.D. diss., University of Minnesota, 1967.

GERALD S. ARGETSINGER

---

CURRICULUM

The Church provides a standard set of curricular materials to all of its units throughout the world. Some matters of basic curriculum had been formatted and distributed to the Church membership since the early days of the Church, but as the AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS were formed, such as the Sunday School, Primary, Relief Society, and the Young Men and Young Women, each developed its own curriculum to help teach members. Eventually it became desirable to coordinate curriculum materials among these auxiliary organizations to avoid undesirable duplication and to ensure the coverage of important topics at all age levels.

At present, over 200 topics are considered annually in the lesson manuals prepared for the courses included in the Church curriculum. These topics are in the general areas of gospel principles father had buried the other plates, thus equating this New York hill with the Book of Mormon Cumorah. Because the New York site does not readily fit the Book of Mormon description of BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY, some Latter-day Saints have looked for other possible explanations and locations, including Mesoamerica. Although some have identified possible sites that may seem to fit better (Palmer), there are no conclusive connections between the Book of Mormon text and any specific site that has been suggested.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, John. "A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geographies." Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 1 (1989):20–70.
- Palmer, David A. In Search of Cumorah: New Evidences for the Book of Mormon from Ancient Mexico. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.
- Sorenson, John L. "Digging into the Book of Mormon: Part One." Ensign 14 (1984):26–37.

DAVID A. PALMER

---

CUMORAH PAGEANT

America's Witness for Christ has been presented at the hill CUMORAH in upstate New York nearly every summer since 1937. Recognized as one of America's largest and most spectacular outdoor theatrical events, it attracts an annual audience of almost 100,000 visitors to its seven performances.

This tradition dates back to 1917, when B. H. Roberts and a group of missionaries went to the Joseph Smith farm outside Palmyra, New York, to celebrate PIONEER DAY. Commencing in 1922, the "Palmyra Celebration" became an annual missionary conference for the Eastern States Mission. In July 1935, as part of the dedicatory exercises for the Angel Moroni Monument, trumpeters at the crest of the hill heralded the commencement of the first production at Cumorah. The next year a pageant, "Truth from the Earth," was presented, and plans were announced to make a pageant at the hill Cumorah an annual event.

Two pageants were presented in 1937: a play about the Mormon pioneer handcart companies, The Builders by Oliver R. Smith, on July 24, and America's Witness For Christ by H. Wayne Driggs on July 23 and 25. The latter script, with occasional revisions, was then presented annually for fifty years (excluding 1943–47). Harold I. Hansen, a missionary with theatrical training, was named codirector and thereafter continued as director for forty years, overseeing the installation of a sound system built by stereophonic sound pioneer Harvey Fletcher, the expansion of the all-volunteer cast and crew to almost six hundred participants, and the run extended to seven performances. In 1957 the pageant was recorded with original music by Crawford Gates.

On July 22, 1988, a new America's Witness for Christ, written by Orson Scott Card with music again by Crawford Gates, premiered. Its major theme—the reality of Christ's atonement, resurrection, and ministry to the Nephites—is boldly portrayed through events recorded in the Book of Mormon. The visual aspects of the pageant were also updated, with new stages, seating, properties, costumes, and special effects, and a recontoured and landscaped hill.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Argetsinger, Gerald S. "Palmyra: A Look at 40 Years of Pageant." Ensign 7 (Dec. 1977):70–71.
- Armstrong, Richard N., and Gerald S. Argetsinger. "The Hill Cumorah Pageant: Religious Pageantry as Suasive Form." Text and Performance Quarterly 2 (1989):153–64.
- Whitman, Charles W. "A History of the Hill Cumorah Pageant, 1937–1964." Ph.D. diss., University of Minnesota, 1967.

GERALD S. ARGETSINGER

---

CURRICULUM

The Church provides a standard set of curricular materials to all of its units throughout the world. Some matters of basic curriculum had been formatted and distributed to the Church membership since the early days of the Church, but as the AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS were formed, such as the Sunday School, Primary, Relief Society, and the Young Men and Young Women, each developed its own curriculum to help teach members. Eventually it became desirable to coordinate curriculum materials among these auxiliary organizations to avoid undesirable duplication and to ensure the coverage of important topics at all age levels.

At present, over 200 topics are considered annually in the lesson manuals prepared for the courses included in the Church curriculum. These topics are in the general areas of gospel principles father had buried the other plates, thus equating this New York hill with the Book of Mormon Cumorah. Because the New York site does not readily fit the Book of Mormon description of BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY, some Latter-day Saints have looked for other possible explanations and locations, including Mesoamerica. Although some have identified possible sites that may seem to fit better (Palmer), there are no conclusive connections between the Book of Mormon text and any specific site that has been suggested.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, John. "A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geographies." Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 1 (1989):20–70.
- Palmer, David A. In Search of Cumorah: New Evidences for the Book of Mormon from Ancient Mexico. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.
- Sorenson, John L. "Digging into the Book of Mormon: Part One." Ensign 14 (1984):26–37.

DAVID A. PALMER

---

CUMORAH PAGEANT

America's Witness for Christ has been presented at the hill CUMORAH in upstate New York nearly every summer since 1937. Recognized as one of America's largest and most spectacular outdoor theatrical events, it attracts an annual audience of almost 100,000 visitors to its seven performances.

This tradition dates back to 1917, when B. H. Roberts and a group of missionaries went to the Joseph Smith farm outside Palmyra, New York, to celebrate PIONEER DAY. Commencing in 1922, the "Palmyra Celebration" became an annual missionary conference for the Eastern States Mission. In July 1935, as part of the dedicatory exercises for the Angel Moroni Monument, trumpeters at the crest of the hill heralded the commencement of the first production at Cumorah. The next year a pageant, "Truth from the Earth," was presented, and plans were announced to make a pageant at the hill Cumorah an annual event.

Two pageants were presented in 1937: a play about the Mormon pioneer handcart companies, The Builders by Oliver R. Smith, on July 24, and America's Witness For Christ by H. Wayne Driggs on July 23 and 25. The latter script, with occasional revisions, was then presented annually for fifty years (excluding 1943–47). Harold I. Hansen, a missionary with theatrical training, was named codirector and thereafter continued as director for forty years, overseeing the installation of a sound system built by stereophonic sound pioneer Harvey Fletcher, the expansion of the all-volunteer cast and crew to almost six hundred participants, and the run extended to seven performances. In 1957 the pageant was recorded with original music by Crawford Gates.

On July 22, 1988, a new America's Witness for Christ, written by Orson Scott Card with music again by Crawford Gates, premiered. Its major theme—the reality of Christ's atonement, resurrection, and ministry to the Nephites—is boldly portrayed through events recorded in the Book of Mormon. The visual aspects of the pageant were also updated, with new stages, seating, properties, costumes, and special effects, and a recontoured and landscaped hill.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Argetsinger, Gerald S. "Palmyra: A Look at 40 Years of Pageant." Ensign 7 (Dec. 1977):70–71.
- Armstrong, Richard N., and Gerald S. Argetsinger. "The Hill Cumorah Pageant: Religious Pageantry as Suasive Form." Text and Performance Quarterly 2 (1989):153–64.
- Whitman, Charles W. "A History of the Hill Cumorah Pageant, 1937–1964." Ph.D. diss., University of Minnesota, 1967.

GERALD S. ARGETSINGER

---

CURRICULUM

The Church provides a standard set of curricular materials to all of its units throughout the world. Some matters of basic curriculum had been formatted and distributed to the Church membership since the early days of the Church, but as the AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS were formed, such as the Sunday School, Primary, Relief Society, and the Young Men and Young Women, each developed its own curriculum to help teach members. Eventually it became desirable to coordinate curriculum materials among these auxiliary organizations to avoid undesirable duplication and to ensure the coverage of important topics at all age levels.

At present, over 200 topics are considered annually in the lesson manuals prepared for the courses included in the Church curriculum. These topics are in the general areas of gospel principles and doctrines, home and family relationships, priesthood and Church government, historical study of the scriptures and the Church, development of individual talents and abilities, community relations, development of leadership abilities, teaching skills and talents, recreational and social activities, and fellowshiping and service activities (Table 1).

TABLE 1

1. HOME AND FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

- 1.1 Maintaining a spiritual atmosphere in the home
  - 1.1.1 Having regular family and individual prayers
  - 1.1.2 Keeping the Sabbath Day holy
  - 1.1.3 Establishing the home as the center for gospel study
  - 1.1.4 Seeking the inspiration of the Holy Ghost in all family affairs
- 1.2 Building right relationships with other family members
- 1.3 Building confidence and trust in the lives of members of the family
- 1.4 Developing and fostering individual talents and abilities within the family circle
- 1.5 Settling family problems harmoniously
- 1.6 Managing family finances according to gospel principles
- 1.7 Developing self-discipline and proper conduct in the home
- 1.8 Promoting respect for the property of other family members
- 1.9 Learning about human maturation and the process of procreation in the family circle
- 1.10 Conducting an eternal courtship
- 1.11 Honoring the priesthood and the patriarchal order in the home
- 1.12 Honoring womanhood and the distinctive role of girls and women
- 1.13 Honoring manhood and the distinctive role of men and boys
- 1.14 Developing modesty and virtue in the home
- 1.15 Playing together and having fun as a family
- 1.16 Sharing in the family work schedule
- 1.17 Appreciating and loving relatives
- 1.18 Developing parental skills
- 1.19 Learning to use time wisely
- 1.20 Being responsible for the temporal well-being of family members

2. GOSPEL PRINCIPLES AND DOCTRINES

- 2.1 Developing an understanding of and a love for the members of the Godhead
  - 2.1.1 The Father

2.1.2 The Son

2.1.3 The Holy Ghost

2.2 Learning the true nature of man and his relationship to the Godhead

2.2.1 As an intelligence

2.2.2 As a spirit child of Heavenly Father

2.2.3 As spirit brothers and sisters of Jesus Christ

2.2.4 The potential to become like Heavenly Father

2.2.4.1 Understanding oneself and developing self-esteem

2.3 Gaining an understanding and testimony of the Plan of Salvation

2.3.1 The premortal existence of man

2.3.1.1 The grand council in heaven

2.3.1.2 The principle of agency in the pre-existence

2.3.1.3 Lucifer

2.3.1.4 Jehovah and his followers

2.3.1.5 The doctrine of foreordination

2.3.2 The nature and purpose of mortal life

2.3.2.1 The earth, its creation and destiny

2.3.2.2 The need for a body of flesh and bone

2.3.2.3 The fall of Adam and Eve and all mankind (the spiritual and physical deaths)

2.3.2.4 Probation of man: personal accountability and free agency

2.3.2.5 Universal faith

2.3.2.6 Faith in the Godhead

2.3.2.6.1 Faith in God the Father

2.3.2.6.2 Faith in Jesus Christ

2.3.2.7 Repentance

2.3.2.8 Baptism

2.3.2.9 Obedience: enduring to the end

2.3.2.10 The mission and atonement of Jesus Christ

2.3.2.11 Forgiveness

2.3.2.12 Gift of the Holy Ghost

2.3.2.13 Obtaining and building a testimony

2.3.2.14 Covenants

2.3.2.15 Light of Christ

2.3.2.16 Need for opposition

2.3.2.17 Birth of the spirit

2.3.2.18 Revelation

2.3.2.19 Continuing study of the gospel and the scriptures

2.3.2.20 Prayer and meditation

2.3.2.21 Fasting

2.3.2.22 Word of Wisdom

- 2.3.2.23 Purity of thought
  - 2.3.2.24 The Sabbath day
  - 2.3.2.25 Tithes and offerings
  - 2.3.2.26 Temples and houses of worship
  - 2.3.2.27 Temple marriage and the eternal family
  - 2.3.2.28 Vicarious work for the dead
  - 2.3.2.29 Setting a good example
  - 2.3.2.30 Being humble and teachable
  - 2.3.2.31 Feeling and showing gratitude
  - 2.3.2.32 Justice and mercy
  - 2.3.2.33 Chastity, virtue, and modesty
  - 2.3.2.34 Honesty and integrity
  - 2.3.2.35 Service
  - 2.3.2.36 Sacrifice
  - 2.3.2.37 Law of Consecration
  - 2.3.2.38 Following and sustaining Church leaders
  - 2.3.2.39 Reverence and worship
  - 2.3.2.40 Eternal progress
  - 2.3.2.41 Love and charity
  - 2.3.2.42 Spiritual gifts
  - 2.3.2.43 The Church organization
  - 2.3.2.44 Sharing the gospel with others
  - 2.3.2.45 Apostasy
  - 2.3.2.46 Restoration
  - 2.3.2.47 Dispensation of the Fulness of Times
  - 2.3.2.48 House of Israel
  - 2.3.2.49 Pure and uplifting language
  - 2.3.2.50 Zion
  - 2.3.2.51 The kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of God
  - 2.3.2.52 Signs of the times
  - 2.3.2.53 The sacrament
  - 2.3.2.54 The endowment
  - 2.3.2.55 Self-mastery
  - 2.3.2.56 Prophets
  - 2.3.2.57 Honoring fathers and mothers
  - 2.3.2.58 Consequences of sin
  - 2.3.2.59 Satan's influence for evil among mortal men
  - 2.3.2.60 Reverence for life
  - 2.3.3 The post-mortal existence of men
    - 2.3.3.1 The state of disembodiment
    - 2.3.3.2 The Second Coming of Christ
    - 2.3.3.3 The Millennium
    - 2.3.3.4 The Judgment
    - 2.3.3.5 The Resurrection
    - 2.3.3.6 Degrees of glory: universal salvation
- 3. PRIESTHOOD AND CHURCH GOVERNMENT
- 3.1 Gaining an understanding of the priesthood
    - 3.1.1 The oath and covenant of the priesthood
    - 3.1.2 The keys of the priesthood
    - 3.1.3 The authority and power of the priesthood
  - 3.2 Priesthood ordinances
    - 3.2.1 What the priesthood ordinances are and their purpose
    - 3.2.2 How the priesthood ordinances are performed
  - 3.3 Understanding general priesthood responsibilities
    - 3.3.1 Home teaching
    - 3.3.2 Welfare
    - 3.3.3 Genealogy
    - 3.3.4 Missionary work
    - 3.3.5 Family home evenings
    - 3.3.6 Fellowshiping and service
  - 3.4 Understanding priesthood organization
    - 3.4.1 The family
    - 3.4.2 Priesthood quorums
    - 3.4.3 Wards and branches
    - 3.4.4 Stakes and mission membership districts
    - 3.4.5 Missions
    - 3.4.6 Regions
    - 3.4.7 General offices
    - 3.4.8 Priesthood departments and programs
    - 3.4.9 Auxiliaries
    - 3.4.10 Church Education System
    - 3.4.11 Calling and sustaining of Church officers
    - 3.4.12 Record keeping
  - 3.5 Knowing the priesthood offices and their duties
  - 3.6 Gaining an understanding of the distinctive role of women in the priesthood structure of the Church
    - 3.6.1 How women share in priesthood blessings and opportunities
  - 3.7 Financial contributions and how they are used
  - 3.8 Church meetings and their purpose
  - 3.9 The Church judicial system
- 4. HISTORICAL STUDY OF THE SCRIPTURES AND THE CHURCH
- 4.1 Learning of God's commandments and his dealings with men through a historical study of the scriptures
  - 4.2 Obtaining an overview of the scriptures, how we received them, and what they contain
  - 4.3 An overview of the Old Testament and Pearl of Great Price
    - 4.3.1 A study of the creation of the earth and man's beginnings upon the earth (Genesis, Abraham, Moses)
    - 4.3.2 Ancient Israel and the prophets (Old Testament)

- 4.4 An overview of the New Testament
  - 4.4.1 The life and mission of Jesus Christ (The four Gospels)
  - 4.4.2 The Early Church (Acts, the Epistles, and Revelation)
- 4.5 The Apostasy
  - 4.5.1 The Reformation period
- 4.6 An overview of the Book of Mormon
  - 4.6.1 God establishes a covenant people in the New World (1 Nephi through Omni)
  - 4.6.2 God's dealings with the ancient Americans before Christ (Words of Mormon through Helaman)
  - 4.6.3 The Church of Jesus Christ in ancient America (3 Nephi through Moroni)
- 4.7 The Restoration, an overview of early modern Church history and the Doctrine and Covenants
  - 4.7.1 Organization and establishment of the Latter-day Church (Doctrine and Covenants, Joseph Smith, Documentary History of the Church)
- 4.8 Modern prophets and Church growth
  - 4.8.1 A study of later modern Church history and Church expansion (Conference Reports and other official documents)
- 5. DEVELOPMENT OF INDIVIDUAL TALENTS AND ABILITIES
  - 5.1 Understanding and applying the simple social graces
  - 5.2 Appreciating and participating in things of cultural value
    - 5.2.1 Drama
    - 5.2.2 Music
    - 5.2.3 Literature
    - 5.2.4 Dance
    - 5.2.5 Art and handcraft
    - 5.2.6 Speech
  - 5.3 Continuing with formal or informal education in secular and religious fields
  - 5.4 Improving employment and career planning skills
  - 5.5 Improving homemaking and household maintenance skills
  - 5.6 Keeping physically fit and active
  - 5.7 Gaining an appreciation for nature and the creations of God
  - 5.8 Knowing the skills of outdoor living and survival
  - 5.9 Knowing the values of good health care
  - 5.10 Knowing the values of work and of being self-sustaining
  - 5.11 Knowing how to handle health emergencies
- 6. COMMUNITY RELATIONS
  - 6.1 Fulfilling our responsibilities in civil government and community affairs
  - 6.2 Maintaining high community standards
  - 6.3 Making appropriate use of community facilities and institutions
  - 6.4 Taking appropriate part in community social and service organizations
  - 6.5 Building a positive community image for the Church and Church members
  - 6.6 Balancing involvement in community and Church activity
  - 6.7 Being obedient to civil laws
  - 6.8 Being a good friend and neighbor
- 7. DEVELOPMENT OF LEADERSHIP ABILITIES
  - 7.1 Developing effective communication skills
  - 7.2 Delegating responsibility
  - 7.3 Following up on delegated responsibility
  - 7.4 Learning the duties of our callings
  - 7.5 Utilizing problem-solving techniques
  - 7.6 Using inspiration in decision making
  - 7.7 Conducting effective meetings
  - 7.8 Setting and achieving goals
  - 7.9 Keeping and using adequate minutes and records
  - 7.10 Following line and staff organizational patterns
  - 7.11 Recognizing and developing the leadership potential in others
  - 7.12 Sustaining and using the help and counsel of those who preside over us
  - 7.13 Working with committees and groups
  - 7.14 Keeping an eye single to the glory of God
  - 7.15 Observing the stewardship principle
  - 7.16 Motivating ourselves and others
  - 7.17 Evaluating progress and recovering from temporary setbacks
  - 7.18 Accepting responsibility and being personally accountable
  - 7.19 Using Church organizations and programs to accomplish objectives
  - 7.20 Effective planning
- 8. DEVELOPMENT OF TEACHING SKILLS AND TALENTS
  - 8.1 Identifying student needs and interests
  - 8.2 Teaching for understanding of ideas and concepts
  - 8.3 Teaching for reinforcement of or change in behavior
  - 8.4 Reaching individual needs of class members
  - 8.5 Making proper preparation to teach
  - 8.6 Seeking qualified help to improve teaching skills
  - 8.7 Practicing in a teaching situation
  - 8.8 Teaching with testimony and with the power and influence of the Holy Spirit
  - 8.9 Using a variety of methods and techniques
  - 8.10 Maintaining order and reverence in the classroom

- 8.11 Setting a proper example for those whom we teach
- 8.12 Evaluating the progress of students
- 8.13 Establishing effective communication with and among students
- 9. RECREATION AND SOCIAL ACTIVITIES
  - 9.1 Participating in sports and competitive athletics on ward, stake, region, and multi-region levels
  - 9.2 Participating in camping and nature study activities
  - 9.3 Participating in dancing, parties, outings, and other social activities
- 10. FELLOWSHIPING AND SERVICE ACTIVITIES
  - 10.1 Orienting new members to Church programs and activities
  - 10.2 Using Church programs, resources, and activities to fellowship members and nonmembers
  - 10.3 Fellowshiping those from varying racial, national, cultural, and language backgrounds
  - 10.4 Participating in service activities and projects
    - 10.4.1 In families
    - 10.4.2 In priesthood quorums
    - 10.4.3 In girls' and women's groups
    - 10.4.4 In ward, stake, and regional groups
  - 10.5 Sharing individual resources with those in need
    - 10.5.1 Material goods
    - 10.5.2 Skills and talents
  - 10.6 Brotherhood and sisterhood

The GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, as expounded in the scriptures and supplemented and interpreted by living prophets, forms the basis of LDS curriculum. The purpose of the curriculum was defined by the Prophet Joseph SMITH: "The fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the Apostles and Prophets concerning Jesus Christ, that He died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended into heaven; and all other things which pertain to our religion are only appendages to it" (TPJS, p. 121). In support of this purpose, . . . LDS curriculum centers on the scriptures, and focuses on the nature of the Godhead, the nature and purpose of mortal life, the commandments God has given to his children, and the virtues they should develop. A master plan provides the necessary coordination to assure that all members are taught these principles several times throughout their lives at different levels of understanding and experience.

Although the curriculum is highly coordinated, there are still variations in content and its application. Local units and teachers adapt the materials sent from Church headquarters to meet the local needs and fit the local culture. In areas where literacy is limited or members have had little prior instruction in gospel principles, a simplified curriculum may be used at the discretion of local leaders. Materials for the use of members with disabilities are also provided.

In addition to the lesson materials, the Church has supportive materials to aid both teachers and members. Libraries in most meeting-houses contain illustrations, audio recordings, video presentations, motion pictures, maps, and other aids for both teacher and member use. Satellite broadcasts are also periodically available. The Church also produces three monthly MAGAZINES for English-speaking children, youth, and adults, and an INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINE in several different languages to supplement the curriculum of the Church for teachers and to support scripture study by members.

In 1961, Elder Harold B. LEE, then of the Quorum of the Twelve, described the objective of the Church curriculum as "building up a knowledge of the gospel, a power to promulgate the same, a promotion of the growth, faith, and stronger testimony of the principles of the gospel" (Lee, p. 79). He also announced a new emphasis on correlation, citing a need for better coordination among the courses of study and for a reduction in new courses of study each year. The outcome of this charge was an all-Church coordinating council, three coordinating committees (one each for children, youth, and adults), and an extensive curricular planning guide.

In 1972, the Church formed the Internal Communications Department and gave it the responsibility for curriculum planning and writing. All the curricular materials were examined, and from that assessment developed Curriculum Planning Charts. The purposes of the charts were twofold: to measure existing materials, and from the measurement to plan a well-balanced future offering. The actions resulted in the formation of an Instructional Development Department and the establishment of numerous writing committees, whose responsibility is to plan lesson content and methodology for courses in all age groups within the priesthood and auxiliary organizations. Once again, the primary curricular resources are the scriptures, supplemented by quotations from modern prophets. Computer technology discloses the extent of the distribution of the topics throughout the curriculum. The planning charts track not only the number of times a topic is considered, but where the topic has a primary or secondary focus. Instrumental in the development of the present overall curricular plan, the planning charts continue to guide instructional decision making and to produce a unified, balanced, and standardized curriculum, marked by stability and expansiveness.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Lee, Harold B. CR (Oct. 1961):79.

WAYNE B. LYNN

---

CURSINGS

Cursings are the opposite of BLESSINGS and may be expressed as (1) the use of vulgar or profane language by people; (2) words or actions by God or his representatives expressing divine displeasure with or warning against wickedness; or (3) God's chastisement of mankind.

Cursing in the form of profane language employing names of deity literally "in vain" has been present in most societies. Since thought is expressed in language, vulgar and blasphemous language corrupts its user by establishing vulgar or profane thought patterns. The statement "Among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God and die" (D&C 45:32) illustrates both a cause and a consequence regarding profane language, with its effect on and relationship to spiritual life. Cursing that invokes the name of deity is a form of BLASPHEMY and, in biblical times, was punishable by stoning (Lev. 24:16). Cursing of parents was also cause for offenders to be put to death in ancient Israel (Ex. 21:17; Matt. 15:4).

Cursing may be the expression of divine displeasure, warning, or exclusion from God's blessing. Just as blessings are obtained by RIGHTEOUSNESS, cursings result from breaking God's law and failing to keep his commandments (Deut. 11:26–28; D&C 104:1–8; 124:48). Intelligent human beings are largely responsible for their own circumstances, and President Brigham YOUNG said the most severe cursings come upon "those who know their Master's will, and do it not" (JD 1:248). Sinning against light and knowledge has more serious consequences than sinning in ignorance (see Mosiah 2:36–37; cf. Alma 32:19–20; 39:6). ALMA<sub>2</sub> gives an example wherein the same land was simultaneously blessed for those who acted righteously and cursed for those who did not (Alma 45:16).

Curses may be pronounced by God, or they may be invoked by his authorized servants, as was the case with Moses (Deut. 27–30); Elijah (1 Kgs. 17:1; 21:20–24); Peter (Acts 5:1–10); Paul (Acts 13:9–12); and Joseph Smith (D&C 103:25; cf. 124:93). However, the Lord's earthly agents are sent forth primarily to bless and not to curse (Matt. 5:44; Rom. 12:14).

Not all curses have totally negative consequences. As God only does good, his cursings are for "the sake" of improving the person cursed (Gen. 3:17; Deut. 23:5), even though the immediate consequence may be extremely unpleasant. When there is need for correction, the Lord has instructed his servants to reprove "with sharpness," but afterward to show forth an "increase of love" (D&C 121:43).

Some cursings are given first as warnings rather than a more severe immediate chastisement (2 Ne. 1:21, 22); and, like blessings, they sometimes require a long time for their full consequences to be realized. After being invoked, cursings may often be lessened or lifted entirely by subsequent righteousness. Mormon describes an experience of the LAMANITES: "And they began to be a very industrious people; yea, and they were friendly with the Nephites; therefore, they did open a correspondence with them, and the curse of God did no more follow them" (Alma 23:18).

Cursings may affect all temporal and spiritual aspects of our lives because all things are governed by law. Lands, crops, handiwork, employment, children, missionary endeavor, interpersonal relationships, and relationships with God are all subject to both cursing and blessing—depending upon individual and collective righteousness or lack of it.

SHERWIN W. HOWARD

extent of the distribution of the topics throughout the curriculum. The planning charts track not only the number of times a topic is considered, but where the topic has a primary or secondary focus. Instrumental in the development of the present overall curricular plan, the planning charts continue to guide instructional decision making and to produce a unified, balanced, and standardized curriculum, marked by stability and expansiveness.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Lee, Harold B. CR (Oct. 1961):79.

WAYNE B. LYNN

---

CURSINGS

Cursings are the opposite of BLESSINGS and may be expressed as (1) the use of vulgar or profane language by people; (2) words or actions by God or his representatives expressing divine displeasure with or warning against wickedness; or (3) God's chastisement of mankind.

Cursing in the form of profane language employing names of deity literally "in vain" has been present in most societies. Since thought is expressed in language, vulgar and blasphemous language corrupts its user by establishing vulgar or profane thought patterns. The statement "Among the wicked, men shall lift up their voices and curse God and die" (D&C 45:32) illustrates both a cause and a consequence regarding profane language, with its effect on and relationship to spiritual life. Cursing that invokes the name of deity is a form of BLASPHEMY and, in biblical times, was punishable by stoning (Lev. 24:16). Cursing of parents was also cause for offenders to be put to death in ancient Israel (Ex. 21:17; Matt. 15:4).

Cursing may be the expression of divine displeasure, warning, or exclusion from God's blessing. Just as blessings are obtained by RIGHTEOUSNESS, cursings result from breaking God's law and failing to keep his commandments (Deut. 11:26–28; D&C 104:1–8; 124:48). Intelligent human beings are largely responsible for their own circumstances, and President Brigham YOUNG said the most severe cursings come upon "those who know their Master's will, and do it not" (JD 1:248). Sinning against light and knowledge has more serious consequences than sinning in ignorance (see Mosiah 2:36–37; cf. Alma 32:19–20; 39:6). ALMA<sub>2</sub> gives an example wherein the same land was simultaneously blessed for those who acted righteously and cursed for those who did not (Alma 45:16).

Curses may be pronounced by God, or they may be invoked by his authorized servants, as was the case with Moses (Deut. 27–30); Elijah (1 Kgs. 17:1; 21:20–24); Peter (Acts 5:1–10); Paul (Acts 13:9–12); and Joseph Smith (D&C 103:25; cf. 124:93). However, the Lord's earthly agents are sent forth primarily to bless and not to curse (Matt. 5:44; Rom. 12:14).

Not all curses have totally negative consequences. As God only does good, his cursings are for "the sake" of improving the person cursed (Gen. 3:17; Deut. 23:5), even though the immediate consequence may be extremely unpleasant. When there is need for correction, the Lord has instructed his servants to reprove "with sharpness," but afterward to show forth an "increase of love" (D&C 121:43).

Some cursings are given first as warnings rather than a more severe immediate chastisement (2 Ne. 1:21, 22); and, like blessings, they sometimes require a long time for their full consequences to be realized. After being invoked, cursings may often be lessened or lifted entirely by subsequent righteousness. Mormon describes an experience of the LAMANITES: "And they began to be a very industrious people; yea, and they were friendly with the Nephites; therefore, they did open a correspondence with them, and the curse of God did no more follow them" (Alma 23:18).

Cursings may affect all temporal and spiritual aspects of our lives because all things are governed by law. Lands, crops, handiwork, employment, children, missionary endeavor, interpersonal relationships, and relationships with God are all subject to both cursing and blessing—depending upon individual and collective righteousness or lack of it.

SHERWIN W. HOWARD

---

D

---

---

DAMNATION

“Damnation” is a term derived from the Latin damnum, meaning “injury” and “loss,” and often connotes deprivation of what should have been possessed. Just as there are varying degrees and types of SALVATION, coupled with ETERNAL PROGRESSION in some areas (D&C 76:96–98; 131:1–4), so are there varying degrees and types of damnation. In LDS doctrine, to be damned means to be stopped, blocked, or limited in one’s progress. Individuals are damned whenever they are prevented from reaching their full potential as children of God. Damnation is falling short of what one might have enjoyed if one had received and been faithful to the whole law of the gospel. In this sense, all who do not achieve the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM are damned, even though they are saved in some degree of glory. They are damned in the sense that they will not enjoy an ETERNAL INCREASE or the continuation of the family unit in eternity (D&C 132:4, 19). In this context, damnation does not necessarily refer to eternal suffering in hell with the devil, for loss of blessings is in itself a type of hell and damnation. LDS perspectives on this subject include biblical scriptures enriched and clarified by additional revelation; hence, damnation has a wider application than may seem apparent in modern usage (see DEGREES OF GLORY; EXALTATION; HEIRS).

In the scriptures, damnation usually refers to the judgment or condemnation that will be pronounced by Jesus Christ on the wicked at the end of the world (Matt. 25:41–46). “Damnation” is an English equivalent of the Hebrew rasha, which implies being wicked, impious, ungodly, or guilty, and the Greek krino, which implies being put under condemnation. While the word “damnation” appears regularly in the King James Version of the Bible, (i.e., in the New Testament) it is not found in several modern versions, which use words like “doom” or “condemnation” instead.

Many Jews and Christians reject the idea of damnation as an outmoded theological concept, but some Orthodox Jews and conservative Christians hold to a belief in final and eternal damnation. Conservative Christians generally believe that God himself will condemn unrepentant sinners based on justice as merited by the recipients (Matt. 12:41–42; John 12:48; Rom. 3:8). They hold, further, that Christ, the Redeemer, came to save rather than to condemn (John 3:17) and that he alone frees the individual from final damnation (Rom. 8:1–2).

Damnation comes as the result of not believing in the gospel (Mark 16:16), of not accepting additional light and knowledge (Alma 12:9–11), of believing in false doctrines (2 Pet. 2:1), of being slothful and having to be commanded in all things (D&C 58:26–29), and of refusing to humble oneself, repent, and live according to gospel principles. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, "God had decreed that all who will not obey His voice shall not escape the damnation of hell. What is the damnation of hell? To go with that society who have not obeyed His commands" (TPJS, p. 198; cf. pp. 322–23).

Damnation also results from partaking of the Lord's sacrament unworthily (1 Cor. 11:29), taking pleasure in unrighteousness (2 Thes. 2:12), engaging in adulterous relationships (1 Tim. 5:11–12), rejecting the law of the Church (D&C 42:60), neglecting the covenant of eternal marriage (D&C 132:4), altering the holy word of God (Morm. 8:33), and rejecting Jesus Christ (D&C 49:5). If persons do these things and do not repent, they are left without the protection of the law of God and without the spiritual nourishment that they could have enjoyed, and as a result they suffer damnation.

Damnation is not to be equated with never-ending torment or punishment. An early revelation to Joseph Smith explains, "It is not written that there shall be no end to this torment, but it is written endless torment. Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men" (D&C 19:6–7; see also ENDLESS AND ETERNAL). President Brigham YOUNG explained, "We believe that all will be damned who do not receive the gospel of Jesus Christ; but we do not believe that they will go into a lake which burns with brimstone and fire, and suffer unnamed and unheard of torments, inflicted by cruel and malicious devils to all eternity. The sectarian doctrine of final rewards and punishments is as strange to me as their bodiless, partless, and passionless God. Every man will receive according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad. All men, excepting those who sin against the Holy Ghost, who shed innocent blood or who consent thereto, will be saved in some kingdom; for in my father's house, says Jesus, are many mansions" (JD 11:125–26).

Ultimate and total damnation comes only to the devil and his angels, who rebelled in the FIRST ESTATE, and to the SONS OF PERDITION, who are damned eternally and denied entrance into any kingdom of glory hereafter (D&C 76:32–34). The sons of perdition are those guilty of unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost (D&C 132:27; cf. Mark 3:29), which includes the willful denial of the "Only Begotten Son of the Father, having crucified him unto themselves and put him to an open shame" (D&C 76:35).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. "Marriage and Divorce." In 1976 Speeches of the Year, p. 154. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- Lee, Harold B. "Spiritual Rebirth and Death." IE 50 (Nov. 1947):716, 752, 754.
- Stuy, Brian, ed. Discourse by George Q. Cannon. In Collected Discourses, 3 vols.; Vol. 2, pp. 64–76. Sandy, Utah, 1987–1989.

RICHARD NEITZEL HOLZAPFEL

---

DANCE

In 1830 when the Church was organized, many Christian denominations were hostile toward recreation and play, particularly dance. However, the Prophet Joseph SMITH and his successors advocated dance and participated in recreational dancing. Joseph Smith was a skillful dancer and enjoyed hosting dances in his home (Holbrook, p. 122). Brigham YOUNG and the Quorum of the Twelve "danced before the Lord" to the music of a small orchestra in the Nauvoo Temple after long days of joyous participation in temple ordinances (IIC 7:557, 566; Holbrook, p. 123).

The revealed doctrine that the body and spirit together comprise the soul tends to encourage physical activity (D&C 88:15). Early Latter-day Saints commended dancing as healthful to body and mind, but only when conducted in accordance with Church principles. Emphasis was on propriety, good company, and the spirit of praising the Lord. During their difficult trek west, the pioneers danced as "camps of Israel." President Brigham Young said "I want you to sing and dance and forget your troubles. . . . Let's have some music and all of you dance" (Holbrook, p. 125). Around the campfires they danced polkas, Scotch reels, quadrilles, French fours, and other figures.

In the West, the Saints continued to enjoy dancing. Brigham Young emphasized that fiddling and dancing were not to be part of formal worship (Holbrook, p. 131), and he counseled that those who cannot serve God with a pure heart in the dance should not dance. Under these guidelines, dance continued as an integral part of Mormon culture.

self, repent, and live according to gospel principles. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, "God had decreed that all who will not obey His voice shall not escape the damnation of hell. What is the damnation of hell? To go with that society who have not obeyed His commands" (TPJS, p. 198; cf. pp. 322–23).

Damnation also results from partaking of the Lord's sacrament unworthily (1 Cor. 11:29), taking pleasure in unrighteousness (2 Thes. 2:12), engaging in adulterous relationships (1 Tim. 5:11–12), rejecting the law of the Church (D&C 42:60), neglecting the covenant of eternal marriage (D&C 132:4), altering the holy word of God (Morm. 8:33), and rejecting Jesus Christ (D&C 49:5). If persons do these things and do not repent, they are left without the protection of the law of God and without the spiritual nourishment that they could have enjoyed, and as a result they suffer damnation.

Damnation is not to be equated with never-ending torment or punishment. An early revelation to Joseph Smith explains, "It is not written that there shall be no end to this torment, but it is written endless torment. Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men" (D&C 19:6–7; see also ENDLESS AND ETERNAL). President Brigham YOUNG explained, "We believe that all will be damned who do not receive the gospel of Jesus Christ; but we do not believe that they will go into a lake which burns with brimstone and fire, and suffer unnamed and unheard of torments, inflicted by cruel and malicious devils to all eternity. The sectarian doctrine of final rewards and punishments is as strange to me as their bodiless, partless, and passionless God. Every man will receive according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad. All men, excepting those who sin against the Holy Ghost, who shed innocent blood or who consent thereto, will be saved in some kingdom; for in my father's house, says Jesus, are many mansions" (JD 11:125–26).

Ultimate and total damnation comes only to the devil and his angels, who rebelled in the FIRST ESTATE, and to the SONS OF PERDITION, who are damned eternally and denied entrance into any kingdom of glory hereafter (D&C 76:32–34). The sons of perdition are those guilty of unpardonable sin against the Holy Ghost (D&C 132:27; cf. Mark 3:29), which includes the willful denial of the

"Only Begotten Son of the Father, having crucified him unto themselves and put him to an open shame" (D&C 76:35).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. "Marriage and Divorce." In 1976 Speeches of the Year, p. 154. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- Lee, Harold B. "Spiritual Rebirth and Death." IE 50 (Nov. 1947):716, 752, 754.
- Stuy, Brian, ed. Discourse by George Q. Cannon. In Collected Discourses, 3 vols.; Vol. 2, pp. 64–76. Sandy, Utah, 1987–1989.

RICHARD NEITZEL HOLZAPFEL

---

DANCE

In 1830 when the Church was organized, many Christian denominations were hostile toward recreation and play, particularly dance. However, the Prophet Joseph SMITH and his successors advocated dance and participated in recreational dancing. Joseph Smith was a skillful dancer and enjoyed hosting dances in his home (Holbrook, p. 122). Brigham YOUNG and the Quorum of the Twelve "danced before the Lord" to the music of a small orchestra in the Nauvoo Temple after long days of joyous participation in temple ordinances (IIC 7:557, 566; Holbrook, p. 123).

The revealed doctrine that the body and spirit together comprise the soul tends to encourage physical activity (D&C 88:15). Early Latter-day Saints commended dancing as healthful to body and mind, but only when conducted in accordance with Church principles. Emphasis was on propriety, good company, and the spirit of praising the Lord. During their difficult trek west, the pioneers danced as "camps of Israel." President Brigham Young said "I want you to sing and dance and forget your troubles. . . . Let's have some music and all of you dance" (Holbrook, p. 125). Around the campfires they danced polkas, Scotch reels, quadrilles, French fours, and other figures.

In the West, the Saints continued to enjoy dancing. Brigham Young emphasized that fiddling and dancing were not to be part of formal worship (Holbrook, p. 131), and he counseled that those who cannot serve God with a pure heart in the dance should not dance. Under these guidelines, dance continued as an integral part of Mormon culture.

The Deseret Musical and Dramatic Society was organized in 1862, and theatrical dance soon became a favorite attraction. Worship services and social activities were usually held in the same place, although at separate times. This practice, which prevailed in the frontier “brush bowery,” continues today in LDS meetinghouses, which typically feature a cultural-recreation hall, complete with stage, adjacent to the chapel.

In the early and mid-twentieth century, the Mutual Improvement Association sponsored recreational and theatrical dance training and exhibitions (see YOUNG MEN and YOUNG WOMEN). Gold and Green Balls were annual social events in each WARD and STAKE. All-Church dance festivals held in Salt Lake City from 1922 to 1973 gained national recognition. After 8,000 dancers in bright costumes participated at the festival in 1959, a national news magazine described the Church as the “dancingest denomination” (Arrington, p. 31). In 1985, 13,000 dancers performed in the Southern California Regional Dance Festival with more than 100,000 viewing the two performances. Dance festivals continued at local levels from 1973 to 1990, when they were finally discontinued as major performances.

Dancing, however, continues as an integral part of youth and adult activities in the Church. It permeates many facets of campus life, entertainment, and performing arts programs at Church-sponsored schools. For example, more than 12,000 Brigham Young University students enroll annually for academic credit in ballet, ballroom, folk, modern, jazz, tap, aerobic, and precision dance courses. Student performing companies in ballet, ballroom, folk, and modern dance have gained national and international recognition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Georganne Ballif. “Dance in Mormonism.” In Focus on Dance X: Religion and Dance, ed. Dennis J. Fallon and Mary Jane Wolbers. Reston, Va., 1982.
- Holbrook, Leona. “Dancing as an Aspect of Early Mormon and Utah Culture.” BYU Studies 16 (Autumn 1975):117–38.

PHYLLIS C. JACOBSON

---

DANIEL, PROPHECIES OF

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints regards the book of Daniel as the writings of Daniel, who was deported from Jerusalem to Babylon (c. 606 B.C.), and accepts the work as SCRIPTURE. It sees in the work significant PROPHECIES about the latter days, including the APOSTASY from and RESTORATION of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

According to Wilford WOODRUFF, the angel Moroni quoted to the Prophet Joseph SMITH from Daniel chapter two which features a prophecy of the latter-day restoration of the gospel in Nebuchadnezzar’s dream concerning “what shall be in the latter days” (Dan. 2:28; Whittaker, p. 159). Daniel identified the “head of gold” in the dream as a symbol of Nebuchadnezzar’s empire, and latter-day PROPHETS have specified that the stone “cut out without hands” (Dan. 2:34) represents the latter-day KINGDOM OF GOD (D&C 65:2; HC 1:xxxiv–xl). The remaining symbols have been interpreted as follows: The “breast and arms of silver” represent the Persian realm that superseded Babylon. The “belly and thighs of brass” prefigure the succeeding Hellenistic states. The two “legs of iron” point to the Roman Empire, foreshadowing the division between Rome and Constantinople. The feet of the image, “part of iron and part of clay,” symbolize the European kingdoms that grew out of the dissolving Roman Empire, beginning in the fifth century. Those kingdoms merged the culture of Rome with that of northern and eastern European tribes; hence, the symbolic mixing of iron and clay.

In the days of those kingdoms, Daniel predicted, “the God of heaven [will] set up a kingdom, which . . . shall stand for ever” (2:44). This final kingdom, represented by the stone “cut out without hands,” is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, restored to the earth in 1830, when European monarchs still ruled. That the Church would spread throughout the world is seen when “the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth” (2:34–35; Kimball, p. 8).

Daniel’s vision in chapter seven is also interpreted in the context of the LAST DAYS. The “four great beasts” (Dan. 7:3) seem to represent successive empires of Babylon, Persia, Macedonia, and Rome; and the “ten horns” (7:7) of the fourth beast appear to symbolize again the kingdoms that succeeded the Roman Empire. Latter-day prophets identify the “Ancient of Days” (7:22) as Adam, who will preside at a gathering to be held at ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN in Missouri before Jesus’ second coming (D&C 116). At that assembly, Jesus, “the

The Deseret Musical and Dramatic Society was organized in 1862, and theatrical dance soon became a favorite attraction. Worship services and social activities were usually held in the same place, although at separate times. This practice, which prevailed in the frontier “brush bowery,” continues today in LDS meetinghouses, which typically feature a cultural-recreation hall, complete with stage, adjacent to the chapel.

In the early and mid-twentieth century, the Mutual Improvement Association sponsored recreational and theatrical dance training and exhibitions (see YOUNG MEN and YOUNG WOMEN). Gold and Green Balls were annual social events in each WARD and STAKE. All-Church dance festivals held in Salt Lake City from 1922 to 1973 gained national recognition. After 8,000 dancers in bright costumes participated at the festival in 1959, a national news magazine described the Church as the “dancingest denomination” (Arrington, p. 31). In 1985, 13,000 dancers performed in the Southern California Regional Dance Festival with more than 100,000 viewing the two performances. Dance festivals continued at local levels from 1973 to 1990, when they were finally discontinued as major performances.

Dancing, however, continues as an integral part of youth and adult activities in the Church. It permeates many facets of campus life, entertainment, and performing arts programs at Church-sponsored schools. For example, more than 12,000 Brigham Young University students enroll annually for academic credit in ballet, ballroom, folk, modern, jazz, tap, aerobic, and precision dance courses. Student performing companies in ballet, ballroom, folk, and modern dance have gained national and international recognition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Georganne Ballif. “Dance in Mormonism.” In Focus on Dance X: Religion and Dance, ed. Dennis J. Fallon and Mary Jane Wolbers. Reston, Va., 1982.
- Holbrook, Leona. “Dancing as an Aspect of Early Mormon and Utah Culture.” BYU Studies 16 (Autumn 1975):117–38.

PHYLLIS C. JACOBSON

---

DANIEL, PROPHECIES OF

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints regards the book of Daniel as the writings of Daniel, who was deported from Jerusalem to Babylon (c. 606 B.C.), and accepts the work as SCRIPTURE. It sees in the work significant PROPHECIES about the latter days, including the APOSTASY from and RESTORATION of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

According to Wilford WOODRUFF, the angel Moroni quoted to the Prophet Joseph SMITH from Daniel chapter two which features a prophecy of the latter-day restoration of the gospel in Nebuchadnezzar’s dream concerning “what shall be in the latter days” (Dan. 2:28; Whittaker, p. 159). Daniel identified the “head of gold” in the dream as a symbol of Nebuchadnezzar’s empire, and latter-day PROPHETS have specified that the stone “cut out without hands” (Dan. 2:34) represents the latter-day KINGDOM OF GOD (D&C 65:2; HC 1:xxxiv–xl). The remaining symbols have been interpreted as follows: The “breast and arms of silver” represent the Persian realm that superseded Babylon. The “belly and thighs of brass” prefigure the succeeding Hellenistic states. The two “legs of iron” point to the Roman Empire, foreshadowing the division between Rome and Constantinople. The feet of the image, “part of iron and part of clay,” symbolize the European kingdoms that grew out of the dissolving Roman Empire, beginning in the fifth century. Those kingdoms merged the culture of Rome with that of northern and eastern European tribes; hence, the symbolic mixing of iron and clay.

In the days of those kingdoms, Daniel predicted, “the God of heaven [will] set up a kingdom, which . . . shall stand for ever” (2:44). This final kingdom, represented by the stone “cut out without hands,” is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, restored to the earth in 1830, when European monarchs still ruled. That the Church would spread throughout the world is seen when “the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth” (2:34–35; Kimball, p. 8).

Daniel’s vision in chapter seven is also interpreted in the context of the LAST DAYS. The “four great beasts” (Dan. 7:3) seem to represent successive empires of Babylon, Persia, Macedonia, and Rome; and the “ten horns” (7:7) of the fourth beast appear to symbolize again the kingdoms that succeeded the Roman Empire. Latter-day prophets identify the “Ancient of Days” (7:22) as Adam, who will preside at a gathering to be held at ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN in Missouri before Jesus’ second coming (D&C 116). At that assembly, Jesus, “the Son of Man,” will appear. Acting for PRIESTHOOD leaders in all DISPENSATIONS, Adam will return to the risen Jesus the priesthood KEYS which represent everlasting dominion.

The prophecy of the “seventy weeks” in chapter nine interests Latter-day Saints because it suggests that the New Testament church would fall into apostasy. The sixty-nine weeks (Dan. 9:24–26) may be symbolic of the period between the Jews’ return to Jerusalem (537 B.C.) and the coming of Jesus the MESSIAH, who would atone (“be cut off”) for his people. Verse 27 reports that the Lord would “confirm the covenant with many for one week.” This seventieth week may typify the decades that Christ’s true church endured, led then by living apostles and prophets, ending shortly after A.D. 100, following the ministry of John the Apostle. The prophecy also notes that Jerusalem and its temple would be destroyed “in the midst of the week” (A.D. 70), mentioning the abomination of desolation and the cessation of temple SACRIFICE (cf. Mark 13:14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. “A Stone Cut Without Hands.” Ensign 6 (May 1976):4–9.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah, chap. 11, 47. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Sperry, Sidney B. The Voice of Israel’s Prophets. Salt Lake City, 1952.
- Whittaker, David J. “The Book of Daniel in Early Mormon Thought.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 1, pp. 155–201. Salt Lake City, 1990.

JEFFREY R. CHADWICK

---

DANITES

Following the violence in northwestern Missouri in 1838, the Mormon dissident Sampson Avar, star witness in a court of inquiry weighing evidence against LDS leaders, charged that the Church had organized a band of armed men bound by secret oaths who had engaged in illegal activities against non-Mormon neighbors (Document, pp. 97–108). With the 1841 publication of the court proceedings, Avar’s account became the foundation for all subsequent non-Mormon “Danite” accounts. Thus was born the legend of the Danites.

Though no Danite organization was known in Nanvoo or in Utah, the stereotype persisted, becoming a part of national discussion about Utah and the Latter-day Saints and for decades a staple of dime novels (see MORMONS, IMAGE OF; IN FICTION). By 1900 at least fifty novels had been published in English using the Avar-type Danite to develop story lines of murder, pillage, and conspiracy against common citizens. Arthur Conan Doyle (A Study in Scarlet) created Sherlock Holmes to solve a murder committed by Danites. Zane Grey (Riders of the Purple Sage) and Robert Louis Stevenson (The Dynamiter) were among the authors who found the image of the evil Danites well suited for popular reading audiences who delighted in sensationalism (Cornwall and Arrington). The image became so pervasive that few readers were willing to question the accuracy of such portrayals.

The reality of Danites in Missouri in 1838 is both less and more than the stereotype. Contemporary records suggest something fundamentally different. In October 1838, Albert Perry Rockwood, an LDS resident of Far West, Missouri, wrote in his journal of a public Danite organization that involved the whole Latter-day Saint community. He described in biblical terms companies of tens, fifties, and hundreds (cf. Ex. 18:13–26)—similar to the organization the pioneers later used during the migration to the Great Basin. Here the Danite organization encompassed the full range of activities of a covenant community that viewed itself as a restoration of ancient Israel. Working in groups, with some assigned to defense, others to securing provisions, and still others to constructing dwellings, these Danites served the interests of the whole. This was not the secret organization Avar spoke of; in fact, Rockwood’s letters to friends and family were even more descriptive than his journal (Jessee and Whittaker).

In the fall of 1838, with old settlers in Missouri swearing to drive the Mormons out rather than permit them to become a political majority and with LDS leaders declaring that they would fight before again seeing their rights trampled, northwestern Missouri was in a state of war (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Sparked by an effort to prevent LDS voting, violence erupted in August and soon spread. On both sides, skirmishes involved members of state-authorized militias. Evidence suggests that during this time of fear, clashes, and confusion, Sampson Avar, probably a captain within the public Danite structure and a militia officer, subverted the ideals of both by persuading

Son of Man,” will appear. Acting for PRIESTHOOD leaders in all DISPENSATIONS, Adam will return to the risen Jesus the priesthood KEYS which represent everlasting dominion.

The prophecy of the “seventy weeks” in chapter nine interests Latter-day Saints because it suggests that the New Testament church would fall into apostasy. The sixty-nine weeks (Dan. 9:24–26) may be symbolic of the period between the Jews’ return to Jerusalem (537 B.C.) and the coming of Jesus the MESSIAH, who would atone (“be cut off”) for his people. Verse 27 reports that the Lord would “confirm the covenant with many for one week.” This seventieth week may typify the decades that Christ’s true church endured, led then by living apostles and prophets, ending shortly after A.D. 100, following the ministry of John the Apostle. The prophecy also notes that Jerusalem and its temple would be destroyed “in the midst of the week” (A.D. 70), mentioning the abomination of desolation and the cessation of temple SACRIFICE (cf. Mark 13:14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. “A Stone Cut Without Hands.” Ensign 6 (May 1976):4–9.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah, chap. 11, 47. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Sperry, Sidney B. The Voice of Israel’s Prophets. Salt Lake City, 1952.
- Whittaker, David J. “The Book of Daniel in Early Mormon Thought.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 1, pp. 155–201. Salt Lake City, 1990.

JEFFREY R. CHADWICK

---

DANITES

Following the violence in northwestern Missouri in 1838, the Mormon dissident Sampson Avar, star witness in a court of inquiry weighing evidence against LDS leaders, charged that the Church had organized a band of armed men bound by secret oaths who had engaged in illegal activities against non-Mormon neighbors (Document, pp. 97–108). With the 1841 publication of the court proceedings, Avar’s account became the foundation for all subsequent non-Mormon “Danite” accounts. Thus was born the legend of the Danites.

Though no Danite organization was known in Nanvoo or in Utah, the stereotype persisted, becoming a part of national discussion about Utah and the Latter-day Saints and for decades a staple of dime novels (see MORMONS, IMAGE OF; IN FICTION). By 1900 at least fifty novels had been published in English using the Avar-type Danite to develop story lines of murder, pillage, and conspiracy against common citizens. Arthur Conan Doyle (A Study in Scarlet) created Sherlock Holmes to solve a murder committed by Danites. Zane Grey (Riders of the Purple Sage) and Robert Louis Stevenson (The Dynamiter) were among the authors who found the image of the evil Danites well suited for popular reading audiences who delighted in sensationalism (Cornwall and Arrington). The image became so pervasive that few readers were willing to question the accuracy of such portrayals.

The reality of Danites in Missouri in 1838 is both less and more than the stereotype. Contemporary records suggest something fundamentally different. In October 1838, Albert Perry Rockwood, an LDS resident of Far West, Missouri, wrote in his journal of a public Danite organization that involved the whole Latter-day Saint community. He described in biblical terms companies of tens, fifties, and hundreds (cf. Ex. 18:13–26)—similar to the organization the pioneers later used during the migration to the Great Basin. Here the Danite organization encompassed the full range of activities of a covenant community that viewed itself as a restoration of ancient Israel. Working in groups, with some assigned to defense, others to securing provisions, and still others to constructing dwellings, these Danites served the interests of the whole. This was not the secret organization Avar spoke of; in fact, Rockwood’s letters to friends and family were even more descriptive than his journal (Jessee and Whittaker).

In the fall of 1838, with old settlers in Missouri swearing to drive the Mormons out rather than permit them to become a political majority and with LDS leaders declaring that they would fight before again seeing their rights trampled, northwestern Missouri was in a state of war (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Sparked by an effort to prevent LDS voting, violence erupted in August and soon spread. On both sides, skirmishes involved members of state-authorized militias. Evidence suggests that during this time of fear, clashes, and confusion, Sampson Avar, probably a captain within the public Danite structure and a militia officer, subverted the ideals of both by persuading his men to undertake the criminal activities he later argued were the authorized actions of the whole community. Encouraged perhaps by the firmly stated intentions of leaders to meet force with force but apparently without their approval, Avarð used his Danite and military positions to mold a covert renegade band to avenge anti-Mormon outrages. He succeeded because after weeks of responding to violence with strictly defensive measures, Avarð was not alone in feeling that the time for forbearance had passed. Others of the time in late reminiscences recalled that clandestine meetings were held, which were subsequently reported to Joseph SMITH, who then denounced Avarð, removed him from his official command, and disbanded the maverick body. Though short-lived and unauthorized, this covert organization, thanks to Avarð's distorted and widely publicized testimony, usurped the former usage of "Danites," and the once honorable appellation became a synonym for officially sanctioned secret lawlessness.

In contrast, when five hundred men in the Caldwell County (Mormon) militia later took the offensive in response to two months of unrelenting violence and depredations, there was nothing secretive about it. In mid-October, with supplies running low, they left defensive positions to forage and to punish enemies—a very public effort to improve security by preemptive forays. Two weeks later, facing increasing numbers of volunteers and a militia emboldened by the governor's EXTERMINATION ORDER, they surrendered their arms in defeat.

The reality, then, behind the supposed secretive, lawless Danites of legend was this renegade band formed briefly in 1838 in the midst of war. There is no evidence of any such band later, and even in 1838, the Latter-day Saint community as a whole did not deserve blame for the unauthorized actions of a few. As Parley P. Pratt, an apostle, wrote to his family after hearing Avarð's court testimony, "They accuse us of things that never entered into our hearts." From LIBERTY JAIL on December 16, 1838, Joseph Smith summarized the situation as he then understood it: "We have learned also since we have been in prison that many false and pernicious things which were calculated to lead the saints far astray and to do great injury have been taught by Dr. Avarð as coming from the Presidency . . . which the presidency never knew of being taught in the church by any body until after they were made prisoners . . . the presidency were ignorant as well as innocent of these things" (PWJS, p. 380).

Unfortunately, in an age when Latter-day Saints were hated and persecuted, Avarð's story provided a ready explanation for anyone who wanted to believe the worst. The reality was far less sensational.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cornwall, Rebecca Foster, and Leonard J. Arrington. "Perpetuation of a Myth: Mormon Danites in Five Western Novels, 1840–90." BYU Studies 23 (Spring 1983):147–65.
- Document Containing the Correspondence, Orders, Etc. in Relation to the Disturbances with the Mormons; and the Evidence Given before the Hon. Austin A. King. Fayette, Mo., 1841.*
- Gentry, Leland H. "The Danite Band of 1838." BYU Studies 14 (Summer 1974):421–50.
- Jessee, Dean C., and David J. Whittaker, eds. "The Last Months of Mormonism in Missouri: The Albert Perry Rockwood Journal." BYU Studies 28 (Winter 1988):5–41.
- Whittaker, David J. "The Book of Daniel in Early Mormon Thought." In By Study and Also by Faith: Essays in Honor of Hugh W. Nibley on the Occasion of His Eightieth Birthday, Vol. 1, pp. 155–201. Salt Lake City, 1990.

DAVID J. WHITTAKER

---

DATING AND COURTSHIP

Members of the Church are somewhat distinctive in their dating and courtship practices, but they are also influenced by broader cultural patterns. In some cultures, parents still closely supervise courtship and arrange children's marriages, but youth worldwide have increasing choices in dating and mate selection. For most young people in the United States outside the Church, dating begins at an early age (about age thirteen during the 1980s); it has no set pattern of progression, and is often informal and unsupervised. These contemporary dating patterns form a social context that influences somewhat the majority of LDS youth.

However, although courtship patterns change and vary across cultures, there is quite a conservative pattern for dating and courtship among Latter-day Saints in Western nations. It is expected that LDS youth will not begin dating until the age of sixteen. Serious, steady dating and marriage-oriented courtship are expected to be delayed longer, perhaps until after a MISSION for males and his men to undertake the criminal activities he later argued were the authorized actions of the whole community. Encouraged perhaps by the firmly stated intentions of leaders to meet force with force but apparently without their approval, Avard used his Danite and military positions to mold a covert renegade band to avenge anti-Mormon outrages. He succeeded because after weeks of responding to violence with strictly defensive measures, Avard was not alone in feeling that the time for forbearance had passed. Others of the time in late reminiscences recalled that clandestine meetings were held, which were subsequently reported to Joseph SMITH, who then denounced Avard, removed him from his official command, and disbanded the maverick body. Though short-lived and unauthorized, this covert organization, thanks to Avard's distorted and widely publicized testimony, usurped the former usage of "Danites," and the once honorable appellation became a synonym for officially sanctioned secret lawlessness.

In contrast, when five hundred men in the Caldwell County (Mormon) militia later took the offensive in response to two months of unrelenting violence and depredations, there was nothing secretive about it. In mid-October, with supplies running low, they left defensive positions to forage and to punish enemies—a very public effort to improve security by preemptive forays. Two weeks later, facing increasing numbers of volunteers and a militia emboldened by the governor's EXTERMINATION ORDER, they surrendered their arms in defeat.

The reality, then, behind the supposed secretive, lawless Danites of legend was this renegade band formed briefly in 1838 in the midst of war. There is no evidence of any such band later, and even in 1838, the Latter-day Saint community as a whole did not deserve blame for the unauthorized actions of a few. As Parley P. Pratt, an apostle, wrote to his family after hearing Avard's court testimony, "They accuse us of things that never entered into our hearts." From LIBERTY JAIL on December 16, 1838, Joseph Smith summarized the situation as he then understood it: "We have learned also since we have been in prison that many false and pernicious things which were calculated to lead the saints far astray and to do great injury have been taught by Dr. Avard as coming from the Presidency . . . which the presidency never knew of being taught in the church by any body untill after they were made prisoners . . . the presidency were ignorant as well as innocent of these things" (PWJS, p. 380).

Unfortunately, in an age when Latter-day Saints were hated and persecuted, Avard's story provided a ready explanation for anyone who wanted to believe the worst. The reality was far less sensational.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cornwall, Rebecca Foster, and Leonard J. Arrington. "Perpetuation of a Myth: Mormon Danites in Five Western Novels, 1840–90." BYU Studies 23 (Spring 1983):147–65.
- Document Containing the Correspondence, Orders, Etc. in Relation to the Disturbances with the Mormons; and the Evidence Given before the Hon. Austin A. King.* Fayette, Mo., 1841.
- Gentry, Leland H. "The Danite Band of 1838." BYU Studies 14 (Summer 1974):421–50.
- Jessee, Dean C., and David J. Whittaker, eds. "The Last Months of Mormonism in Missouri: The Albert Perry Rockwood Journal." BYU Studies 28 (Winter 1988):5–41.
- Whittaker, David J. "The Book of Daniel in Early Mormon Thought." In By Study and Also by Faith: Essays in Honor of Hugh W. Nibley on the Occasion of His Eightieth Birthday, Vol. 1, pp. 155–201. Salt Lake City, 1990.

DAVID J. WHITTAKER

---

DATING AND COURTSHIP

Members of the Church are somewhat distinctive in their dating and courtship practices, but they are also influenced by broader cultural patterns. In some cultures, parents still closely supervise courtship and arrange children's marriages, but youth worldwide have increasing choices in dating and mate selection. For most young people in the United States outside the Church, dating begins at an early age (about age thirteen during the 1980s); it has no set pattern of progression, and is often informal and unsupervised. These contemporary dating patterns form a social context that influences somewhat the majority of LDS youth.

However, although courtship patterns change and vary across cultures, there is quite a conservative pattern for dating and courtship among Latter-day Saints in Western nations. It is expected that LDS youth will not begin dating until the age of sixteen. Serious, steady dating and marriage-oriented courtship are expected to be delayed longer, perhaps until after a MISSION for males and after completing high school for females. A chaste courtship is expected to lead to a temple MARRIAGE, in which a couple make binding commitments to each other for all time and eternity.

Two doctrinally based principles guide the dating and courtship of LDS youth: first, because of the religious significance of marriage, virtually everyone who can is expected to marry; second, because of the spiritual and social importance of CHASTITY, sexual relations must wait until after marriage.

Latter-day Saints place an unusually strong emphasis on marriage, believing that marriage is ordained of God (D&C 49:15) and is a prerequisite for obtaining the highest heavenly state after mortality (D&C 131:1–4; see EXALTATION). Because of the belief that people should be married and the doctrine that they can maintain marital ties throughout eternity, Latter-day Saints take dating and courtship more seriously than those for whom marriage has less religious significance.

Latter-day Saints believe that premarital chastity is a scriptural commandment reaffirmed by current revelation. From the New Testament: “Flee fornication. . . . He that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body” (1 Cor. 6:18). From a modern Church leader: “Chastity should be the dominant virtue among young people” (McKay, p. 458). LDS youth are also taught that they should not participate in sexual activities that often precede sexual intercourse: “Among the most common sexual sins our young people commit are necking and petting. Not only do these improper relations often lead to fornication, pregnancy, and abortions—all ugly sins—but in and of themselves they are pernicious evils, and it is often difficult for youth to distinguish where one ends and another begins” (Kimball, 1969, p. 65). Although Latter-day Saints consider sexual relationships outside of marriage to be sinful, sexual relations within marriage are not only right and proper but are considered sacred and beautiful (see SEXUALITY).

Like most of their non-Mormon peers in dating cultures, LDS youth date to have fun as they participate in social activities with other boys and girls. As plainly stated by prominent leaders of the Church, “It is natural to date. Every right-thinking young person has a native desire to become acquainted with the opposite sex, looking eventually to pairing off in honorable marriage” (Petersen, p. 37). “Dating has become the accepted form of social recreation for the purpose of getting acquainted before young people can safely have a serious interest in each other. Because the selection of a mate in life is so extremely important, we should intelligently seek the experiences which will help us to make that great decision” (Hunter, pp. 101–102). Typical of the advice given to LDS youth is the following counsel about dating:

Who? Only those whose standards are high, like your own.

Where? Clean places, decent places, proper places where you can be proud to be.

Why? Associating with others under wholesome circumstances helps develop friendships and permits you to learn about qualities and characteristics in others, to get to know them, to have fun together, to widen areas of choice, to achieve a wider and wiser vision of what one may seek in an eternal companion.

When? Not too young, not too often, not on school nights as a rule, not too expensively.

What? Fun things, wholesome things, good and useful things— . . . things pleasing to you, to parents, to God.

How? With others, in groups, chaperoned when proper, appropriately dressed, cheerfully, courteously, modestly, wisely, prayerfully. And let parents know where you are, with whom, doing what, and when you will return. Have a happy time! [Hanks, pp. 134–35]

While dating and courtship patterns among LDS reflect broader societal patterns, there are several age-graded characteristics of dating and courtship in the Church that are special.

Age twelve is a line of demarcation in the life of a young member of the Church. At this age LDS boys and girls leave PRIMARY, the Church’s organization for children, and enter the YOUNG WOMEN and YOUNG MEN organizations. Here, young people participate, usually once a week, in gender-segregated activities designed with an adult adviser for their particular age group. Occasionally, joint activities are planned that include boys and girls together. These are structured and well-supervised social and religious activities that bring teenage boys and girls together to help them develop appropriate social relationships.

While the Church sponsors joint social activities, its leaders have strongly discouraged early dating. “Young men and women, not yet ready for marriage, should be friends with many others, but they should not engage in courting. . . . Friendship, not courtship, should be the relationship of teenagers. . . . The change of this one pattern of social activities of our youth would immediately eliminate a majority of the sins of our young folks" (Kimball, 1986, pp. 287–88). Steady dating is further discouraged until youth are ready for courtship.

In the past, LDS youth were basically counseled not to begin dating, especially steady dating, until they were "old enough and mature enough" to consider marriage. During the 1970s the age of sixteen took on special significance in this regard when Spencer W. KIMBALL, as President of the Church, said: "When you get in the teen years, your social associations should still be a general acquaintance with both boys and girls. Any dating or pairing off in social contacts should be postponed until at least the age of 16 or older, and even then there should be much judgment used in the selections and in the seriousness" (Kimball, 1975, p. 4). As a consequence of this teaching, the age of sixteen has become the acceptable age when dating can begin.

Nineteen is an especially pivotal age in the social and religious life of late adolescent LDS youth. The males are expected to leave home for a two-year Church mission. Many young women upon reaching twenty-one will serve missions. Missionaries leave romantic relationships behind and are counseled not to worry about or telephone girlfriends or boyfriends. They are restricted from all dating activities during their missionary service. Although many boyfriend-girlfriend relationships do not last through the mission separation, the mission experience frequently brings a maturity that better prepares young men and women for eventual marriage.

Despite the postponing effect of missions on dating activities, LDS men tend to marry at an age younger than national averages, while LDS women marry at about the norm. Presumably, the value placed on marriage makes LDS youth less likely to postpone marriage for education and career advancement; they are certainly less likely to cohabit instead of marrying, and the customary pattern is to continue courting until the time of marriage (see SINGLE ADULTS). LDS prophets have consistently instructed young Mormon men that it is wrong to delay marriage unnecessarily (Benson; Kimball, 1975).

Because marrying a person of the same faith is important to Latter-day Saints, families that live away from the concentrations of Church population often encourage the children to attend BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY or RICKS COLLEGE or to participate in the programs of the INSTITUTES OF RELIGION at other colleges or universities, where they are more likely to find a suitable partner of their own faith. Also, units of the Church specifically for young adults are organized throughout the world, where numbers allow, to facilitate social opportunities. Because of the religious significance of mate selection to Latter-day Saints, a variety of common practices has developed. Couples seriously considering marriage are likely to pray for heavenly confirmation in their marriage decision. The choice of a partner is usually discussed with parents, and young couples planning to marry often go together to seek the advice of their Church leaders.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "To the Single Adult Brethren of the Church." Ensign 18 (May 1988):51–53.
- Hanks, Marion D. "The Six." IE 70 (June 1967):134–35.
- Hunter, Howard W. Youth of the Noble Birthright, pp. 101–109. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Marriage and Divorce." In 1976 Speeches of the Year. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- . "The Marriage Decision." Ensign 5 (Feb. 1975):2–6.
- . The Miracle of Forgiveness. Salt Lake City, 1969.
- . The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- McKay, David O. Gospel Ideals. pp. 458–64. Salt Lake City, 1953.
- Petersen, Mark E. Live It Up! Salt Lake City, 1971.

BRENT C. MILLER
H. WALLACE GODDARD

---

DAVID, KING

David, king of ISRAEL, was the youngest of eight brothers, sons of Jesse (1 Sam. 16:6–12), a descendant of Boaz and RUTH (Ruth 4:21–22) and an ancestor to Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:6–17; Luke 3:23–31). He was born at Bethlehem and died in Jerusalem c. 1015 B.C., after reigning over Judah for seven years and the united kingdom of Israel for an additional thirty-three (1 Kgs. 2:11). He was buried in the ancestral home, in Bethlehem (1 Kgs. 2:10). He was perhaps the greatest king of Israel, once called "a man after [God's] own heart" (1 Sam. 13:14). Mormon interests in David have teenagers. . . . The change of this one pattern of social activities of our youth would immediately eliminate a majority of the sins of our young folks" (Kimball, 1986, pp. 287–88). Steady dating is further discouraged until youth are ready for courtship.

In the past, LDS youth were basically counseled not to begin dating, especially steady dating, until they were "old enough and mature enough" to consider marriage. During the 1970s the age of sixteen took on special significance in this regard when Spencer W. KIMBALL, as President of the Church, said: "When you get in the teen years, your social associations should still be a general acquaintance with both boys and girls. Any dating or pairing off in social contacts should be postponed until at least the age of 16 or older, and even then there should be much judgment used in the selections and in the seriousness" (Kimball, 1975, p. 4). As a consequence of this teaching, the age of sixteen has become the acceptable age when dating can begin.

Nineteen is an especially pivotal age in the social and religious life of late adolescent LDS youth. The males are expected to leave home for a two-year Church mission. Many young women upon reaching twenty-one will serve missions. Missionaries leave romantic relationships behind and are counseled not to worry about or telephone girlfriends or boyfriends. They are restricted from all dating activities during their missionary service. Although many boyfriend-girlfriend relationships do not last through the mission separation, the mission experience frequently brings a maturity that better prepares young men and women for eventual marriage.

Despite the postponing effect of missions on dating activities, LDS men tend to marry at an age younger than national averages, while LDS women marry at about the norm. Presumably, the value placed on marriage makes LDS youth less likely to postpone marriage for education and career advancement; they are certainly less likely to cohabit instead of marrying, and the customary pattern is to continue courting until the time of marriage (see SINGLE ADULTS). LDS prophets have consistently instructed young Mormon men that it is wrong to delay marriage unnecessarily (Benson; Kimball, 1975).

Because marrying a person of the same faith is important to Latter-day Saints, families that live away from the concentrations of Church population often encourage the children to attend BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY or RICKS COLLEGE or to participate in the programs of the INSTITUTES OF RELIGION at other colleges or universities, where they are more likely to find a suitable partner of their own faith. Also, units of the Church specifically for young adults are organized throughout the world, where numbers allow, to facilitate social opportunities. Because of the religious significance of mate selection to Latter-day Saints, a variety of common practices has developed. Couples seriously considering marriage are likely to pray for heavenly confirmation in their marriage decision. The choice of a partner is usually discussed with parents, and young couples planning to marry often go together to seek the advice of their Church leaders.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "To the Single Adult Brethren of the Church." Ensign 18 (May 1988):51–53.
- Hanks, Marion D. "The Six." IE 70 (June 1967):134–35.
- Hunter, Howard W. Youth of the Noble Birthright, pp. 101–109. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Marriage and Divorce." In 1976 Speeches of the Year. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- . "The Marriage Decision." Ensign 5 (Feb. 1975):2–6.
- . The Miracle of Forgiveness. Salt Lake City, 1969.
- . The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- McKay, David O. Gospel Ideals. pp. 458–64. Salt Lake City, 1953.
- Petersen, Mark E. Live It Up! Salt Lake City, 1971.

BRENT C. MILLER
H. WALLACE GODDARD

---

DAVID, KING

David, king of ISRAEL, was the youngest of eight brothers, sons of Jesse (1 Sam. 16:6–12), a descendant of Boaz and RUTH (Ruth 4:21–22) and an ancestor to Jesus Christ (Matt. 1:6–17; Luke 3:23–31). He was born at Bethlehem and died in Jerusalem c. 1015 B.C., after reigning over Judah for seven years and the united kingdom of Israel for an additional thirty-three (1 Kgs. 2:11). He was buried in the ancestral home, in Bethlehem (1 Kgs. 2:10). He was perhaps the greatest king of Israel, once called "a man after [God's] own heart" (1 Sam. 13:14). Mormon interests in David have often dwelt on the issues of his plural marriages and his status in the AFTERLIFE.

While the scriptures relate different stories of his introduction at Saul's court (1 Sam. 16:14–23; 17:55–58), David's vault from obscurity to national awareness seems to have come as a result of his courageous defeat of the giant Goliath (1 Sam. 17:49).

David's strength and reliance on the Lord marked him as an exceptional leader and the epitome of Israelite heroism (2 Sam. 5:1–3; 22:2–51). Subsequent rulers were measured against his stature (cf. 1 Kgs. 15:3–5, 11), and his name was linked with that of the awaited MESSIAH (Mark 12:35; Luke 1:32; Rom. 1:3). Scripture indicates that David's blessings, including his wives, were given to him as a result of God's favor (2 Sam. 5:12–13; 12:8; D&C 132:39).

But when David also acquired wives and concubines, apparently under his own authority, he was condemned by God (Jacob 2:23–24). Certainly David lost divine approval as a result of his adulterous union with Bathsheba and the subsequent contrived murder of her husband, Uriah (2 Sam. 12:1–12; D&C 132:38–39).

Because of David's transgressions, his eternal blessings were taken from him (TPJS, pp. 188–89). The Lord granted David a continuation of life for another twenty-one years, perhaps because of his immediate and deep remorse (cf. Ps. 51), his acts of repentance, and his continued faithfulness to JEHOVAH (2 Sam. 12:13, 16; cf. WJS, p. 335). However, he must await in the SPIRIT PRISON the redemption promised to him (Acts 2:34; WJS, p. 74). Even with the assurance of the Lord's ultimate mercy (Ps. 86:13), David lost much that God had given him on earth, he fell "from his exaltation" and his wives were given unto another" (D&C 132:39). Yet his personal integrity appears in his insistence that he be punished in place of his people, whom he saw in vision being destroyed (2 Sam. 24:15–17).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bright, John. A History of Israel. 3rd ed., pp. 184–228. Philadelphia, 1981.
- McCarter, P. Kyle. Second Samuel. Anchor Bible. New York, 1984.

NORMAN J. BARLOW

DAVID, PROPHETIC FIGURE OF LAST DAYS

King David (c. 1000 B.C.) remains today one of the most renowned Old Testament figures. His personality, spiritual sensitivity, creative abilities, military victories, and leadership carried him to the pinnacle of popularity. He had the potential to become an ideal king, but his kingship deteriorated after his adultery with Bathsheba and his involvement in Uriah's death. However, prophecy states that a model ruler in the last days will be "raised up" from David's lineage.

The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that "the throne and kingdom of David is to be taken from him and given to another by the name of David in the last days, raised up out of his lineage" (TPJS, p. 339). Elder Orson Hyde, in his dedicatory prayer on the Mount of Olives, October 24, 1841, prophesied that the Jews would return to Jerusalem and that in time a leader called David, "even a descendant from the loins of ancient David, [would] be their king" (HC 4:457).

This predicted figure corresponds to a promised messianic servant. Hosea, speaking shortly before the loss of northern Israel, foretold that Israelites would return in the latter days "and seek the LORD their God, and David their king" (Hosea 3:5). JEREMIAH prophesied of Israel and Judah's future righteousness, and of "David their king, whom I [the LORD] will raise up unto them" (Jer. 30:9; cf. 23:5; 33:15–22). And in Ezekiel it is written, "And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the LORD will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them" (Ezek. 34:23–24; cf. also 44:1–3).

Speaking to Joseph Smith, the angel MORONI<sup>2</sup> cited Old Testament passages telling of significant figures who would be involved with Christ's millennial reign (JS—H 1:40). As prophesied in Isaiah, it appears that two persons are spoken of, a "rod" and a "root" (11:1, 10)—one a leader "on whom there is laid much power," the other a person with special priesthood keys (D&C 113:3–6). These leaders are believed by some to be among the "messianic figures" spoken of in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in rabbinic literature (Encyclopedia Judaica, 11: 1409–1411).

Although noble attributes and spiritual pow-

often dwelt on the issues of his plural marriages and his status in the AFTERLIFE.

While the scriptures relate different stories of his introduction at Saul's court (1 Sam. 16:14–23; 17:55–58), David's vault from obscurity to national awareness seems to have come as a result of his courageous defeat of the giant Goliath (1 Sam. 17:49).

David's strength and reliance on the Lord marked him as an exceptional leader and the epitome of Israelite heroism (2 Sam. 5:1–3; 22:2–51). Subsequent rulers were measured against his stature (cf. 1 Kgs. 15:3–5, 11), and his name was linked with that of the awaited MESSIAH (Mark 12:35; Luke 1:32; Rom. 1:3). Scripture indicates that David's blessings, including his wives, were given to him as a result of God's favor (2 Sam. 5:12–13; 12:8; D&C 132:39).

But when David also acquired wives and concubines, apparently under his own authority, he was condemned by God (Jacob 2:23–24). Certainly David lost divine approval as a result of his adulterous union with Bathsheba and the subsequent contrived murder of her husband, Uriah (2 Sam. 12:1–12; D&C 132:38–39).

Because of David's transgressions, his eternal blessings were taken from him (TPJS, pp. 188–89). The Lord granted David a continuation of life for another twenty-one years, perhaps because of his immediate and deep remorse (cf. Ps. 51), his acts of repentance, and his continued faithfulness to JEHOVAH (2 Sam. 12:13, 16; cf. WJS, p. 335). However, he must await in the SPIRIT PRISON the redemption promised to him (Acts 2:34; WJS, p. 74). Even with the assurance of the Lord's ultimate mercy (Ps. 86:13), David lost much that God had given him on earth, he fell "from his exaltation" and his wives were given unto another" (D&C 132:39). Yet his personal integrity appears in his insistence that he be punished in place of his people, whom he saw in vision being destroyed (2 Sam. 24:15–17).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bright, John. A History of Israel. 3rd ed., pp. 184–228. Philadelphia, 1981.
- McCarter, P. Kyle. Second Samuel. Anchor Bible. New York, 1984.

NORMAN J. BARLOW

DAVID, PROPHETIC FIGURE OF LAST DAYS

King David (c. 1000 B.C.) remains today one of the most renowned Old Testament figures. His personality, spiritual sensitivity, creative abilities, military victories, and leadership carried him to the pinnacle of popularity. He had the potential to become an ideal king, but his kingship deteriorated after his adultery with Bathsheba and his involvement in Uriah's death. However, prophecy states that a model ruler in the last days will be "raised up" from David's lineage.

The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that "the throne and kingdom of David is to be taken from him and given to another by the name of David in the last days, raised up out of his lineage" (TPJS, p. 339). Elder Orson Hyde, in his dedicatory prayer on the Mount of Olives, October 24, 1841, prophesied that the Jews would return to Jerusalem and that in time a leader called David, "even a descendant from the loins of ancient David, [would] be their king" (HC 4:457).

This predicted figure corresponds to a promised messianic servant. Hosea, speaking shortly before the loss of northern Israel, foretold that Israelites would return in the latter days "and seek the LORD their God, and David their king" (Hosea 3:5). JEREMIAH prophesied of Israel and Judah's future righteousness, and of "David their king, whom I [the LORD] will raise up unto them" (Jer. 30:9; cf. 23:5; 33:15–22). And in Ezekiel it is written, "And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the LORD will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them" (Ezek. 34:23–24; cf. also 44:1–3).

Speaking to Joseph Smith, the angel MORONI<sub>2</sub> cited Old Testament passages telling of significant figures who would be involved with Christ's millennial reign (JS—H 1:40). As prophesied in Isaiah, it appears that two persons are spoken of, a "rod" and a "root" (11:1, 10)—one a leader "on whom there is laid much power," the other a person with special priesthood keys (D&C 113:3–6). These leaders are believed by some to be among the "messianic figures" spoken of in the Dead Sea Scrolls and in rabbinic literature (Encyclopedia Judaica, 11: 1409–1411).

Although noble attributes and spiritual powers characterize such messianic servants, Jesus Christ exemplifies these qualities perfectly (D&C 113:1–2). Jesus is the exemplar prophet, priest, and king. He identified himself as the PROPHET “like unto Moses” (Deut. 18:15; Acts 3:22–23; 3 Ne. 20:23) and was a HIGH PRIEST after the order of MELCHIZEDEK (Heb. 5:9–10; 7:15–22). Jesus is King of Kings (Rev. 19:16), greater than all other leaders of all time. Some see in Jesus Christ the complete fulfillment of the prophecy of a future David. Others feel that, while the titles and functions of the future Davidic king apply to Jesus, there will also be another righteous king by the name of David in the last days, a leader from the loins of Jesse (and thus of Judah).

VICTOR L. LUDLOW

DEACON, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

Twelve-year-old LDS males usually receive the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD and are ordained deacons, continuing in that PRIESTHOOD OFFICE until age fourteen. Deacons receive assignments from their BISHOPS that may include distributing the SACRAMENT to the congregation, serving as messengers, collecting FAST OFFERINGS, providing assistance to the elderly or disabled, and caring for the meetinghouse and grounds.

Although the exact role of deacons (from the Greek diakonos, or “servant”) in the Christian church of the New Testament is not known, tradition indicates that they were ordained to their positions and were ranked below bishops and elders. Their duties apparently involved collecting and distributing alms and waiting on tables. Also, relatively early in the Catholic tradition, deacons may have assisted in the administration of communion and taken the sacrament to the homes of those who could not attend church. They also maintained church properties and read the gospel lection in Eucharist assembly. While closely associated with bishops in their service at the sacrament table, deacons were younger and were understood to be in schooling for greater service upon reaching maturity (Shepherd, Vol. 1, pp. 785–86).

The office of deacon was introduced by Joseph Smith at least as early as the Church conference held on June 9, 1830 (D&C 20:39). Some deacons may have been ordained at the organizational meeting on April 6, 1830 (HC 1:79), but the records are not specific.

Latter-day scriptures provide that teachers and deacons are “to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ” (D&C 20:59) and are to edify one another (D&C 20:85). Deacons may be ordained by any elder or priest at the direction of the local bishop, contingent on a worthiness interview and the sustaining vote of the congregation (D&C 20:39, 48).

Deacons are organized into quorums of twelve or fewer members, with one called as president, two as counselors, and another as secretary (see PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS). The BISHOPRIC assigns an adult adviser to teach and help train the quorum members to emulate the example of Jesus Christ in word and deed and helps prepare them for ordination to the Melchizedek Priesthood and for missionary service.

Church-sponsored Boy Scout troops provide the major activity program for deacons in the United States and Canada, and give them important learning and leadership experiences (see SCOUTING).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lowrie, Walter. The Church and its Organization in Primitive and Catholic Times: An Interpretation of Rudolph Sohm's KIRCHENRECHT. New York, 1904.
- Palmer, Lee A. The Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Shepherd, M. “Deacon.” In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.

RONALD L. BRAMBLE

DEAD SEA SCROLLS

[This entry has two parts:

Overview
LDS Perspective.]

OVERVIEW

The major corpus of the Dead Sea scrolls, about 600 manuscripts, dates from c. 250 B.C.E. to 68 C.E. Others works from the Southern Jordan Rift, Nahal Hever and Nahal Seelim chiefly, date from 131 to 135 C.E. Masada produced materials from the first century B.C. to A.D. 73.

ers characterize such messianic servants, Jesus Christ exemplifies these qualities perfectly (D&C 113:1–2). Jesus is the exemplar prophet, priest, and king. He identified himself as the PROPHET “like unto Moses” (Deut. 18:15; Acts 3:22–23; 3 Ne. 20:23) and was a HIGH PRIEST after the order of MELCHIZEDEK (Heb. 5:9–10; 7:15–22). Jesus is King of Kings (Rev. 19:16), greater than all other leaders of all time. Some see in Jesus Christ the complete fulfillment of the prophecy of a future David. Others feel that, while the titles and functions of the future Davidic king apply to Jesus, there will also be another righteous king by the name of David in the last days, a leader from the loins of Jesse (and thus of Judah).

VICTOR L. LUDLOW

DEACON, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

Twelve-year-old LDS males usually receive the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD and are ordained deacons, continuing in that PRIESTHOOD OFFICE until age fourteen. Deacons receive assignments from their BISHOPS that may include distributing the SACRAMENT to the congregation, serving as messengers, collecting FAST OFFERINGS, providing assistance to the elderly or disabled, and caring for the meetinghouse and grounds.

Although the exact role of deacons (from the Greek diakonos, or “servant”) in the Christian church of the New Testament is not known, tradition indicates that they were ordained to their positions and were ranked below bishops and elders. Their duties apparently involved collecting and distributing alms and waiting on tables. Also, relatively early in the Catholic tradition, deacons may have assisted in the administration of communion and taken the sacrament to the homes of those who could not attend church. They also maintained church properties and read the gospel lection in Eucharist assembly. While closely associated with bishops in their service at the sacrament table, deacons were younger and were understood to be in schooling for greater service upon reaching maturity (Shepherd, Vol. 1, pp. 785–86).

The office of deacon was introduced by Joseph Smith at least as early as the Church conference held on June 9, 1830 (D&C 20:39). Some deacons may have been ordained at the organizational meeting on April 6, 1830 (HC 1:79), but the records are not specific.

Latter-day scriptures provide that teachers and deacons are “to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ” (D&C 20:59) and are to edify one another (D&C 20:85). Deacons may be ordained by any elder or priest at the direction of the local bishop, contingent on a worthiness interview and the sustaining vote of the congregation (D&C 20:39, 48).

Deacons are organized into quorums of twelve or fewer members, with one called as president, two as counselors, and another as secretary (see PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS). The BISHOPRIC assigns an adult adviser to teach and help train the quorum members to emulate the example of Jesus Christ in word and deed and helps prepare them for ordination to the Melchizedek Priesthood and for missionary service.

Church-sponsored Boy Scout troops provide the major activity program for deacons in the United States and Canada, and give them important learning and leadership experiences (see SCOUTING).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lowrie, Walter. The Church and its Organization in Primitive and Catholic Times: An Interpretation of Rudolph Sohm's KIRCHENRECHT. New York, 1904.
- Palmer, Lee A. The Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Shepherd, M. “Deacon.” In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.

RONALD L. BRAMBLE

DEAD SEA SCROLLS

[This entry has two parts:

Overview
LDS Perspective.]

OVERVIEW

The major corpus of the Dead Sea scrolls, about 600 manuscripts, dates from c. 250 B.C.E. to 68 C.E. Others works from the Southern Jordan Rift, Nahal Hever and Nahal Seelim chiefly, date from 131 to 135 C.E. Masada produced materials from the first century B.C. to A.D. 73.

ers characterize such messianic servants, Jesus Christ exemplifies these qualities perfectly (D&C 113:1–2). Jesus is the exemplar prophet, priest, and king. He identified himself as the PROPHET “like unto Moses” (Deut. 18:15; Acts 3:22–23; 3 Ne. 20:23) and was a HIGH PRIEST after the order of MELCHIZEDEK (Heb. 5:9–10; 7:15–22). Jesus is King of Kings (Rev. 19:16), greater than all other leaders of all time. Some see in Jesus Christ the complete fulfillment of the prophecy of a future David. Others feel that, while the titles and functions of the future Davidic king apply to Jesus, there will also be another righteous king by the name of David in the last days, a leader from the loins of Jesse (and thus of Judah).

VICTOR L. LUDLOW

DEACON, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

Twelve-year-old LDS males usually receive the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD and are ordained deacons, continuing in that PRIESTHOOD OFFICE until age fourteen. Deacons receive assignments from their BISHOPS that may include distributing the SACRAMENT to the congregation, serving as messengers, collecting FAST OFFERINGS, providing assistance to the elderly or disabled, and caring for the meetinghouse and grounds.

Although the exact role of deacons (from the Greek diakonos, or “servant”) in the Christian church of the New Testament is not known, tradition indicates that they were ordained to their positions and were ranked below bishops and elders. Their duties apparently involved collecting and distributing alms and waiting on tables. Also, relatively early in the Catholic tradition, deacons may have assisted in the administration of communion and taken the sacrament to the homes of those who could not attend church. They also maintained church properties and read the gospel lection in Eucharist assembly. While closely associated with bishops in their service at the sacrament table, deacons were younger and were understood to be in schooling for greater service upon reaching maturity (Shepherd, Vol. 1, pp. 785–86).

The office of deacon was introduced by Joseph Smith at least as early as the Church conference held on June 9, 1830 (D&C 20:39). Some deacons may have been ordained at the organizational meeting on April 6, 1830 (HC 1:79), but the records are not specific.

Latter-day scriptures provide that teachers and deacons are “to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ” (D&C 20:59) and are to edify one another (D&C 20:85). Deacons may be ordained by any elder or priest at the direction of the local bishop, contingent on a worthiness interview and the sustaining vote of the congregation (D&C 20:39, 48).

Deacons are organized into quorums of twelve or fewer members, with one called as president, two as counselors, and another as secretary (see PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS). The BISHOPRIC assigns an adult adviser to teach and help train the quorum members to emulate the example of Jesus Christ in word and deed and helps prepare them for ordination to the Melchizedek Priesthood and for missionary service.

Church-sponsored Boy Scout troops provide the major activity program for deacons in the United States and Canada, and give them important learning and leadership experiences (see SCOUTING).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lowrie, Walter. The Church and its Organization in Primitive and Catholic Times: An Interpretation of Rudolph Sohm's KIRCHENRECHT. New York, 1904.
- Palmer, Lee A. The Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Shepherd, M. “Deacon.” In Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 1. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.

RONALD L. BRAMBLE

DEAD SEA SCROLLS

[This entry has two parts:

Overview
LDS Perspective.]

OVERVIEW

The major corpus of the Dead Sea scrolls, about 600 manuscripts, dates from c. 250 B.C.E. to 68 C.E. Others works from the Southern Jordan Rift, Nahal Hever and Nahal Seelim chiefly, date from 131 to 135 C.E. Masada produced materials from the first century B.C. to A.D. 73.

The manuscripts include segments of all the Hebrew scriptures (except Esther; see OLD TESTAMENT), and more than one variant of many. For example, the three Samuel manuscripts from Qumran are much fuller texts than those of the Masoretic Bible (the traditional text). Also found were fragments of apocryphal and pseudepigraphical books, as well as manuscripts of previously unknown religious works, including a Temple Scroll, a Manual of Discipline, and a Thanksgiving Scroll.

The scrolls have required reappraisal of understanding in three categories: (1) the development of Hebrew scriptures before the formation of the CANON; (2) the dating and pervasive influence of APOCALYPTIC thinking; and (3) the religious milieu of the New Testament.

1. The “biblical” library of Qumran represents a fluid stage of the biblical text. Those documents show no influence of the rabbinic recension of the canon, the direct ancestor of the traditional Hebrew Bible. The scrolls help to place both the Pharisaic text and the canon in the era of Hillel, roughly the time of Jesus. In their selection of canonical books, the rabbis excluded those attributed to prophets or patriarchs before MOSES (e.g., the ENOCH literature, works written in the name of ABRAHAM and other patriarchs). They traced the succession of prophets from Moses to figures of the Persian period. Late works were excluded, with the exception of Daniel, which, the rabbis presumably, attributed to the Persian period.

2. The literature of Qumran includes apocalypses and works colored by apocalyptic. The writers saw world history in the grip of a final war between the Spirit of truth and the Spirit of evil; this conflict is at once cosmic and earthly. They considered themselves proper heirs of Israel and placed themselves under a new covenant as Sons of Light to contend with Sons of Darkness. They had a strict reading of the law, lived in daily self-denial, practiced ablations, and had ceremonial meals. Their Manual of Discipline reflects the expectation of the immediate coming of the heavenly kingdom. A “Teacher of Righteousness” was apparently the priestly head of the earthly community of God; the forces of good were also led by a cosmic power or holy spirit called the “Prince of Light.” The writers saw their own age as the age of consummation. The Messiah was about to appear, “bringing the sword.” Collapse of other social structures was imminent before the new age. The people at Qumran, probably Essenes, expected that the Davidic or royal Messiah would appear to defeat the earthly and cosmic powers of wickedness. Commentaries on the biblical materials, found in the same area, treat traditional prophecies in this eschatological setting. Theirs was a church of anticipation.

The Temple Scroll shows that these Jewish priests were separatists, maintaining that the Temple cultus was defunct. They replaced the lunar with a solar calendar for the festivals and introduced feasts of oil and wine mentioned nowhere in the Pentateuch. Considering themselves warriors in the last holy war, fighting alongside holy angels, they forbade all uncleanness (which in their view included the lame, blind, or diseased) both in the anticipated temple and in the temple city. At least for the duration of the war they were celibate.

Apocalypticism is now to be seen as a major element in the complex matrix that formed the background for the development of both Tannaite Judaism and early Christianity. Gershom Scholem shocked scholars of this generation by demonstrating the existence and importance of apocalyptic mysticism in the era of Rabbi Akiba. It is now necessary to place apocalyptic thinking as beginning earlier than scholars had previously supposed, perhaps as early as the fourth century B.C.E. and lasting half a millennium.

3. The New Testament reflects these apocalyptic theological tendencies that scholars heretofore passed over lightly. For example, it now appears that the thought and teachings of John the Baptist and Jesus of Nazareth are more apocalyptic than prophetic in their essential character. The dualistic, apocalyptic, and eschatological framework marks John as the most Jewish of the four Gospels. In John’s Gospel the spirit of truth is called the Paraclete or Advocate. He is the Holy Spirit, but as at Qumran he is not precisely identical with God’s own spirit, which explains why he does not speak on his own authority (John 16:13). The emphasis on light and darkness, unity, community, and love is reiterated and expanded. The theme of religious knowing in an eschatological sense is comparable to statements in the epistles of Paul and the Gospel of Matthew. The Gospel of Luke quotes almost verbatim a pre-Christian apocalypse of Daniel, found in Cave 4, which refers to an eschatological king, whom we take to be the royal Messiah, from the titles “Son of God” and “Son of the Most High.” In the parable of the banquet in

Luke 14:15–24, Jesus condemns those who seek places of rank in his kingdom, perhaps in polemic response to the Essene exclusion from their banquet of all except the elite of the desert who shared their goods and were “men of renown.”

For the Essenes, the New Age was still anticipated. For early Christians, Jesus had been resurrected as the Messiah who brought the New Age. Both communities lived in anticipation of the full coming of redemption or the consummation of the kingdom of God. The Essenes formed a community of priestly apocalyptists. The early Christian movement was made up largely of lay apocalyptists, much like the Pharisaic party. Both searched the prophets for allusions to the events of their times, which they understood to be the “last times,” and both spoke in language pervaded by the terminology of Jewish apocalyptic.

FRANK MOORE CROSS, JR.

LDS PERSPECTIVE

Like many Jews and like other Christians, Latter-day Saints were deeply interested in the announcement that ancient manuscripts from New Testament times were discovered in Palestine in 1947. Initial zeal led to some superficial treatments, sensationalism, and misunderstandings. But in the decades since the initial finds, Latter-day Saints who have followed the more careful analyses have come to appreciate several contributions of the Dead Sea Scrolls, including insights into the literary and sectarian diversity of Judaism at the time of Jesus, new evidence relating to the history and preservation of the biblical text, advances in the science of dating Hebrew and Aramaic documents based on changing styles of script, and valuable additions to the corpus of Jewish texts and text genres.

Certain aspects of the scrolls have particularly interested Latter-day Saints. For example, the Essenes of Qumran accepted the concepts of continuing REVELATION and open CANON much as Latter-day Saints do, in contrast to the current teaching of most Christians and Jews. Qumran commentaries on the books of Habakkuk, Nahum, and other prophets from the Old Testament contain new Essene prophetic interpretations of world events of the LAST DAYS, and the Qumran Temple Scroll claims to be a direct revelation to Moses. Similarly, Latter-day Saints believe that the Bible does not contain all of God’s word, but that he has revealed his will to prophets in the Book of Mormon and to Joseph SMITH, and he continues to reveal new truths to modern prophets.

Latter-day Saints point out that the Bible does not require or demand its own uniqueness. Now the Qumran library has shown that some of the most pious and observant Jews around the time of Christ consulted not only extrabiblical texts but also a variety of differing texts of the biblical books. For the Essenes, the sacredness of scripture did not impose a fixed or standard text. For example, their library contains several versions of the book of Isaiah, with minor differences in wording. They used both long and short versions of Jeremiah. They had varying collections of the Psalms. This open-mindedness about scriptural words and editions is similar to LDS views (see, for example, various LDS accounts of the CREATION). The Dead Sea Scrolls provide evidence that the successive theological concepts of (1) an authoritative text, (2) a fixed text, and ultimately (3) an inerrant text originated with Pharisaic or rabbinic Judaism.

Some people have made much of comparisons between Essene practices and those of the New Testament church, or between both of these and elements of Mormonism. For example, Essene cleansing rituals are in some ways similar to New Testament baptisms, and Essene ritual meals can be interpreted as sacramental. Some see the Christian idea of conversion in the Essene doctrine that an individual is elected to the community by deliberate choice and initiation rather than by birth and infant CIRCUMCISION. Some relate the Essene communal council, with its twelve men and three priests, to Jesus’ calling of twelve apostles and favoring among them PETER, JAMES, and JOHN, or to the Latter-day Saint organization with twelve apostles and a three-member FIRST PRESIDENCY. The role of New Testament or modern LDS BISHOPS seems to correspond to many of the functions of the Qumranic maskil, or “guardian.”

For Latter-day Saints, the emergence of such parallels is not surprising. The covenants of the Old and New Testaments are more alike than different (see DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL). They proceed from the same God. However, the similarities are counterbalanced by radical differences between Essene practices and the teachings of Jesus Christ, of Paul, or of the Church in modern times. Notably, the Essenes taught their adherents to hate their enemies. Their sect was strict and exclusive. Their ideas of ritual cleanness effectively barred women from the temple and from the temple city of Jerusalem. Such Essene doctrines are opposite to later Christian and LDS teachings. Similarities between Essenism and Christian or LDS concepts should therefore be explained as a dispersion of ideas among groups that share ancient connections rather than as evidences of more intrinsic relationships.

Much is still to be learned from the Dead Sea Scrolls. Many fragments and some scrolls remain unpublished or are not yet fully understood. Much light may yet be shed on ancient Jewish worship patterns, apocalyptic literature, angelology, and sectarianism beyond what is available in biblical accounts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For a more ample general statement, see S. Kent Brown, "The Dead Sea Scrolls: A Mormon Perspective," BYU Studies 23 (Winter 1983):49–66. Hugh Nibley discusses broad patterns in An Approach to the Book of Mormon, Since Cumorah, and The Prophetic Book of Mormon, in CWILN, Vols. 6–8. For a listing of editions of the scrolls, see Robert A. Cloward, The Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha and the Dead Sea Scrolls: A Selected Bibliography of Text Editions and English Translations, Provo, Utah, 1988.

ROBERT A. CLOWARD

---

DEAF, MATERIALS FOR THE

The Church makes a serious effort to serve the hearing impaired with gospel materials in formats they can understand. These formats include simplified versions, signed inserts (interpreters superimposed on film who sign conversations and sounds), closed captions (words that show on the screen only when decoded), printed signs, productions with all-deaf casts, and Church manuals translated into signing for the deaf on videocassettes. Each Church film is signed or closed-captioned. All satellite broadcasts and special programs are closed-captioned. To use closed-captioned videos requires a decoder, which the Church provides to units serving the hearing impaired.

All general conference sessions are signed and closed-captioned. The deaf and hearing impaired who attend general conference in SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, are invited to the Church Office's auditorium to view the proceedings with an interpreter. Those who do not attend in person may participate via closed captions on the Church's satellite network at their local meetinghouses. The sessions are also recorded on videos, with sign language inserts, and made available on loan. TEMPLE ORDINANCES are also presented in formats understandable by the hearing impaired.

A handbook for interpreters and a dictionary of words and phrases peculiar to the Church are available in print and on videocassettes. The Book of Mormon is being translated into American Sign Language (ASL) on videocassette targeted for completion in 1994. A current list of all materials, including their costs and how to order, is available on request from the Special Curriculum Department of the Church.

In a meetinghouse serving the hearing impaired, the Church provides a Com Tek System which amplifies the spoken language. The Church participates in supplying TTY/TDDs (telecommunication devices) for the deaf and hearing-impaired members to carry on Church functions.

DOUGLAS L. HIND

---

DEATH AND DYING

At death, the spirit and body separate and "the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life" (Alma 40:11; cf. Eccl. 12:7). ALMA<sub>2</sub> describes how the spirits of the "righteous are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise, a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles and from all care, and sorrow" (Alma 40:12; see PARADISE; SPIRIT WORLD). In contrast, the wicked, who "whose evil works rather than good," suffer fear of the wrath of God (Alma 40:13; see SPIRIT PRISON). Both those who reside in paradise and those in the spirit prison await the RESURRECTION and the judgment of God (see JUDGMENT DAY, FINAL).

RESURRECTION FROM DEATH. Through the atonement of Christ, all mortals will be resurrected irrespective of personal righteousness. Their spirits will have their PHYSICAL BODIES restored to them, and thus there will be a permanent unity of the spirit with an immortal, incorruptible body (John 5:28–29; Alma 11:42–45). Except for the resurrection of Christ, "this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother barred women from the temple and from the temple city of Jerusalem. Such Essene doctrines are opposite to later Christian and LDS teachings. Similarities between Essenism and Christian or LDS concepts should therefore be explained as a dispersion of ideas among groups that share ancient connections rather than as evidences of more intrinsic relationships.

Much is still to be learned from the Dead Sea Scrolls. Many fragments and some scrolls remain unpublished or are not yet fully understood. Much light may yet be shed on ancient Jewish worship patterns, apocalyptic literature, angelology, and sectarianism beyond what is available in biblical accounts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For a more ample general statement, see S. Kent Brown, "The Dead Sea Scrolls: A Mormon Perspective," BYU Studies 23 (Winter 1983):49–66. Hugh Nibley discusses broad patterns in An Approach to the Book of Mormon, Since Cumorah, and The Prophetic Book of Mormon, in CWILN, Vols. 6–8. For a listing of editions of the scrolls, see Robert A. Cloward, The Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha and the Dead Sea Scrolls: A Selected Bibliography of Text Editions and English Translations, Provo, Utah, 1988.

ROBERT A. CLOWARD

---

DEAF, MATERIALS FOR THE

The Church makes a serious effort to serve the hearing impaired with gospel materials in formats they can understand. These formats include simplified versions, signed inserts (interpreters superimposed on film who sign conversations and sounds), closed captions (words that show on the screen only when decoded), printed signs, productions with all-deaf casts, and Church manuals translated into signing for the deaf on videocassettes. Each Church film is signed or closed-captioned. All satellite broadcasts and special programs are closed-captioned. To use closed-captioned videos requires a decoder, which the Church provides to units serving the hearing impaired.

All general conference sessions are signed and closed-captioned. The deaf and hearing impaired who attend general conference in SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, are invited to the Church Office's auditorium to view the proceedings with an interpreter. Those who do not attend in person may participate via closed captions on the Church's satellite network at their local meetinghouses. The sessions are also recorded on videos, with sign language inserts, and made available on loan. TEMPLE ORDINANCES are also presented in formats understandable by the hearing impaired.

A handbook for interpreters and a dictionary of words and phrases peculiar to the Church are available in print and on videocassettes. The Book of Mormon is being translated into American Sign Language (ASL) on videocassette targeted for completion in 1994. A current list of all materials, including their costs and how to order, is available on request from the Special Curriculum Department of the Church.

In a meetinghouse serving the hearing impaired, the Church provides a Com Tek System which amplifies the spoken language. The Church participates in supplying TTY/TDDs (telecommunication devices) for the deaf and hearing-impaired members to carry on Church functions.

DOUGLAS L. HIND

---

DEATH AND DYING

At death, the spirit and body separate and "the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life" (Alma 40:11; cf. Eccl. 12:7). ALMA<sub>2</sub> describes how the spirits of the "righteous are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise, a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles and from all care, and sorrow" (Alma 40:12; see PARADISE; SPIRIT WORLD). In contrast, the wicked, who "whose evil works rather than good," suffer fear of the wrath of God (Alma 40:13; see SPIRIT PRISON). Both those who reside in paradise and those in the spirit prison await the RESURRECTION and the judgment of God (see JUDGMENT DAY, FINAL).

RESURRECTION FROM DEATH. Through the atonement of Christ, all mortals will be resurrected irrespective of personal righteousness. Their spirits will have their PHYSICAL BODIES restored to them, and thus there will be a permanent unity of the spirit with an immortal, incorruptible body (John 5:28–29; Alma 11:42–45). Except for the resurrection of Christ, "this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother barred women from the temple and from the temple city of Jerusalem. Such Essene doctrines are opposite to later Christian and LDS teachings. Similarities between Essenism and Christian or LDS concepts should therefore be explained as a dispersion of ideas among groups that share ancient connections rather than as evidences of more intrinsic relationships.

Much is still to be learned from the Dead Sea Scrolls. Many fragments and some scrolls remain unpublished or are not yet fully understood. Much light may yet be shed on ancient Jewish worship patterns, apocalyptic literature, angelology, and sectarianism beyond what is available in biblical accounts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For a more ample general statement, see S. Kent Brown, "The Dead Sea Scrolls: A Mormon Perspective," BYU Studies 23 (Winter 1983):49–66. Hugh Nibley discusses broad patterns in An Approach to the Book of Mormon, Since Cumorah, and The Prophetic Book of Mormon, in CWIIIN, Vols. 6–8. For a listing of editions of the scrolls, see Robert A. Cloward, The Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha and the Dead Sea Scrolls: A Selected Bibliography of Text Editions and English Translations, Provo, Utah, 1988.

ROBERT A. CLOWARD

---

DEAF, MATERIALS FOR THE

The Church makes a serious effort to serve the hearing impaired with gospel materials in formats they can understand. These formats include simplified versions, signed inserts (interpreters superimposed on film who sign conversations and sounds), closed captions (words that show on the screen only when decoded), printed signs, productions with all-deaf casts, and Church manuals translated into signing for the deaf on videocassettes. Each Church film is signed or closed-captioned. All satellite broadcasts and special programs are closed-captioned. To use closed-captioned videos requires a decoder, which the Church provides to units serving the hearing impaired.

All general conference sessions are signed and closed-captioned. The deaf and hearing impaired who attend general conference in SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, are invited to the Church Office's auditorium to view the proceedings with an interpreter. Those who do not attend in person may participate via closed captions on the Church's satellite network at their local meetinghouses. The sessions are also recorded on videos, with sign language inserts, and made available on loan. TEMPLE ORDINANCES are also presented in formats understandable by the hearing impaired.

A handbook for interpreters and a dictionary of words and phrases peculiar to the Church are available in print and on videocassettes. The Book of Mormon is being translated into American Sign Language (ASL) on videocassette targeted for completion in 1994. A current list of all materials, including their costs and how to order, is available on request from the Special Curriculum Department of the Church.

In a meetinghouse serving the hearing impaired, the Church provides a Com Tek System which amplifies the spoken language. The Church participates in supplying TTY/TDDs (telecommunication devices) for the deaf and hearing-impaired members to carry on Church functions.

DOUGLAS L. HIND

---

DEATH AND DYING

At death, the spirit and body separate and "the spirits of all men, whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life" (Alma 40:11; cf. Eccl. 12:7). ALMA<sub>2</sub> describes how the spirits of the "righteous are received into a state of happiness, which is called paradise, a state of rest, a state of peace, where they shall rest from all their troubles and from all care, and sorrow" (Alma 40:12; see PARADISE; SPIRIT WORLD). In contrast, the wicked, who "whose evil works rather than good," suffer fear of the wrath of God (Alma 40:13; see SPIRIT PRISON). Both those who reside in paradise and those in the spirit prison await the RESURRECTION and the judgment of God (see JUDGMENT DAY, FINAL).

RESURRECTION FROM DEATH. Through the atonement of Christ, all mortals will be resurrected irrespective of personal righteousness. Their spirits will have their PHYSICAL BODIES restored to them, and thus there will be a permanent unity of the spirit with an immortal, incorruptible body (John 5:28–29; Alma 11:42–45). Except for the resurrection of Christ, "this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth, to rise no more,” and the spirits of men would have become devils, subject to Satan for eternity (2 Ne. 9:7–9).

NATURE OF DEATH. The scriptures teach that death does not change one’s personality (Alma 34:34). Individual identities are eternal (D&C 18:10; 93:29). Thus all those who have been obedient to God’s commandments in any time of the world can look forward to reunions with loved ones and associations with ancestors and descendants. Latter-day Saints believe that death need not terminate personal awareness or interpersonal relationships. For the righteous, family ties can continue beyond death because of SEALINGS in the temple. Thus, family members who have received the gospel in mortality conduct FAMILY HISTORY research and perform necessary vicarious ordinances in the temple for deceased family members (see TEMPLE ORDINANCES). Many Latter-day Saints feel a closeness to ancestors from generations past because they have studied their lives, and some have served as proxies for them in temple ordinances (see Moses 6:45–46). Grieving parents know that children who die before reaching the age of ACCOUNTABILITY, and others such as the mentally disabled, receive eternal love and salvation through the grace of Christ and are restored to a completeness to continue in familial relationships (Moro. 8:17, 22; D&C 137:10).

Nevertheless, Latter-day Saints do not embrace death willingly, nor do they seek it (see PROLONGING LIFE). SUICIDE is condemned but judgment of it is left with the Lord (Ballard, pp. 6–9). ABORTION also is considered a serious sin under most circumstances and can cause much sorrow.

The best preparation for death is to repent and live righteously. Those who feel that their lives are in jeopardy with sickness may receive BLESSINGS from the ELDERS of the Church, who, holding the priesthood of God, “shall pray for and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die they shall die unto me, and if they live they shall live unto me” (D&C 42:44; see also SICK, BLESSING THE). Those who face extreme suffering in a terminal illness may call upon the Lord for comfort or relief from pain, and rely upon him to prolong or shorten their days upon the earth. To allow a person who is terminally ill to pass away, rather than maintaining a vegetative existence through artificial systems of support, is not the spiritual equivalent of failing to save the life of a person facing death under other circumstances. The Lord is, however, the ultimate giver and taker of life.

To Latter-day Saints, as to all people, death can be tragic, unexpected, or even a blessed release from suffering. The loss of loved ones is an occasion for mourning. However, in LDS doctrine, death is also an occasion for hope, a birth into the next life, a step in the PLAN OF SALVATION that began in the premortal existence and leads, if one is righteous, to eternal life with God in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. The grieving of the faithful is appropriately marked by sorrow and hope, not despair and depression. Yet the loss of a loved one is to be taken neither lightly nor coldly. Grief and love are compatible—if not essential—emotions of the faithful. And Latter-day Saints who face death themselves, while experiencing uncertainty and concern for those left behind, can find hope in the plan of salvation and the Lord’s promise that “those that die in me shall not taste of death, for it shall be sweet unto them” (D&C 42:46).

DEATH OF INFANTS. Joseph and Emma SMITH struggled with personal losses, including the death of several of their children. Joseph wrote: “I have meditated upon the subject, and asked the question, why it is that infants, innocent children, are taken away from us, especially those that seem to be the most intelligent and interesting. The strongest reasons that present themselves to my mind are these: . . . they were too pure, too lovely, to live on earth . . . [but] we shall soon have them again” (TPJS, pp. 196–97).

DEATH OF YOUTH. Joseph Smith commented on the untimely death of youth at the funeral of young Ephraim Marks: “[This occasion] calls to mind the death of my oldest brother, Alvin, who died in New York, and my youngest brother, Don Carlos Smith, who died in Nauvoo. It has been hard for me to live on earth and see these young men upon whom we have leaned for support and comfort taken from us in the midst of their youth. Yes, it has been hard to be reconciled to these things. . . . Yet I know we ought to be still and know it is of God” (TPJS, p. 215). The Prophet also found great comfort in the gospel’s affirmation of the relationship of mortality to eternity: “We have reason to have the greatest hope and consolations for our dead of any people on the earth; for we have seen them walk worthily in our midst, and seen them sink asleep in the arms of Jesus; and those who have died in the faith are now in the celestial kingdom of God" (TPJS, p. 359).

Mourning not only is appropriate; it is also one of the deepest expressions of pure love: "Thou shalt live together in love, insomuch that thou shalt weep for the loss of them that die" (D&C 42:45). ALMA<sub>1</sub> taught that as part of the BAPTISMAL COVENANT the saints are "to mourn with those that mourn; yea, and comfort those that stand in need of comfort" (Mosiah 18:9). Mourning can heighten our faith and our hopes. The Prophet Joseph Smith said, "The expectation of seeing my friends in the morning of the resurrection cheers my soul and makes me bear up against the evils of life. It is like their taking a long journey, and on their return we meet them with increased joy" (TPJS, p. 296).

FUNERALS. LDS FUNERALS are solemn and grieving occasions but also project a spirit of hope based on anticipation of reunion with the deceased after this life. They are usually held in an LDS chapel or a mortuary under the direction of the BISHOP of the ward (Packer, p. 18). Funerals open and close with sacred music and prayer, sometimes involving congregational singing or a choir (Packer, p. 19). Some LDS hymns describe life after death as a return to the presence of God (Hymns, p. 292), or as a condition of rest from mortal cares, and often include a reminder of the travails of mortality as temporary: "And should we die before our journey's through, happy day, all is well. We then are free from toil and sorrow too; with the saints we shall dwell" (Hymns, p. 30).

The funeral includes reminiscences and eulogies as well as talks about the ATONEMENT, the Resurrection, life after death, and related doctrines that comfort and inspire the bereaved. Some families choose to have members or friends of the family talk about the life of the deceased or sing an appropriate hymn. A prayer on behalf of the family by one of its members before the public service begins is customary.

GRAVESIDE SERVICES. Following the funeral, a simple graveside dedication service traditionally is held, attended only by family and intimate friends. One who holds the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, usually a member or close friend of the family, dedicates the grave, asking God to protect it from the elements or other disturbance as a hallowed resting place until the resurrection.

Local law in some countries may dictate CREMATION rather than burial, but in the absence of such a law, burial is preferred because of its doctrinal symbolism (Packer, p. 19). Circumstances also may dictate a memorial service or a graveside service only. Bishops are counseled to show regard for family wishes in keeping with the spiritual and reverent nature of the occasion (Packer, pp. 19–20).

SUMMARY. Even as death began with the Fall, it will end with the Atonement, through which all are resurrected and the earth itself becomes immortal (D&C 29:22–29; 1 Cor. 15:19–26; Rev. 21:1–4). The hope engendered in Latter-day Saints by this long-range view of the loving Savior, triumphant over death, was reflected in a letter from Joseph Smith to the Church in 1842: "Now what do we hear in the gospel which we have received? A voice of gladness! A voice of mercy from heaven; and a voice of truth out of the earth; glad tidings for the dead; a voice of gladness for the living and the dead; glad tidings of great joy" (D&C 128:19). Although it brings grief to those left behind, death is part of "the merciful plan of the great Creator (2 Ne. 9:6), it is "a mechanism of rescue" (Packer, p. 21)—an essential step in the Lord's "great plan of happiness" (Alma 42:8).

[See also Afterlife; Autopsies; Burial; Cremation.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ballard, M. Russell. "Suicide: Some Things We Know, and Some We Do Not." Ensign 17 [Oct. 1987]:6–9.
- Barlow, Brent A. Understanding Death. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Empty Tomb Bore Testimony." Ensign 18 (May, 1988):65–68.
- Hymns of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints*. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Tragedy or Destiny?" IE 69 (Mar. 1966):178–80, 210–14, 216–17.
- Madsen, Truman G. "Distinctions in the Mormon Approach to Death and Dying." In Deity and Death, ed. Spencer J. Palmer, pp. 61–74. Provo, Utah.
- Packer, Boyd K. "Funerals—A Time for Reverence." Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):18–21.

L. KAY GILLESPIE

---

DEATH RATES

See: Vital Statistics

DEDICATIONS

Dedication is the act of devoting or consecrating something to the Lord, or “setting apart” something for a specific purpose in building the KINGDOM OF GOD. It is a PRIESTHOOD function performed through an official and formal act of prayer.

For members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, dedications serve at least two clear functions. First, they call down the powers of heaven to establish a sacred space or time in the furthering of the desired purpose. Second, they consecrate the participants, focusing their souls upon the meaning of the dedicated object or act. In this way the secular is brought into sacred relationships, and the blessings of God are invoked so that the powers of heaven and earth are joined to bring about works of righteousness.

LDS church buildings are always dedicated to the Lord, usually after all indebtedness is removed. In the Bible the first recorded dedicatory prayer is that of the Temple of Solomon (1 Kgs. 8:22–53), at which time the glory of the Lord filled the temple, in divine approval. The first temple dedication in this dispensation was on March 27, 1836, when the Prophet Joseph SMITH dedicated the KIRTLAND TEMPLE as “a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God” (D&C 109:8). Since then many LDS temples and thousands of MEETINGHOUSES around the world have been similarly dedicated to the Lord. Church buildings such as schools, VISITORS CENTERS, storehouses, office buildings, and HISTORICAL SITES are also dedicated to the Lord for their intended uses. Schools may be dedicated as institutions of learning and character development, while bishop’s storehouses are dedicated to provide welfare and physical supplies for the needy.

Lands and countries may be dedicated, sometimes more than once, for divinely appointed purposes. On October 24, 1841, Elder Orson Hyde ascended the Mount of Olives and dedicated the land of Palestine for the return of the Jews and the rearing of a temple. It was rededicated on several other occasions. More than thirty-two countries and entire continents have been dedicated for the preaching of the gospel.

Homes of the SAINTS, whether or not they are free of debt, may be dedicated “as sacred edifices where the Holy Spirit can reside, and as sanctuaries where family members can worship, find safety from the world, grow spiritually, and prepare for eternal family relationships” (General Handbook of Instructions, 11–2, 1989). On some occasions it has been deemed appropriate to dedicate business places or enterprises to accomplish righteous and divine purposes. It is customary in the Church to dedicate graves as the final resting place for the deceased, asking that the ground be hallowed and protected until the day of resurrection.

Olive OIL is also consecrated by a dedicatory prayer. It is thus set apart by the power of the priesthood for the divinely prescribed purposes of blessing the sick and anointing in the temple (James 5:14; D&C 109:35; 124:39).

TAD R. CALLISTER

DEGREES OF GLORY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has an optimistic view of the eternal rewards awaiting mankind in the hereafter. Members of the Church believe that there are “many mansions” (John 14:2) and that Christ’s ATONEMENT and RESURRECTION will save all mankind from death, and eventually will reclaim from hell all except the SONS OF PERDITION (D&C 76:43–44). The saved, however, are not placed into a monolithic state called HEAVEN. In the resurrection of the body, they are assigned to different degrees of glory commensurate with the law they have obeyed. There are three kingdoms of glory: the celestial, the terrestrial, and the telestial. The apostle Paul spoke of three glories, differing from one another as the sun, moon, and stars differ in brilliance. He called the first two glories celestial and terrestrial, but the third is not named in the Bible (1 Cor. 15:40–41; cf. D&C 76:70–81, 96–98.) The word “telestial” is an LDS term, first used by the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Sidney RIGDON in reporting a vision they received on February 16, 1832 (D&C 76; Webster’s Third New International Dictionary defines telestial glory as “the lowest of three Mormon degrees or kingdoms of glory attainable in heaven”; see also CELESTIAL KINGDOM; TERRESTRIAL KINGDOM; TELESTIAL KINGDOM).

At the final JUDGMENT, all except the DEVIL, his ANGELS, and those who become sons of perdition during mortal life will be assigned to one of the three kingdoms of glory. The devil and his fol-

DEDICATIONS

Dedication is the act of devoting or consecrating something to the Lord, or “setting apart” something for a specific purpose in building the KINGDOM OF GOD. It is a PRIESTHOOD function performed through an official and formal act of prayer.

For members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, dedications serve at least two clear functions. First, they call down the powers of heaven to establish a sacred space or time in the furthering of the desired purpose. Second, they consecrate the participants, focusing their souls upon the meaning of the dedicated object or act. In this way the secular is brought into sacred relationships, and the blessings of God are invoked so that the powers of heaven and earth are joined to bring about works of righteousness.

LDS church buildings are always dedicated to the Lord, usually after all indebtedness is removed. In the Bible the first recorded dedicatory prayer is that of the Temple of Solomon (1 Kgs. 8:22–53), at which time the glory of the Lord filled the temple, in divine approval. The first temple dedication in this dispensation was on March 27, 1836, when the Prophet Joseph SMITH dedicated the KIRTLAND TEMPLE as “a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God” (D&C 109:8). Since then many LDS temples and thousands of MEETINGHOUSES around the world have been similarly dedicated to the Lord. Church buildings such as schools, VISITORS CENTERS, storehouses, office buildings, and HISTORICAL SITES are also dedicated to the Lord for their intended uses. Schools may be dedicated as institutions of learning and character development, while bishop’s storehouses are dedicated to provide welfare and physical supplies for the needy.

Lands and countries may be dedicated, sometimes more than once, for divinely appointed purposes. On October 24, 1841, Elder Orson Hyde ascended the Mount of Olives and dedicated the land of Palestine for the return of the Jews and the rearing of a temple. It was rededicated on several other occasions. More than thirty-two countries and entire continents have been dedicated for the preaching of the gospel.

Homes of the SAINTS, whether or not they are free of debt, may be dedicated “as sacred edifices where the Holy Spirit can reside, and as sanctuaries where family members can worship, find safety from the world, grow spiritually, and prepare for eternal family relationships” (General Handbook of Instructions, 11–2, 1989). On some occasions it has been deemed appropriate to dedicate business places or enterprises to accomplish righteous and divine purposes. It is customary in the Church to dedicate graves as the final resting place for the deceased, asking that the ground be hallowed and protected until the day of resurrection.

Olive OIL is also consecrated by a dedicatory prayer. It is thus set apart by the power of the priesthood for the divinely prescribed purposes of blessing the sick and anointing in the temple (James 5:14; D&C 109:35; 124:39).

TAD R. CALLISTER

DEGREES OF GLORY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has an optimistic view of the eternal rewards awaiting mankind in the hereafter. Members of the Church believe that there are “many mansions” (John 14:2) and that Christ’s ATONEMENT and RESURRECTION will save all mankind from death, and eventually will reclaim from hell all except the SONS OF PERDITION (D&C 76:43–44). The saved, however, are not placed into a monolithic state called HEAVEN. In the resurrection of the body, they are assigned to different degrees of glory commensurate with the law they have obeyed. There are three kingdoms of glory: the celestial, the terrestrial, and the telestial. The apostle Paul spoke of three glories, differing from one another as the sun, moon, and stars differ in brilliance. He called the first two glories celestial and terrestrial, but the third is not named in the Bible (1 Cor. 15:40–41; cf. D&C 76:70–81, 96–98.) The word “telestial” is an LDS term, first used by the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Sidney RIGDON in reporting a vision they received on February 16, 1832 (D&C 76; Webster’s Third New International Dictionary defines telestial glory as “the lowest of three Mormon degrees or kingdoms of glory attainable in heaven”; see also CELESTIAL KINGDOM; TERRESTRIAL KINGDOM; TELESTIAL KINGDOM).

At the final JUDGMENT, all except the DEVIL, his ANGELS, and those who become sons of perdition during mortal life will be assigned to one of the three kingdoms of glory. The devil and his followers will be assigned a kingdom without glory (D&C 76:25–39; 88:24, 32–35).

Kingdoms, by Charlotte Warr Anderson (1987, pieced quilt, 95" × 85"). "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars. . . . So also is the resurrection of the dead" (1 Cor. 15:41–42; cf. D&C 76). Church Museum of History and Art.

LDS SCRIPTURE SOURCES. Although the Bible contains references to varying levels of resurrection and heaven (1 Cor. 15:39–58; 2 Cor. 12:2), LDS understanding of the subject comes mainly through revelations given to the Prophet Joseph Smith. The first revelation dealing directly with this matter was received February 16, 1832, and is called "The Vision" (D&C 76). Concerning the circumstances of receiving this revelation, Joseph Smith explained:

Upon my return from Amherst [Ohio] conference, I resumed the translation of the Scriptures. From sundry revelations which had been received, it was apparent that many important points touching the salvation of man, had been taken from the Bible, or lost before it was compiled. It appeared self-evident from what truths were left, that if God rewarded every one according to the deeds done in the body the term "Heaven," as intended for the Saints' eternal home, must include more kingdoms than one. Accordingly . . . while translating St. John's Gospel, myself and Elder Rigdon saw the following vision"

[11C 1:245; see also JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST)].

Later revelations, especially Doctrine and Covenants 88, 131, 132, 137, and 138, have added information on this subject.

THE CELESTIAL GLORY. The celestial kingdom is reserved for those who receive a testimony of Jesus and fully embrace the gospel; that is, they have faith in Jesus Christ, repent of their sins, are baptized by immersion by one having authority, receive the HOLY GHOST by the LAYING ON OF HANDS, and endure in RIGHTEOUSNESS. All who attain this kingdom "shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever" (D&C 76:62). There are, however, different privileges and powers within this kingdom. "In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood (meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage); and if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase" (D&C 131:1–4). "Increase" in this instance means the bearing of spirit children after mortal life (see ETERNAL LIVES). Joseph Smith explained, "Except a man and his wife enter into an everlasting covenant and be married for eternity . . . by the power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, they will cease to increase when they die; that is, they will not have any children after the resurrection" (TPJS, pp. 300–301). Latter-day Saints believe that those who attain the highest level in the celestial kingdom become gods, receive exaltation, and are joint heirs with Christ of all that the Father has (cf. Rom. 8:14–17; D&C 76:50–70; 84:33–39; 132:19–25).

There is no scriptural explanation of those who go to the two lower categories of the celestial kingdom except that they "are not gods, but are angels of God forever and ever," ministering servants who "remain separately and singly, without exaltation, in their saved condition, to all eternity" (D&C 132:16–17).

THE TERRESTRIAL GLORY. The inhabitants of the terrestrial kingdom are described as the honorable people of the earth who received a testimony of Jesus but were not sufficiently valiant in that testimony to obey all the principles and ordinances of the gospel (D&C 76:71–80). Also, those of "the heathen nations" who "died without law," who are honorable but who do not accept the fulness of the gospel in the postearthly spirit world, are candidates for the terrestrial glory (D&C 45:54; 76:72). In the hereafter, they receive the presence of the Son, but not the fulness of the Father. The glory of the terrestrial kingdom differs from the celestial as the light we see from the moon differs from that of the sun in glory. There is no mention of different degrees or levels in the terrestrial kingdom, but it is reasonable that there, as in the celestial and terrestrial kingdoms, individuals will differ from one another in glory (see D&C 76:97–98).

THE TELESTIAL GLORY. Those who on earth are liars, sorcerers, whoremongers, and adulterers, who receive not the gospel, or the testimony of Jesus, or the prophets, go to the telestial kingdom. They are judged unworthy of being resurrected at the SECOND COMING of Christ and are given additional time in “hell” to repent and prepare themselves for a later resurrection and placement into a kingdom of lesser glory. During this period, they learn to abide by laws they once rejected. They bow the knee and confess their dependence on Jesus Christ, but they still do not receive the fulness of the gospel. At the end of the MILLENNIUM, they are brought out of hell and are resurrected to a telestial glory. There “they shall be servants of the Most High; but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come, worlds without end” (D&C 76:112). However, they do receive “of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial” (verse 86). Though differing in glory from the terrestrial and celestial kingdoms as the light we perceive from the stars differs from that from the moon and the sun, the glory of the telestial kingdom still “surpasses all understanding” (verse 89; see D&C 76:81–90, 98–112; 88:100–101).

OPPORTUNITY FOR ALL. The Church holds that all mankind, except the sons of perdition, will find a place in one of the kingdoms of glory in the hereafter and that they themselves choose the place by the lives they live here on earth and in the postearthly spirit world. Even the lowest glory surpasses all mortal understanding. Everyone is granted AGENCY (D&C 93:30–32). All have access to the revelatory power of the LIGHT OF CHRIST, which, if followed, will lead them to the truth of the gospel (John 1:1–13; Alma 12:9–11; Moro. 7:14–19; D&C 84:45–48). Everyone will hear the gospel of Jesus Christ, either on earth or in the postearthly spirit world, and have ample opportunity to demonstrate the extent of their acceptance (D&C 138; cf. 1 Pet. 4:6). Those who do not have a chance to receive the gospel on this earth, but who would have fully accepted it had they been able to hear it, and who therefore do receive it in the spirit world, are heirs of the celestial kingdom of God (D&C 137:7–8). They will accept the saving ordinances performed for them by proxy in a TEMPLE on the earth (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD). Christ, victorious and gracious, grants to all the desires of their hearts, allowing them to choose their eternal reward according to the law they are willing and able to abide.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dahl, Larry E. “The Vision of the Glories.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. L. Millet and K. P. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 279–308. Sandy, Utah, 1984.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS, Vol. 2, pp. 20–24. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 375–94. Salt Lake City, 1968.

LARRY E. DAHL

---

DEIFICATION, EARLY CHRISTIAN

From the second to eighth centuries, the standard Christian term for SALVATION was theopoesis or theosis, literally, “being made God,” or deification. Such language survived sporadically in the mystical tradition of the West and is still used in Eastern Orthodoxy. LDS doctrines on ETERNAL PROGRESSION and EXALTATION to godhood reflect a similar view of salvation.

In its classical form, particularly in the works of Athanasius (fourth-century bishop of Alexandria), deification was built upon the concept of the incarnation of Christ. The Council of Nicaea (A.D. 325) defined the Son as homoousios (of the same substance) with the Father, and thus fully God. By taking upon himself our flesh through birth, Jesus as God united the essence of humanity to the divine nature. Eventually Christ’s divinity overcame the limits of the flesh through RESURRECTION and glorification, transforming and raising his body to the full level of godhood. As Athanasius summarized, “God was made man that we might be made God” (On the Incarnation of the Logos 54).

Although the doctrine has been dismissed by later scholars as a mere “physical theory of redemption” focused on the Resurrection, deifica-

honorable but who do not accept the fulness of the gospel in the postearthly spirit world, are candidates for the terrestrial glory (D&C 45:54; 76:72). In the hereafter, they receive the presence of the Son, but not the fulness of the Father. The glory of the terrestrial kingdom differs from the celestial as the light we see from the moon differs from that of the sun in glory. There is no mention of different degrees or levels in the terrestrial kingdom, but it is reasonable that there, as in the celestial and terrestrial kingdoms, individuals will differ from one another in glory (see D&C 76:97–98).

THE TELESTIAL GLORY. Those who on earth are liars, sorcerers, whoremongers, and adulterers, who receive not the gospel, or the testimony of Jesus, or the prophets, go to the telestial kingdom. They are judged unworthy of being resurrected at the SECOND COMING of Christ and are given additional time in “hell” to repent and prepare themselves for a later resurrection and placement into a kingdom of lesser glory. During this period, they learn to abide by laws they once rejected. They bow the knee and confess their dependence on Jesus Christ, but they still do not receive the fulness of the gospel. At the end of the MILLENNIUM, they are brought out of hell and are resurrected to a telestial glory. There “they shall be servants of the Most High; but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come, worlds without end” (D&C 76:112). However, they do receive “of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial” (verse 86). Though differing in glory from the terrestrial and celestial kingdoms as the light we perceive from the stars differs from that from the moon and the sun, the glory of the telestial kingdom still “surpasses all understanding” (verse 89; see D&C 76:81–90, 98–112; 88:100–101).

OPPORTUNITY FOR ALL. The Church holds that all mankind, except the sons of perdition, will find a place in one of the kingdoms of glory in the hereafter and that they themselves choose the place by the lives they live here on earth and in the postearthly spirit world. Even the lowest glory surpasses all mortal understanding. Everyone is granted AGENCY (D&C 93:30–32). All have access to the revelatory power of the LIGHT OF CHRIST, which, if followed, will lead them to the truth of the gospel (John 1:1–13; Alma 12:9–11; Moro. 7:14–19; D&C 84:45–48). Everyone will hear the gospel of Jesus Christ, either on earth or in the postearthly spirit world, and have ample opportunity to demonstrate the extent of their acceptance (D&C 138; cf. 1 Pet. 4:6). Those who do not have a chance to receive the gospel on this earth, but who would have fully accepted it had they been able to hear it, and who therefore do receive it in the spirit world, are heirs of the celestial kingdom of God (D&C 137:7–8). They will accept the saving ordinances performed for them by proxy in a TEMPLE on the earth (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD). Christ, victorious and gracious, grants to all the desires of their hearts, allowing them to choose their eternal reward according to the law they are willing and able to abide.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dahl, Larry E. “The Vision of the Glories.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. L. Millet and K. P. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 279–308. Sandy, Utah, 1984.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS, Vol. 2, pp. 20–24. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 375–94. Salt Lake City, 1968.

LARRY E. DAHL

---

DEIFICATION, EARLY CHRISTIAN

From the second to eighth centuries, the standard Christian term for SALVATION was theopoiesis or theosis, literally, “being made God,” or deification. Such language survived sporadically in the mystical tradition of the West and is still used in Eastern Orthodoxy. LDS doctrines on ETERNAL PROGRESSION and EXALTATION to godhood reflect a similar view of salvation.

In its classical form, particularly in the works of Athanasius (fourth-century bishop of Alexandria), deification was built upon the concept of the incarnation of Christ. The Council of Nicaea (A.D. 325) defined the Son as homoousios (of the same substance) with the Father, and thus fully God. By taking upon himself our flesh through birth, Jesus as God united the essence of humanity to the divine nature. Eventually Christ’s divinity overcame the limits of the flesh through RESURRECTION and glorification, transforming and raising his body to the full level of godhood. As Athanasius summarized, “God was made man that we might be made God” (On the Incarnation of the Logos 54).

Although the doctrine has been dismissed by later scholars as a mere “physical theory of redemption” focused on the Resurrection, deifica-

tion is more than a synonym for IMMORTALITY. Church Fathers argued that deification not only restores the image of God that was lost in the Fall, but also enables mankind to transcend human nature so as to possess the attributes of God. "I may become God as far as he became man," declared Gregory of Nazianzus in the late fourth century (Orations 29.19). Descriptions of deification included physical incorruptibility, immunity from suffering, perfect virtue, purity, fullness of knowledge and joy, eternal progression, communion with God, inheritance of divine glory, and joint rulership with Christ in the KINGDOM OF GOD in heaven forever.

The roots of the Christian doctrine of deification are primarily biblical. Beginning with the creation of humanity in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–27), the church fathers developed aspects of deification from such concepts as the command to moral perfection and holiness (e.g., Lev. 19:1–2; Matt. 5:48; 1 Jn. 3:2; 1 Cor. 11:1; 2 Pet. 1:3–7), adoption as heirs of God (Rom. 8:15–17; Gal. 4:4–7), unification with God in Christ (John 17:11–23), and partaking in Christ's sufferings in order to be elevated with him in glory (e.g., Rom. 8:16–18; 2 Cor. 3:18; 4:16–18; Philip. 3:20–21; 2 Tim. 2:10–12). They also pointed to examples of humans described as "gods" in scripture (Ex. 4:16; 7:1; Ps. 82:6; John 10:34–36).

Jewish thought, particularly in response to developing CHRISTOLOGY and its perceived threat to monotheism, was more reticent to speak of humans attaining divinity. Nevertheless, Jews shared some of the crucial biblical texts underlying deification. Talmudic Judaism tended to stress humanity's obligation to imitate God's holiness in consequence of being created in the divine image. Moses and other prophets were spoken of as sharing God's glory and becoming "secondary gods" in relation to other mortals (Meeks, pp. 234–35). Philo described Moses' glorification as "a prototype . . . of the ascent to heaven which every disciple hoped to be granted" (Meeks, p. 244).

Due to its incongruity with the doctrine of God in Western Christianity, deification fell out of favor as the preferred way of describing salvation. Catholic theology increasingly stressed the transcendence of God, who alone was self-existent and eternal. All other beings were created ex nihilo, "out of nothing," having only contingent being. This theological development culminated in Augustine. For him, God's absolute oneness and otherness was so different from humanity's created status and dependence on divine grace that salvation could not bridge the gap between the eternal Creator and the creatures contingent upon him. Ever since, talk of deification has been suspect or heretical in Western Christianity and has formed a major point of objection among traditional Christians to the teachings of Latter-day Saints on the subject.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barlow, Philip L. "Unorthodox Orthodoxy: The Idea of Deification in Christian History." Sunstone 8 (Sept.–Oct. 1983):13–18.
- Benz, Ernst W. "Imago Dei: Man in the Image of God." In Reflections on Mormonism, ed. T. Madsen, pp. 201–219. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Gross, Jules. La divinisation du chrétien d'après les pères grecs. Paris, 1938.
- Meeks, Wayne A. The Prophet-King: Moses Tradition and the Johannine Christology. Leiden, 1967.
- Norman, Keith E. "Deification: The Content of Athanasian Soteriology." Ph.D. diss. Duke University, 1980.
- . "Divinization: The Forgotten Teaching of Early Christianity." Sunstone 1 (1975):15–19.
- Pelikan, Jaroslav. The Christian Tradition, Vols. 1 and 2. Chicago, 1971–1974.

KEITH E. NORMAN

---

DEMOGRAPHICS

See: Vital Statistics

---

DESERET

The word deseret is found in the most ancient book in the Book of Mormon, "And they did also carry with them deseret, which, by interpretation, is a honey bee" (Ether 2:3).

Because the Book of Mormon was written in "reformed Egyptian" (Mormon 9:32), Hugh Nibley has suggested that the etymology of the word deseret is related to the ancient Egyptian word   dšrt, read by Egyptologists as desheret. In Egyptian, dšrt means the red crown (of the king of Lower Egypt). The Egyptian word for bee is  bt. In the discussion of the

tion is more than a synonym for IMMORTALITY. Church Fathers argued that deification not only restores the image of God that was lost in the Fall, but also enables mankind to transcend human nature so as to possess the attributes of God. "I may become God as far as he became man," declared Gregory of Nazianzus in the late fourth century (Orations 29.19). Descriptions of deification included physical incorruptibility, immunity from suffering, perfect virtue, purity, fullness of knowledge and joy, eternal progression, communion with God, inheritance of divine glory, and joint rulership with Christ in the KINGDOM OF GOD in heaven forever.

The roots of the Christian doctrine of deification are primarily biblical. Beginning with the creation of humanity in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–27), the church fathers developed aspects of deification from such concepts as the command to moral perfection and holiness (e.g., Lev. 19:1–2; Matt. 5:48; 1 Jn. 3:2; 1 Cor. 11:1; 2 Pet. 1:3–7), adoption as heirs of God (Rom. 8:15–17; Gal. 4:4–7), unification with God in Christ (John 17:11–23), and partaking in Christ's sufferings in order to be elevated with him in glory (e.g., Rom. 8:16–18; 2 Cor. 3:18; 4:16–18; Philip. 3:20–21; 2 Tim. 2:10–12). They also pointed to examples of humans described as "gods" in scripture (Ex. 4:16; 7:1; Ps. 82:6; John 10:34–36).

Jewish thought, particularly in response to developing CHRISTOLOGY and its perceived threat to monotheism, was more reticent to speak of humans attaining divinity. Nevertheless, Jews shared some of the crucial biblical texts underlying deification. Talmudic Judaism tended to stress humanity's obligation to imitate God's holiness in consequence of being created in the divine image. Moses and other prophets were spoken of as sharing God's glory and becoming "secondary gods" in relation to other mortals (Meeks, pp. 234–35). Philo described Moses' glorification as "a prototype . . . of the ascent to heaven which every disciple hoped to be granted" (Meeks, p. 244).

Due to its incongruity with the doctrine of God in Western Christianity, deification fell out of favor as the preferred way of describing salvation. Catholic theology increasingly stressed the transcendence of God, who alone was self-existent and eternal. All other beings were created ex nihilo, "out of nothing," having only contingent being. This theological development culminated in Augustine. For him, God's absolute oneness and otherness was so different from humanity's created status and dependence on divine grace that salvation could not bridge the gap between the eternal Creator and the creatures contingent upon him. Ever since, talk of deification has been suspect or heretical in Western Christianity and has formed a major point of objection among traditional Christians to the teachings of Latter-day Saints on the subject.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barlow, Philip L. "Unorthodox Orthodoxy: The Idea of Deification in Christian History." Sunstone 8 (Sept.–Oct. 1983):13–18.
- Benz, Ernst W. "Imago Dei: Man in the Image of God." In Reflections on Mormonism, ed. T. Madsen, pp. 201–219. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Gross, Jules. La divinisation du chrétien d'après les pères grecs. Paris, 1938.
- Meeks, Wayne A. The Prophet-King: Moses Tradition and the Johannine Christology. Leiden, 1967.
- Norman, Keith E. "Deification: The Content of Athanasian Soteriology." Ph.D. diss. Duke University, 1980.
- . "Divinization: The Forgotten Teaching of Early Christianity." Sunstone 1 (1975):15–19.
- Pelikan, Jaroslav. The Christian Tradition, Vols. 1 and 2. Chicago, 1971–1974.

KEITH E. NORMAN

---

DEMOGRAPHICS

See: Vital Statistics

---

DESERET

The word deseret is found in the most ancient book in the Book of Mormon, "And they did also carry with them deseret, which, by interpretation, is a honey bee" (Ether 2:3).

Because the Book of Mormon was written in "reformed Egyptian" (Mormon 9:32), Hugh Nibley has suggested that the etymology of the word deseret is related to the ancient Egyptian word   dšrt, read by Egyptologists as desheret. In Egyptian, dšrt means the red crown (of the king of Lower Egypt). The Egyptian word for bee is  bt. In the discussion of the sign  dšrt, Alan Gardiner, in Egyptian Grammar, states that  was used to replace  in two Egyptian titles where  was used to mean the bty King of Lower Egypt. Thus, the title   n-sw-bt was sometimes written as   n-sw-bt, which literally means "He who belongs to the sedge plant (of Upper Egypt) and to the bee (of Lower Egypt)," normally translated "The King of Upper and Lower Egypt." This substitution of  for  has led Nibley to associate the Egyptian word dšrt and the Book of Mormon word deseret.

The beehive and the word deseret have been used variously throughout the history of the Church. The territory settled by the Mormon PIONEERS was called the State of Deseret. The emblem of the beehive is used in the seal of the State of Utah and is a common decoration in Utah architecture, symbolizing industriousness. Brigham YOUNG's house in Salt Lake City is called the Beehive House. Early Sunday schools were part of the Deseret Sunday School Union. A vital part of the Church Welfare Program carries the name Deseret Industries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gardiner, Alan. Egyptian Grammar, 3rd ed., pp. 73-74, and signs L2 and S3. Oxford, 1982.

Nibley, Hugh. Abraham in Egypt, pp. 225-45. Salt Lake City, 1981.

———. Lehi in the Desert and The World of the Jaredites, There Were Jaredites. CWHN 5:189-94, 319-22.

STEPHEN PARKER

DESERET, STATE OF

On February 2, 1848, by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Mexico ceded to the United States an extensive area that included the Great Basin, where Mormon PIONEERS had begun settlement six months earlier. Even before the treaty was signed, Church leaders began discussing petitioning the U.S. government for recognition as a state or asking for territorial privileges. In July 1849 a committee wrote a constitution. It used as models the U.S. Constitution and the Iowa Constitution of 1846, from which the committee took fifty-seven of the sixty-seven sections of the new constitution. The committee requested that the state be named DESERET and that the boundaries be Oregon on the north, the Green River on the east, Mexico on the south, and the Sierra Nevada on the west, including a portion of the Southern California seacoast. "Deseret," a word from the Book of Mormon, means "honeybee" (Ether 2:3) and is symbolic of work and industry. A slate of officers was approved, with Brigham YOUNG as governor. Almon W. Babbitt, appointed representative to Congress, was instructed to carry the plea for statehood to Washington, D.C.

This effort by Latter-day Saint settlers to organize themselves into a provisional government was much like the attempt made in the 1780s by settlers in Tennessee, who organized the state of Franklin when they felt neglected by North Carolina, and the settlers of Oregon, who established a sign  dšrt, Alan Gardiner, in Egyptian Grammar, states that  was used to replace  in two Egyptian titles where  was used to mean the bty King of Lower Egypt. Thus, the title   n-sw-bt was sometimes written as   n-sw-bt, which literally means "He who belongs to the sedge plant (of Upper Egypt) and to the bee (of Lower Egypt)," normally translated "The King of Upper and Lower Egypt." This substitution of  for  has led Nibley to associate the Egyptian word dšrt and the Book of Mormon word deseret.

The word "Deseret" appears twice on the Utah stone at the Washington Monument (1978; replica of the cornerstone of the Salt Lake Temple, 1853). The interior of the monument contains 190 stones representing individuals, cities, states, and nations. "Deseret" was a name often used in the territory colonized by the Mormon pioneers. Photographer: Robert L. Palmer.

The beehive and the word deseret have been used variously throughout the history of the Church. The territory settled by the Mormon PIONEERS was called the State of Deseret. The emblem of the beehive is used in the seal of the State of Utah and is a common decoration in Utah architecture, symbolizing industriousness. Brigham YOUNG's house in Salt Lake City is called the Beehive House. Early Sunday schools were part of the Deseret Sunday School Union. A vital part of the Church Welfare Program carries the name Deseret Industries.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Gardiner, Alan. Egyptian Grammar, 3rd ed., pp. 73-74, and signs L2 and S3. Oxford, 1982.

Nibley, Hugh. Abraham in Egypt, pp. 225-45. Salt Lake City, 1981.

———. Lehi in the Desert and The World of the Jaredites, There Were Jaredites. CWHN 5:189-94, 319-22.

STEPHEN PARKER

DESERET, STATE OF

On February 2, 1848, by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Mexico ceded to the United States an extensive area that included the Great Basin, where Mormon PIONEERS had begun settlement six months earlier. Even before the treaty was signed, Church leaders began discussing petitioning the U.S. government for recognition as a state or asking for territorial privileges. In July 1849 a committee wrote a constitution. It used as models the U.S. Constitution and the Iowa Constitution of 1846, from which the committee took fifty-seven of the sixty-seven sections of the new constitution. The committee requested that the state be named DESERET and that the boundaries be Oregon on the north, the Green River on the east, Mexico on the south, and the Sierra Nevada on the west, including a portion of the Southern California seacoast. "Deseret," a word from the Book of Mormon, means "honeybee" (Ether 2:3) and is symbolic of work and industry. A slate of officers was approved, with Brigham YOUNG as governor. Almon W. Babbitt, appointed representative to Congress, was instructed to carry the plea for statehood to Washington, D.C.

This effort by Latter-day Saint settlers to organize themselves into a provisional government was much like the attempt made in the 1780s by settlers in Tennessee, who organized the state of Franklin when they felt neglected by North Carolina, and the settlers of Oregon, who established a local government that functioned without recognition from the U.S. government until they were given territorial status in 1848.

The word "Deseret" appears twice on the Utah stone at the Washington Monument (1978; replica of the cornerstone of the Salt Lake Temple, 1853). The interior of the monument contains 190 stones representing individuals, cities, states, and nations. "Deseret" was a name often used in the territory colonized by the Mormon pioneers. Photographer: Robert L. Palmer.

The State of Deseret General Assembly met in regular session from December 1849 to March 1850. After special sessions during the summer, the members assembled for their second regular session in December 1850. Earlier, on September 9, U.S. President Millard Fillmore had signed an act to create a much smaller UTAH TERRITORY and appointed Brigham Young the first territorial governor. After word of the creation of the territory reached Utah, the tentative state of Deseret was dissolved on March 28, 1851. The provisional government had lasted only about a year and a half.

The territorial status did not provide the self-government Latter-day Saints desired, and even though Brigham Young was appointed first governor, Church leaders and the territorial legislature continued efforts to obtain statehood. In 1856, delegates met to again write a constitution and propose the state of Deseret, an effort rejected by Congress. As a part of a third effort in 1862, Brigham Young called the State of Deseret General Assembly into session for the first time since 1851. Thereafter it met each year until 1870, each session lasting only a few days and focusing on winning statehood on the basis of the proposed constitution of 1849 with only minor changes.

In the meantime, Brigham Young had been replaced as territorial governor by a series of outside appointees, who became progressively more hostile to the meetings of the General Assembly and complained about this “ghost government,” as they called it. In 1872 a constitutional convention drew up a new constitution and dropped the name Deseret from the petition. This petition also failed, and hope for the state of Deseret came to an end.

[See also History of the Church, 1844–1877; Utah Statehood.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Constitution of the State of Deseret.* Kanesville, Iowa, 1849.
 Crawley, Peter. “The Constitution of the State of Deseret.” BYU Studies 29 (Fall 1989):7–22.
 Morgan, Dale L. “The State of Deseret.” Utah Historical Quarterly 8 (1940):65–251. Reprinted as The State of Deseret. Logan, Utah, 1987.

JEFFERY OGDEN JOHNSON

DESERET ALPHABET

On April 8, 1852, Brigham YOUNG announced that the Board of Regents of the UNIVERSITY OF DESERET was preparing a new method of writing English. The idea was to develop a sort of universal system, especially so that foreign-language-speaking converts could learn to read English more easily.

The final version of the Deseret Alphabet utilized thirty-eight characters corresponding to sounds of English. Like Noah Webster and other early Americans who studied language, Brigham Young objected to sounding the letter a differently in the spellings of mate, father, fall, man, and many. In this, he was apparently influenced by studying shorthand with his secretary George D. Watt, who had studied systems of shorthand and spelling reform based on phonemes, the significant sounds of English, under Isaac Pitman.

The Regents discussed letter forms and sounds to be represented. The forms finally adopted were unfamiliar and unadaptable to cursive writing. The range of basic English sounds was close to present-day analyses, but the schwa (the unaccented, reduced vowel in idea, trade, rat, fly, biology, upon) was omitted, leading to respellings based upon traditional spelling.

Learning the Deseret phonetic system was easy. A previously illiterate missionary wrote letters home after only six lessons. Hosca Stout, Thales Haskell, and others kept diaries in Deseret.

This reader was published in 1868 in the Deseret alphabet. Its title reads “The Deseret Second Book by the Regents of the Deseret University.” Development of the Deseret Alphabet was begun in October 1853, and a few books, including the Book of Mormon, were published in this phonetic script before 1870. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

However, since pronunciation, which varies, determined spelling, many words might appear more than one way in the same individual’s usage, resulting in some confusion.

Scriptural passages written in the Deseret Alphabet appeared in the Deseret News in 1859. Orson Pratt transcribed further materials that were published in New York City, printed with type designed and cast there, at a total cost of $18,500. These included first and second school readers in 1868 and the Book of Mormon and a third reader of excerpts from it in 1869. Although few of these books were sold, some SUNDAY SCHOOLS as well as territorial schools used them.

In 1873 Pratt estimated the cost of printing a meager library of 1,000 titles at $5 million—side appointees, who became progressively more hostile to the meetings of the General Assembly and complained about this “ghost government,” as they called it. In 1872 a constitutional convention drew up a new constitution and dropped the name Deseret from the petition. This petition also failed, and hope for the state of Deseret came to an end.

[See also History of the Church, 1844–1877; Utah Statehood.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Constitution of the State of Deseret.* Kanesville, Iowa, 1849.
 Crawley, Peter. “The Constitution of the State of Deseret.” BYU Studies 29 (Fall 1989):7–22.
 Morgan, Dale L. “The State of Deseret.” Utah Historical Quarterly 8 (1940):65–251. Reprinted as The State of Deseret. Logan, Utah, 1987.

JEFFERY OGDEN JOHNSON

DESERET ALPHABET

On April 8, 1852, Brigham YOUNG announced that the Board of Regents of the UNIVERSITY OF DESERET was preparing a new method of writing English. The idea was to develop a sort of universal system, especially so that foreign-language-speaking converts could learn to read English more easily.

The final version of the Deseret Alphabet utilized thirty-eight characters corresponding to sounds of English. Like Noah Webster and other early Americans who studied language, Brigham Young objected to sounding the letter a differently in the spellings of mate, father, fall, man, and many. In this, he was apparently influenced by studying shorthand with his secretary George D. Watt, who had studied systems of shorthand and spelling reform based on phonemes, the significant sounds of English, under Isaac Pitman.

The Regents discussed letter forms and sounds to be represented. The forms finally adopted were unfamiliar and unadaptable to cursive writing. The range of basic English sounds was close to present-day analyses, but the schwa (the unaccented, reduced vowel in idea, trade, rat, ly, biology, upon) was omitted, leading to respellings based upon traditional spelling.

Learning the Deseret phonetic system was easy. A previously illiterate missionary wrote letters home after only six lessons. Hosca Stout, Thales Haskell, and others kept diaries in Deseret.

This reader was published in 1868 in the Deseret alphabet. Its title reads “The Deseret Second Book by the Regents of the Deseret University.” Development of the Deseret Alphabet was begun in October 1853, and a few books, including the Book of Mormon, were published in this phonetic script before 1870. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

However, since pronunciation, which varies, determined spelling, many words might appear more than one way in the same individual’s usage, resulting in some confusion.

Scriptural passages written in the Deseret Alphabet appeared in the Deseret News in 1859. Orson Pratt transcribed further materials that were published in New York City, printed with type designed and cast there, at a total cost of $18,500. These included first and second school readers in 1868 and the Book of Mormon and a third reader of excerpts from it in 1869. Although few of these books were sold, some SUNDAY SCHOOLS as well as territorial schools used them.

In 1873 Pratt estimated the cost of printing a meager library of 1,000 titles at $5 million—

X 01809111 JUPJ911.

Long Sounds.			Letter.	Name.	Sound.
Letter.	Name.	Sound.
Ə.....c.....as in.....cat.			7.....	p
ɛ.....a.....".....ate.			8.....	b
ə.....ah.....".....art.			9.....	t
o.....aw.....".....aught.			0.....	d
o.....o.....".....oat.			C.....	che.as in...cheese.
o.....oo.....".....ooze.			9.....	g
			0.....	k
			0.....	ga...as in...gate.
Short Sounds of the above.			p.....	f
ʃ.....as in.....it.			6.....	v
ɹ.....".....et.			L.....	eth.as in...thigh.
ɹ.....".....at.			ʃ.....	the " thy.
ɹ.....".....ot.			8.....	s
ɹ.....".....ut.			6.....	z
q.....".....book.			D.....	esh.as in...flesh.
ʃ.....i.....as in...ice.			S.....	zhe " vision.
ə.....ow.....".....owl.			ʃ.....	ur " burn.
ʃ.....woo			ɹ.....	l
ʃ.....ye			9.....	m
ʃ.....h			h.....	n
			H.....	eng.as in...length.

The thirty-eight symbols used in the Deseret Alphabet and their phonetic values. The top line reads "The Deseret Alphabet."

prohibitively expensive for a sparse population in a subsistence economy. Those already literate had little incentive to learn the Deseret Alphabet, while illiterates would have had very little to read. The death of President Young in 1877 marked the end of efforts on its behalf.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ivins, Stanley S. "The Deseret Alphabet." Utah Humanities Review 1 (1947):223-39.
- Monson, Samuel C. "The Deseret Alphabet." Master's thesis, Columbia University, 1948.

SAMUEL C. MONSON

DESERET BOOK COMPANY

The Deseret Book Company had its beginnings in George Q. Cannon and Sons, a retail bookstore and publishing company established in Salt Lake

City in 1866. Cannon was an apostle and a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. After his death in 1901, the company was purchased by the Church's Deseret News and renamed the Deseret News Bookstore. Meanwhile, the Church SUNDAY SCHOOL organization began publishing its own lesson manuals and supplementary instructional materials in the early 1870s and later included book publishing and a retail bookstore. The two companies were merged in 1919 and subsequently named the Deseret Book Company.

A subsidiary of the Church's Deseret Management Corporation, the Deseret Book Company has three divisions: retail, publishing, and wholesale. The retail division operates stores in several states in the western United States: Mormon Handicraft, which is a Salt Lake City consignment shop for handmade goods; a book club; an audio- and videotape club; and a mail- and telephone-order shopping service. The publishing division produces books related to family life, history, biography, LDS doctrine and theology, fiction, and inspiration for both children and adults. It also produces audio- and videotapes and compact discs. The wholesale division distributes Deseret Book titles and books from other publishers to retailers throughout the world.

ELEANOR KNOWLES

DESERET HOSPITAL

With increasing evidence that home care of the sick and injured was no longer adequate, the women of the RELIEF SOCIETY, with the support of the First Presidency, opened Deseret Hospital in Salt Lake City on July 17, 1882. Though Roman Catholics and Episcopalians already sponsored hospitals in Utah, this was the first official endorsement of allopathic medicine by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (see MEDICAL PRACTICES). A desire to have a place where spiritual ministrations could accompany medical treatment (see SICK, BLESSING THE) was among the motivations for the institution, and staff members were blessed and SET APART by Church leaders for their tasks. The hospital also specialized in obstetrics, both in providing care and in training midwives and others.

Deseret Hospital was originally located in downtown Salt Lake City in a building vacated when the Catholics moved their hospital to larger

X 01809111 JUPJ911.

Long Sounds.			Letter.	Name.	Sound.
Letter.	Name.	Sound.
Ə.....	c.....as in...ent.		7.....	p
ɛ.....	a " ate.		8.....	b
ə.....	ah " art.		9.....	t
o.....	aw " auglit.		0.....	d
o.....	o " oat.		C.....	che.as in...cheese.
o.....	oo " ooze.		9.....	g
			0.....	k
			0.....	ga...as in...gate.
			p.....	f
			6.....	v
			L.....	eth...as in...thigh.
			Y.....	the " thy.
			S.....	s
			6.....	z
			D.....	esh...as in...flesh.
			S.....	zhe " vision.
			ʰ.....	ur " burn.
			l.....	l
			3.....	m
			h.....	n
			H.....	eng.as in...length.
Short Sounds of the above.
ʃ.....	as in...it.
ɹ.....	" et.
ɹ.....	" at.
ɹ.....	" ol.
ɹ.....	" ut.
q.....	" book.
ɹ.....	i...as in...ice.
ə.....	ow " owl.
ʌ.....	woo
ʏ.....	ye
ʏ.....	h

The thirty-eight symbols used in the Deseret Alphabet and their phonetic values. The top line reads "The Deseret Alphabet."

prohibitively expensive for a sparse population in a subsistence economy. Those already literate had little incentive to learn the Deseret Alphabet, while illiterates would have had very little to read. The death of President Young in 1877 marked the end of efforts on its behalf.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ivins, Stanley S. "The Deseret Alphabet." Utah Humanities Review 1 (1947):223-39.
- Monson, Samuel C. "The Deseret Alphabet." Master's thesis, Columbia University, 1948.

SAMUEL C. MONSON

DESERET BOOK COMPANY

The Deseret Book Company had its beginnings in George Q. Cannon and Sons, a retail bookstore and publishing company established in Salt Lake

City in 1866. Cannon was an apostle and a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. After his death in 1901, the company was purchased by the Church's Deseret News and renamed the Deseret News Bookstore. Meanwhile, the Church SUNDAY SCHOOL organization began publishing its own lesson manuals and supplementary instructional materials in the early 1870s and later included book publishing and a retail bookstore. The two companies were merged in 1919 and subsequently named the Deseret Book Company.

A subsidiary of the Church's Deseret Management Corporation, the Deseret Book Company has three divisions: retail, publishing, and wholesale. The retail division operates stores in several states in the western United States: Mormon Handicraft, which is a Salt Lake City consignment shop for handmade goods; a book club; an audio- and videotape club; and a mail- and telephone-order shopping service. The publishing division produces books related to family life, history, biography, LDS doctrine and theology, fiction, and inspiration for both children and adults. It also produces audio- and videotapes and compact discs. The wholesale division distributes Deseret Book titles and books from other publishers to retailers throughout the world.

ELEANOR KNOWLES

DESERET HOSPITAL

With increasing evidence that home care of the sick and injured was no longer adequate, the women of the RELIEF SOCIETY, with the support of the First Presidency, opened Deseret Hospital in Salt Lake City on July 17, 1882. Though Roman Catholics and Episcopalians already sponsored hospitals in Utah, this was the first official endorsement of allopathic medicine by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (see MEDICAL PRACTICES). A desire to have a place where spiritual ministrations could accompany medical treatment (see SICK, BLESSING THE) was among the motivations for the institution, and staff members were blessed and SET APART by Church leaders for their tasks. The hospital also specialized in obstetrics, both in providing care and in training midwives and others.

Deseret Hospital was originally located in downtown Salt Lake City in a building vacated when the Catholics moved their hospital to larger

X 01809111 JUPJ911.

Long Sounds.			Letter.	Name.	Sound.
Letter.	Name.	Sound.
Ə.....	c.....as in...ent.		7.....	p
ɛ.....	a " ate.		8.....	b
ə.....	ah " art.		9.....	t
o.....	aw " auglit.		0.....	d
o.....	o " oat.		C.....	che.as in...cheese.
o.....	oo " ooze.		9.....	g
			0.....	k
			0.....	ga...as in...gate.
			p.....	f
			6.....	v
			L.....	eth...as in...thigh.
			Y.....	the " thy.
			S.....	s
			6.....	z
			D.....	esh...as in...flesh.
			S.....	zhe " vision.
			ʰ.....	ur " burn.
			l.....	l
			3.....	m
			h.....	n
			H.....	eng.as in...length.
Short Sounds of the above.
ʃ.....	as in...it.
ɹ.....	" et.
ɹ.....	" at.
ɹ.....	" ol.
ɹ.....	" ut.
q.....	" book.
ɹ.....	i...as in...ice.
ə.....	ow " owl.
ʌ.....	woo
ʏ.....	ye
ʏ.....	h

The thirty-eight symbols used in the Deseret Alphabet and their phonetic values. The top line reads "The Deseret Alphabet."

prohibitively expensive for a sparse population in a subsistence economy. Those already literate had little incentive to learn the Deseret Alphabet, while illiterates would have had very little to read. The death of President Young in 1877 marked the end of efforts on its behalf.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ivins, Stanley S. "The Deseret Alphabet." Utah Humanities Review 1 (1947):223-39.
- Monson, Samuel C. "The Deseret Alphabet." Master's thesis, Columbia University, 1948.

SAMUEL C. MONSON

DESERET BOOK COMPANY

The Deseret Book Company had its beginnings in George Q. Cannon and Sons, a retail bookstore and publishing company established in Salt Lake

City in 1866. Cannon was an apostle and a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. After his death in 1901, the company was purchased by the Church's Deseret News and renamed the Deseret News Bookstore. Meanwhile, the Church SUNDAY SCHOOL organization began publishing its own lesson manuals and supplementary instructional materials in the early 1870s and later included book publishing and a retail bookstore. The two companies were merged in 1919 and subsequently named the Deseret Book Company.

A subsidiary of the Church's Deseret Management Corporation, the Deseret Book Company has three divisions: retail, publishing, and wholesale. The retail division operates stores in several states in the western United States: Mormon Handicraft, which is a Salt Lake City consignment shop for handmade goods; a book club; an audio- and videotape club; and a mail- and telephone-order shopping service. The publishing division produces books related to family life, history, biography, LDS doctrine and theology, fiction, and inspiration for both children and adults. It also produces audio- and videotapes and compact discs. The wholesale division distributes Deseret Book titles and books from other publishers to retailers throughout the world.

ELEANOR KNOWLES

DESERET HOSPITAL

With increasing evidence that home care of the sick and injured was no longer adequate, the women of the RELIEF SOCIETY, with the support of the First Presidency, opened Deseret Hospital in Salt Lake City on July 17, 1882. Though Roman Catholics and Episcopalians already sponsored hospitals in Utah, this was the first official endorsement of allopathic medicine by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (see MEDICAL PRACTICES). A desire to have a place where spiritual ministrations could accompany medical treatment (see SICK, BLESSING THE) was among the motivations for the institution, and staff members were blessed and SET APART by Church leaders for their tasks. The hospital also specialized in obstetrics, both in providing care and in training midwives and others.

Deseret Hospital was originally located in downtown Salt Lake City in a building vacated when the Catholics moved their hospital to larger quarters. In July 1884, Deseret Hospital moved to a larger building that could accommodate forty to fifty patients, though it seldom had more than sixteen at a time.

Deseret Hospital Board of Directors. Top row: Ellis R. Shipp, MD; Bathsheba W. Smith; Elizabeth Howard; Romania B. Pratt Penrose, MD. Second row: Phebe C. Woodruff; Mary Isabella Horne; Eliza R. Snow; Zina D. H. Young; Marinda N. Hyde. Bottom row: Jane S. Richards; Emmeline B. Wells. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

Deseret Hospital featured a homelike atmosphere, the latest surgical equipment from New York, and a staff of dedicated, well-trained, mostly female physicians, including Ellen B. Ferguson, Ellis R. Shipp, and Romania B. Pratt. Long before its doors opened, the women of the Church, led by Eliza R. Snow, raised funds for the hospital. Though these efforts continued, support was never adequate to pay for the treatment of the many "free" patients, and the hospital was forced to close in 1894. The hospital kept its nursing and midwifery schools operating until the opening of the Groves Latter-day Saints Hospital in 1905 (see HOSPITALS).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. "The Economic Role of Pioneer Mormon Women." Western Humanities Review 9 (Spring 1955):161-63.
- Noall, Claire Wilcox. "Utah's Pioneer Women Doctors: The Story of the Deseret Hospital." IE 42 (May 1939):274-75, 308-309.

SCOTT PARKER

DESERET INDUSTRIES

Toward the end of the Great Depression, in August 1938, Deseret Industries was established "to help Church members help themselves" through a program of donated household items, volunteer labor, and vocational training.

In a letter to LDS congregations in Utah's Salt Lake Valley dated August 11, 1938, the FIRST PRESIDENCY and PRESIDING BISHOPRIC called for "contributions of clothing, papers, magazines, articles of furniture, electrical fixtures, metal and glassware" from each household. The letter explained that the project would be known as Deseret Industries, and that the organization would make "periodic collections of these materials from homes . . . and employ men and women to sort, process, and repair the articles collected for sale and distribution among those who desire to obtain usable articles . . . at a minimum cost."

Since then, goods have been sold at thrift stores bearing the Deseret Industries name. Local Church congregations continue donation drives, during which volunteer workers collect goods from the homes of members. Anyone can donate items at any Deseret Industries store as well.

Deseret Hospital Board of Directors. Top row: Ellis R. Shipp, MD; Bathsheba W. Smith; Elizabeth Howard; Romania B. Pratt Penrose, MD. Second row: Phebe C. Woodruff; Mary Isabella Horne; Eliza R. Snow; Zina D. H. Young; Marinda N. Hyde. Bottom row: Jane S. Richards; Emmeline B. Wells. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

quarters. In July 1884, Deseret Hospital moved to a larger building that could accommodate forty to fifty patients, though it seldom had more than sixteen at a time.

Deseret Hospital featured a homelike atmosphere, the latest surgical equipment from New York, and a staff of dedicated, well-trained, mostly female physicians, including Ellen B. Ferguson, Ellis R. Shipp, and Romania B. Pratt. Long before its doors opened, the women of the Church, led by Eliza R. Snow, raised funds for the hospital. Though these efforts continued, support was never adequate to pay for the treatment of the many "free" patients, and the hospital was forced to close in 1894. The hospital kept its nursing and midwifery schools operating until the opening of the Groves Latter-day Saints Hospital in 1905 (see HOSPITALS).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. "The Economic Role of Pioneer Mormon Women." Western Humanities Review 9 (Spring 1955):161-63.
- Noall, Claire Wilcox. "Utah's Pioneer Women Doctors: The Story of the Deseret Hospital." IE 42 (May 1939):274-75, 308-309.

SCOTT PARKER

DESERET INDUSTRIES

Toward the end of the Great Depression, in August 1938, Deseret Industries was established "to help Church members help themselves" through a program of donated household items, volunteer labor, and vocational training.

In a letter to LDS congregations in Utah's Salt Lake Valley dated August 11, 1938, the FIRST PRESIDENCY and PRESIDING BISHOPRIC called for "contributions of clothing, papers, magazines, articles of furniture, electrical fixtures, metal and glassware" from each household. The letter explained that the project would be known as Deseret Industries, and that the organization would make "periodic collections of these materials from homes . . . and employ men and women to sort, process, and repair the articles collected for sale and distribution among those who desire to obtain usable articles . . . at a minimum cost."

Since then, goods have been sold at thrift stores bearing the Deseret Industries name. Local Church congregations continue donation drives, during which volunteer workers collect goods from the homes of members. Anyone can donate items at any Deseret Industries store as well.

This donation bag from the 1940s features the beehive, symbol of industry for the Church Welfare plan, as well as one of the stated goals of the Deseret Industries, "Help others to help themselves." Photographer: Holger Marius Larsen.

The Deseret Industries program was implemented specifically for the benefit of members who could not obtain employment elsewhere, and its initial work force consisted primarily of the unemployed and elderly. It was operated under the umbrella of the Church Security Plan—now Church WELFARE SERVICES—and continues as an integral part of the Church welfare system. Church leaders use Deseret Industries not only for employment training but as a resource for clothing and household items for needy members.

There were more than a dozen Deseret Industries stores in Salt Lake County and five in the Los Angeles area before World War II. Most of those were closed during the war, and operations were consolidated. By 1948 there were six stores, and growth continued slowly but steadily into the 1950s.

Deseret Industries started a rug-making operation in 1954 and acquired a woolen mill in 1957. The plants not only provided additional jobs but also goods to be distributed to needy Church members through the welfare program. Many elderly and handicapped members found work at Deseret Industries, and those who were sufficiently able were trained and moved into private industry.

As the program moved through the 1960s and into the 1970s, the emphasis on rehabilitation increased. Preparing people to enter the private workplace became a forte of Deseret Industries. Stores and equipment were upgraded through the mid-1970s and early 1980s to compare favorably with any of their kind.

Deseret Industries outlets have followed large concentrations of Church members. At the beginning of the 1990s there were forty-six Deseret Industries retail stores in cities of the western United States.

The Deseret Industries program still focuses on those with disabilities and those who have other social, employment, and economic challenges and obstacles to overcome. An estimated 60–70 percent of the people in the program are somewhat limited physically, mentally, emotionally, or socially. In 1980, Deseret Industries placed about 240 people into jobs with private companies. In 1989, it placed more than 700.

People needing training are usually referred to Deseret Industries by a Church leader. A program for each person is written with the individual's supervisors and rehabilitation workers. It incorporates personal and work-related goals and is closely monitored. Local Church members sometimes receive CALLINGS to help with training and rehabilitation.

Most Deseret Industries programs are more closely related to work adjustment than to skills training. Trainees get the experience of entering the workplace every day, being on time, learning to get along with coworkers, and taking directions from supervisors. Deseret Industries is not set up to train people to be journeymen plumbers or electricians, for example, though people may get experience doing these types of things.

Employment or career development is one of six standards of personal and family EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS outlined by the Church, the others being literacy and education, financial and resource management, home production and storage, physical health, and social-emotional and spiritual strength.

The mission of Deseret Industries parallels the mission of Church Welfare Services. A 1936 statement by the Church's First Presidency explains the philosophy of the welfare program:

Our primary purpose was to set up, in so far as it might be possible, a system under which the curse of idleness would be done away with, the evils of a dole abolished, and independence, industry, thrift and self-respect be once more established amongst our people. The aim of the Church is to help the people help themselves. Work is to be re-enthroned as the ruling principle of the lives of our Church membership [CR, Oct. 1936].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Searle, Don. "Deseret Industries at 50." Ensign 18 (July 1988):32-37.
- Cannon, Michael. "Deseret Industries Commemorates 50 Years." Church News, Aug. 13, 1988, pp. 8-9, 12.
- Lloyd, R. Scott. "Finding Dignity Through Work." Church News, Sept. 23, 1989, pp. 8-9.

MICHAEL C. CANNON

DESERET NEWS

The Deseret News began as a weekly newspaper in Salt Lake City on June 15, 1850, just three years after the Mormon pioneers founded the city. Established by the Church under the direction of Brigham YOUNG, the News has had uninterrupted publication to the present. It became a daily on November 21, 1867. From the beginning, the Deseret News has championed the U.S. Constitution and "truth and liberty." Editorially it has promoted free enterprise, the work ethic, and high moral values.

The early pioneers launched a newspaper against great odds. Because paper had to be brought in from California or Missouri by oxcart, they tried to make their own locally from rags in 1854. The result was a thick, gray paper that was often streaked with colors from the old shirts, pants, and dresses from which it was made.

The first editor of the Deseret News was Willard Richards (1850-1854), who was also a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church. George Q. Cannon was the editor from 1867 to 1873 and from 1877 to 1879. As a youth, he had worked in the Times and Seasons printing office in Nauvoo, Illinois, and had edited the Millennial Star in Great Britain. He was mentioned by Charles Dickens in The Uncommercial Traveler in connection with his work in Church emigration.

As editor from 1880 to 1892 and again from 1899 to 1907, Charles W. Penrose was a tireless editorial defender of the Church. He fought over many topics, particularly polygamy, and was fond of referring to an opposing editor as "my friend, the enemy." Horace G. (Bud) Whitney, as business manager of the Deseret News from 1899 to 1920, increased circulation nearly 500 percent, doubled the number of pages, and left the News a substantial financial surplus.

Mark E. Petersen became editor of the Deseret News in 1946 after working as a reporter, news editor, and manager. Called to be an apostle in the Church in 1944, he handled both full-time jobs for several years. He wrote editorials for the Church News, a weekly supplement, until his death in January 1984.

In 1952 Elder Petersen brought the Deseret News into a newspaper agency arrangement with its competitor paper, the Salt Lake Tribune.

The Deseret News building, c. 1899, in the background, stood at that time on the corner of Main and South Temple Streets in Salt Lake City, the site of the former Hotel Utah. The Brigham Young Monument in the foreground was designed by Cyrus E. Dallin and dedicated in a five-day celebration, July 20-24, 1897, the fiftieth anniversary of the pioneers' arrival in Salt Lake Valley.

Our primary purpose was to set up, in so far as it might be possible, a system under which the curse of idleness would be done away with, the evils of a dole abolished, and independence, industry, thrift and self-respect be once more established amongst our people. The aim of the Church is to help the people help themselves. Work is to be re-enthroned as the ruling principle of the lives of our Church membership [CR, Oct. 1936].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Searle, Don. "Deseret Industries at 50." Ensign 18 (July 1988):32-37.
- Cannon, Michael. "Deseret Industries Commemorates 50 Years." Church News, Aug. 13, 1988, pp. 8-9, 12.
- Lloyd, R. Scott. "Finding Dignity Through Work." Church News, Sept. 23, 1989, pp. 8-9.

MICHAEL C. CANNON

DESERET NEWS

The Deseret News began as a weekly newspaper in Salt Lake City on June 15, 1850, just three years after the Mormon pioneers founded the city. Established by the Church under the direction of Brigham YOUNG, the News has had uninterrupted publication to the present. It became a daily on November 21, 1867. From the beginning, the Deseret News has championed the U.S. Constitution and "truth and liberty." Editorially it has promoted free enterprise, the work ethic, and high moral values.

The early pioneers launched a newspaper against great odds. Because paper had to be brought in from California or Missouri by oxcart, they tried to make their own locally from rags in 1854. The result was a thick, gray paper that was often streaked with colors from the old shirts, pants, and dresses from which it was made.

The first editor of the Deseret News was Willard Richards (1850-1854), who was also a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church. George Q. Cannon was the editor from 1867 to 1873 and from 1877 to 1879. As a youth, he had worked in the Times and Seasons printing office in Nauvoo, Illinois, and had edited the Millennial Star in Great Britain. He was mentioned by Charles Dickens in The Uncommercial Traveler in connection with his work in Church emigration.

As editor from 1880 to 1892 and again from 1899 to 1907, Charles W. Penrose was a tireless editorial defender of the Church. He fought over many topics, particularly polygamy, and was fond of referring to an opposing editor as "my friend, the enemy." Horace G. (Bud) Whitney, as business manager of the Deseret News from 1899 to 1920, increased circulation nearly 500 percent, doubled the number of pages, and left the News a substantial financial surplus.

Mark E. Petersen became editor of the Deseret News in 1946 after working as a reporter, news editor, and manager. Called to be an apostle in the Church in 1944, he handled both full-time jobs for several years. He wrote editorials for the Church News, a weekly supplement, until his death in January 1984.

In 1952 Elder Petersen brought the Deseret News into a newspaper agency arrangement with its competitor paper, the Salt Lake Tribune.

The Deseret News building, c. 1899, in the background, stood at that time on the corner of Main and South Temple Streets in Salt Lake City, the site of the former Hotel Utah. The Brigham Young Monument in the foreground was designed by Cyrus E. Dallin and dedicated in a five-day celebration, July 20-24, 1897, the fiftieth anniversary of the pioneers' arrival in Salt Lake Valley.

Under the Federal Newspaper Preservation Act, the two newspapers combined their printing, circulation, and advertising departments but remained independent in editorial and news areas. The Tribune was the morning newspaper, and the News the evening one. Since the partial merger, both papers have shown an annual profit, and circulation at the News was increasing as it entered the 1990s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Alter, J. Ceecil. Early Utah Journalism. Salt Lake City, 1938.
Ashton, Wendell J. Voice in the West: Biography of a Pioneer Newspaper. New York, 1950.

WENDELL J. ASHTON

DEUTERONOMY

Deuteronomy (Greek for “duplication of the law”) is the fifth book of the Old Testament. Latter-day Saints have specific interests in this work. It distinctively teaches that those who inherit a PROMISED LAND do so on condition that they remain faithful to the Lord, pure in heart, generous to the poor, and devoted to God’s Law. In a formula that appears several times, the people are promised that they will receive blessings for obedience to God and punishment for disobedience (Deut. 27–30). Book of Mormon prophets taught similar doctrines, and they also indicated that such principles were divinely given long before Moses. Latter-day scriptures are replete with deuteronomistic teachings. Significantly, Jesus Christ quoted Deuteronomy regularly.

JESUS’ USE OF DEUTERONOMY. When Satan tempted Jesus, saying that if he were the Son of God he would turn stones to bread, leap from the temple’s pinnacle to test God’s care, and gain worldly kingdoms and glory by worshiping Satan, the Savior responded with quotations from Deuteronomy (Matt. 4:1–10; cf. Deut. 8:3; 6:16, 13). He cited Deuteronomy regarding the law of witnesses and levirate marriage (John 8:17; Luke 20:28; cf. Deut. 19:15; 25:5). Twice he quoted the law on loving God (Deut. 6:4–5), calling it “the first and great commandment” (Matt. 22:35–38; cf. Luke 10:25–27). Many of Jesus’ teachings admonishing good and warning against evil reiterate the deuteronomistic principle of human action and divine response. Indeed, the Book of Mormon teaches that the premortal Jesus gave the law of Moses (3 Ne. 11:14; 12:17–18; 15:4–6).

DEUTERONOMIC TEACHINGS IN THE BOOK OF MORMON. The Jerusalem emigrants who became a BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLE retained a copy of the five books of Moses on plates of brass (1 Ne. 4:38; 5:11–16). They were taught the law of Moses and were promised security and happiness if they obeyed it (e.g., 2 Ne. 1:16–20). Retention of their promised land depended upon continued obedience (e.g., 1 Ne. 2:20–23; 4:14; 7:13; 14:1–2; cf. Deut. 18:9–13). Just as deuteronomistic teachings were a stimulus for righteous commitment in King Josiah’s Jerusalem (2 Kgs. 23:2–8), so were they in the Book of Mormon (e.g., 1 Ne. 17:33–38; 2 Ne. 5:10; Omni 1:2; Mosiah 1:1–7; Alma 8:17). Certain summary statements in the Book of Mormon may also reflect deuteronomistic law (e.g., Alma 58:40; Hel. 3:20; 6:34; 15:5; 3 Ne. 25:4). Further, the prophecy of God’s raising up a prophet in Deuteronomy 18:15–19 is declared by the Book of Mormon to be fulfilled in Jesus Christ (1 Ne. 22:20; 3 Ne. 20:23; cf. John 6:14; Acts 3:22; 7:37).

Book of Mormon writers observed that the prophet ALMA<sub>2</sub> may have been taken up by God as Moses was, reflecting a possible variant in their copy of Deuteronomy 34:5–6: “The scriptures saith the Lord took Moses unto himself” (Alma 45:19).

The book of Ether describes a people from the time of “the great tower” of Babel (Ether 1:3), with whom God covenanted that they could escape the fate of the wicked and be blessed in their land of promise if they would serve him in righteousness. This account from an epoch long before Moses is nevertheless in harmony with deuteronomistic principles (Ether 2:6–10; 7:23; 9:20; 10:28; 11:6). When their descendants became wicked, they destroyed each other in successive wars (Ether 11:13, 20–21; 15:19).

DEUTERONOMIC IDEAS IN OTHER LDS SCRIPTURES. As recorded in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, Adam and Eve were taught about choices and consequences in the beginning (Moses 3:15–17; 4:8–9, 22–25, 28). Generations of their descendants taught others righteousness and warned them about wickedness (Moses 6:22–23; 7:10, 15, 17–18). Noah taught the same doctrines; and the deluge followed rejection of his divine counsel (Moses 8:16–20).

The Doctrine and Covenants contains scores

Under the Federal Newspaper Preservation Act, the two newspapers combined their printing, circulation, and advertising departments but remained independent in editorial and news areas. The Tribune was the morning newspaper, and the News the evening one. Since the partial merger, both papers have shown an annual profit, and circulation at the News was increasing as it entered the 1990s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Alter, J. Ceecil. Early Utah Journalism. Salt Lake City, 1938.
Ashton, Wendell J. Voice in the West: Biography of a Pioneer Newspaper. New York, 1950.

WENDELL J. ASHTON

DEUTERONOMY

Deuteronomy (Greek for “duplication of the law”) is the fifth book of the Old Testament. Latter-day Saints have specific interests in this work. It distinctively teaches that those who inherit a PROMISED LAND do so on condition that they remain faithful to the Lord, pure in heart, generous to the poor, and devoted to God’s Law. In a formula that appears several times, the people are promised that they will receive blessings for obedience to God and punishment for disobedience (Deut. 27–30). Book of Mormon prophets taught similar doctrines, and they also indicated that such principles were divinely given long before Moses. Latter-day scriptures are replete with deuteronomistic teachings. Significantly, Jesus Christ quoted Deuteronomy regularly.

JESUS’ USE OF DEUTERONOMY. When Satan tempted Jesus, saying that if he were the Son of God he would turn stones to bread, leap from the temple’s pinnacle to test God’s care, and gain worldly kingdoms and glory by worshiping Satan, the Savior responded with quotations from Deuteronomy (Matt. 4:1–10; cf. Deut. 8:3; 6:16, 13). He cited Deuteronomy regarding the law of witnesses and levirate marriage (John 8:17; Luke 20:28; cf. Deut. 19:15; 25:5). Twice he quoted the law on loving God (Deut. 6:4–5), calling it “the first and great commandment” (Matt. 22:35–38; cf. Luke 10:25–27). Many of Jesus’ teachings admonishing good and warning against evil reiterate the deuteronomistic principle of human action and divine response. Indeed, the Book of Mormon teaches that the premortal Jesus gave the law of Moses (3 Ne. 11:14; 12:17–18; 15:4–6).

DEUTERONOMIC TEACHINGS IN THE BOOK OF MORMON. The Jerusalem emigrants who became a BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLE retained a copy of the five books of Moses on plates of brass (1 Ne. 4:38; 5:11–16). They were taught the law of Moses and were promised security and happiness if they obeyed it (e.g., 2 Ne. 1:16–20). Retention of their promised land depended upon continued obedience (e.g., 1 Ne. 2:20–23; 4:14; 7:13; 14:1–2; cf. Deut. 18:9–13). Just as deuteronomistic teachings were a stimulus for righteous commitment in King Josiah’s Jerusalem (2 Kgs. 23:2–8), so were they in the Book of Mormon (e.g., 1 Ne. 17:33–38; 2 Ne. 5:10; Omni 1:2; Mosiah 1:1–7; Alma 8:17). Certain summary statements in the Book of Mormon may also reflect deuteronomistic law (e.g., Alma 58:40; Hel. 3:20; 6:34; 15:5; 3 Ne. 25:4). Further, the prophecy of God’s raising up a prophet in Deuteronomy 18:15–19 is declared by the Book of Mormon to be fulfilled in Jesus Christ (1 Ne. 22:20; 3 Ne. 20:23; cf. John 6:14; Acts 3:22; 7:37).

Book of Mormon writers observed that the prophet ALMA<sub>2</sub> may have been taken up by God as Moses was, reflecting a possible variant in their copy of Deuteronomy 34:5–6: “The scriptures saith the Lord took Moses unto himself” (Alma 45:19).

The book of Ether describes a people from the time of “the great tower” of Babel (Ether 1:3), with whom God covenanted that they could escape the fate of the wicked and be blessed in their land of promise if they would serve him in righteousness. This account from an epoch long before Moses is nevertheless in harmony with deuteronomistic principles (Ether 2:6–10; 7:23; 9:20; 10:28; 11:6). When their descendants became wicked, they destroyed each other in successive wars (Ether 11:13, 20–21; 15:19).

DEUTERONOMIC IDEAS IN OTHER LDS SCRIPTURES. As recorded in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, Adam and Eve were taught about choices and consequences in the beginning (Moses 3:15–17; 4:8–9, 22–25, 28). Generations of their descendants taught others righteousness and warned them about wickedness (Moses 6:22–23; 7:10, 15, 17–18). Noah taught the same doctrines; and the deluge followed rejection of his divine counsel (Moses 8:16–20).

The Doctrine and Covenants contains scores of passages about keeping the commandments of God (e.g., D&C 5:22; 6:6, 9, 37; 8:5; 11:6, 9, 18, 20). Those who keep them are promised blessings (e.g., D&C 14:7; 63:23; 76:52–55; 89:18–21; 93:19–20). Violators, of course, will suffer negative consequences (e.g., D&C 10:56; 18:46; 56:2–3). Thus, so-called deuteronomic precepts persist as divinely ordained principles.

[See also Covenants in Biblical Times; Law of Moses; Obedience; Old Testament.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh. "How to Get Rich." CWHN, Vol. 9, pp. 178–201.

Rasmussen, Ellis T. "The Unchanging Gospel of Two Testaments." Ensign 3 (Oct. 1973):34–35.

Sperry, Sidney B. The Spirit of the Old Testament. 2nd ed., chaps. 5, 12, 13. Salt Lake City, 1970.

ELLIS T. RASMUSSEN

DEVILS

In LDS discourse, the term "devil" denotes anyone who promotes the cause of EVIL, but it is especially applied to those unembodied spirits who rebelled against God in the PREMORTAL LIFE and were cast down from HEAVEN to this earth. The devil, who leads them, is also known by the personal names of Lucifer in the premortal existence and Satan since being cast down.

The name Lucifer means "light bearer" in Latin and is a translation of the Hebrew Heyl ben Shakh, which means "herald son of dawn" or "morning star." In the PREMORTAL LIFE, Lucifer was an ANGEL having authority in the presence of God. He played a prominent role in the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN. After the Father in Heaven offered the plan of righteousness to help his children become as he is, Lucifer countered with an alternative plan.

The Father's plan was to save and exalt all of his obedient children. To be obedient, they must keep his commandments and do good. In the Father's plan, it was foreknown that many would reject exaltation and therefore would receive lesser glories.

Lucifer's plan proposed to "save" all of the Father's children by forcing each to obey the Father's law in all things. Lucifer desired that he be rewarded for this great feat of saving everyone by having the Father's honor and glory given to him personally. Because mortals can be saved only in their own freely chosen repentance, Lucifer's proposal was rejected. In the ensuing WAR IN HEAVEN, he gained the allegiance of a third of the Father's spirit children. Lucifer and his followers were then cast out of heaven to earth, where he became Satan and they all became devils (Moses 4:1–3; D&C 29:36–37; 76:25–38).

The name Satan comes from a Hebrew root meaning "to oppose, be adverse," hence "to attack or to accuse" (see Rev. 12:10). On this earth the role of Satan and his fellow devils is to attack the working of righteousness and to destroy it wherever possible (Moses 4:4; D&C 10:20–23; 93:39).

Righteousness is the condition or action of accomplishing the greatest possible happiness for all beings affected. The attainment of full righteousness is possible only with the help of an omniscient and omnipotent being. This full righteousness is the special order of the celestial kingdom where the Father dwells. When the Father's will is done and his order is in place, every person and every thing attains, or is attaining, the potential he, she, or it has for development and happiness. This righteousness is the good of "good and evil." It is to be contrasted with those human desires that are contrary to the Father's order and will.

A good (righteous) person is an agentive being who chooses and accomplishes only righteousness. No mortal is intrinsically and perfectly good, nor can a mortal alone rise to that standard (Matt. 19:17). But mortals can do righteous acts and become righteous through the salvation provided by Jesus Christ. Christ is the fountain of all righteousness (Ether 12:28). The children of God can achieve the Father's order of righteousness through Christ if they choose that order in explicit rejection of evil.

Evil is any order of existence that is not righteous. A state of affairs, an act, or a person not in the order of righteousness is thus evil. Letting one's neighbor languish in abject poverty while one has plenty, or stealing, or desiring harm for another person are all evils. Satan promotes evil everywhere he can, to thwart the righteousness of God (see D&C 10:27). Thus, Satan tempts people to do evil instead of the Father's will. Satan himself is not necessary to evil, but he hastens and abets evil wherever he can.

Satan's first targets on earth were Adam and Eve in the GARDEN OF EDEN. Knowing that the Father had commanded Adam and Eve not to parof passages about keeping the commandments of God (e.g., D&C 5:22; 6:6, 9, 37; 8:5; 11:6, 9, 18, 20). Those who keep them are promised blessings (e.g., D&C 14:7; 63:23; 76:52–55; 89:18–21; 93:19–20). Violators, of course, will suffer negative consequences (e.g., D&C 10:56; 18:46; 56:2–3). Thus, so-called deuteronomic precepts persist as divinely ordained principles.

[See also Covenants in Biblical Times; Law of Moses; Obedience; Old Testament.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh. "How to Get Rich." CWHN, Vol. 9, pp. 178–201.

Rasmussen, Ellis T. "The Unchanging Gospel of Two Testaments." Ensign 3 (Oct. 1973):34–35.

Sperry, Sidney B. The Spirit of the Old Testament. 2nd ed., chaps. 5, 12, 13. Salt Lake City, 1970.

ELLIS T. RASMUSSEN

DEVILS

In LDS discourse, the term "devil" denotes anyone who promotes the cause of EVIL, but it is especially applied to those unembodied spirits who rebelled against God in the PREMORTAL LIFE and were cast down from HEAVEN to this earth. The devil, who leads them, is also known by the personal names of Lucifer in the premortal existence and Satan since being cast down.

The name Lucifer means "light bearer" in Latin and is a translation of the Hebrew Heyl ben Shakh, which means "herald son of dawn" or "morning star." In the PREMORTAL LIFE, Lucifer was an ANGEL having authority in the presence of God. He played a prominent role in the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN. After the Father in Heaven offered the plan of righteousness to help his children become as he is, Lucifer countered with an alternative plan.

The Father's plan was to save and exalt all of his obedient children. To be obedient, they must keep his commandments and do good. In the Father's plan, it was foreknown that many would reject exaltation and therefore would receive lesser glories.

Lucifer's plan proposed to "save" all of the Father's children by forcing each to obey the Father's law in all things. Lucifer desired that he be rewarded for this great feat of saving everyone by having the Father's honor and glory given to him personally. Because mortals can be saved only in their own freely chosen repentance, Lucifer's proposal was rejected. In the ensuing WAR IN HEAVEN, he gained the allegiance of a third of the Father's spirit children. Lucifer and his followers were then cast out of heaven to earth, where he became Satan and they all became devils (Moses 4:1–3; D&C 29:36–37; 76:25–38).

The name Satan comes from a Hebrew root meaning "to oppose, be adverse," hence "to attack or to accuse" (see Rev. 12:10). On this earth the role of Satan and his fellow devils is to attack the working of righteousness and to destroy it wherever possible (Moses 4:4; D&C 10:20–23; 93:39).

Righteousness is the condition or action of accomplishing the greatest possible happiness for all beings affected. The attainment of full righteousness is possible only with the help of an omniscient and omnipotent being. This full righteousness is the special order of the celestial kingdom where the Father dwells. When the Father's will is done and his order is in place, every person and every thing attains, or is attaining, the potential he, she, or it has for development and happiness. This righteousness is the good of "good and evil." It is to be contrasted with those human desires that are contrary to the Father's order and will.

A good (righteous) person is an agentive being who chooses and accomplishes only righteousness. No mortal is intrinsically and perfectly good, nor can a mortal alone rise to that standard (Matt. 19:17). But mortals can do righteous acts and become righteous through the salvation provided by Jesus Christ. Christ is the fountain of all righteousness (Ether 12:28). The children of God can achieve the Father's order of righteousness through Christ if they choose that order in explicit rejection of evil.

Evil is any order of existence that is not righteous. A state of affairs, an act, or a person not in the order of righteousness is thus evil. Letting one's neighbor languish in abject poverty while one has plenty, or stealing, or desiring harm for another person are all evils. Satan promotes evil everywhere he can, to thwart the righteousness of God (see D&C 10:27). Thus, Satan tempts people to do evil instead of the Father's will. Satan himself is not necessary to evil, but he hastens and abets evil wherever he can.

Satan's first targets on earth were Adam and Eve in the GARDEN OF EDEN. Knowing that the Father had commanded Adam and Eve not to partake of the forbidden fruit on penalty of death, Satan sought to destroy the Father's work by enticing Adam and Eve to partake of it anyway. Satan's success marked the beginning of the world (as distinct from the creation of the earth), of Satan's kingdom on this earth (see JST, Matt. 1:55).

By obeying Satan, Adam and Eve opened the way for him to have partial dominion over them, over the earth, and over all of their children (see FALL OF ADAM). Examples of his partial dominion over the earth granted by the Father are his ability to possess the bodies of animals (Matt. 8:28–32) and to use water to destroy people (D&C 61:14–19). Satan gained the power to tempt those who are accountable to do evil (D&C 29:39), to communicate with individuals to teach them things (usually but not always lies), to possess their bodies, to foster illness and disease, and to cause mortal death. He promotes sin, the doing of evil, which brings SPIRITUAL DEATH to the sinner and misery to all those affected. In each of these opportunities, Satan's power is limited: He can do only what he has specific permission from God to do (D&C 121:4; Luke 8:30–33). His power may be taken away by individuals as they hearken to God and as they correctly use the holy priesthood to limit his operations (D&C 50:13–35).

What Satan did not realize in Eden was that what he did in attempting to destroy the Father's work was actually the very thing needed to fulfill the Father's plan (Moses 4:6). People could not demonstrate their love of God and their willingness to do the work of righteousness sufficiently to qualify them for exaltation unless they were subject to, and able to overcome, evil and devil adversaries, such as Satan and his hosts (2 Ne. 2:11–22).

On earth Satan is thus the father of deception, lies, and sin—of all evils—for he promotes them with vigor. He may appear as a counterfeit angel of light or as the prince of darkness, but his usual manifestations to mortals come as either evil revelation to one's heart and mind or indirectly through other persons. His mission is to tempt everyone to choose evil so that each accountable human being's choices can serve as an adequate basis for a final judgment.

This earth life is a mortal probation for all those who have the opportunity to accept and live by the new and everlasting covenant while in the mortal flesh. Those who do not have a full opportunity in this earth life will have their probation extended through the SPIRIT WORLD existence that follows it. By the time of RESURRECTION, each of the Father's children will have made a final choice between good and evil, and each will be rewarded with the good or the evil chosen during the probation (Alma 41:10–15).

When Satan tempts a person to do evil, there are limits to what Satan can accomplish. He can put before a person any kind of evil opportunity, but that evil is enticing only if the person tempted already desires that thing. When people are tempted, it is actually by their own lusts (James 1:12–15).

Satan has power on earth only as individual persons give it to him by succumbing to his TEMPTATIONS (TPJS, p. 187). The agency of human beings is to choose righteousness through the Holy Spirit of God or to choose selfishness through the flesh by succumbing to Satan's temptations (2 Ne. 2:26–29). (Human flesh is not evil, but Satan may tempt humans through their flesh.) Individuals who repent in this life are nevertheless tempted by Satan until their death; then Satan has no power over them ever again. Those who die unrepentant are still in Satan's power in the SPIRIT PRISON (Alma 34:34–35). All except the SONS OF PERDITION will eventually accept Christ and obey him, and thereby escape the dominion of Satan (D&C 76:110). Thus is the Father's plan of agency fulfilled.

Satan's three temptations of the Savior may be seen as paradigmatic of all human temptation (see David O. McKay, Gospel Ideals, p. 154, Salt Lake City, 1953). The temptation to create bread and eat it when he should not represents the human temptation of the flesh, to sate the senses unrighteously. The temptation to cast himself down from the temple and to be saved by angels when he should not represents the human temptation of social acclaim. The temptation to receive the kingdoms of this world when he should not represents the temptation to have unrighteous dominion or power over others. The Savior did not yield to any of these temptations because his heart was pure and he knew that the way of righteousness lay only in doing the Father's will in all things.

All accountable mortals are tempted, even as our Savior was tempted. As mortals succumb, Satan gains power and earth life becomes a hell. Every person may resist temptation by choosing good over evil. But misinformation, evil cultural traditions (D&C 93:39), despair, and desperate human need all make the choosing of good difficult, even if the person does not particularly desire a given evil (cf. 2 Ne. 28 for an extensive description of the ploys of Satan).

Through Jesus Christ and the partaking of his new and everlasting covenant, mortals have the opportunity to gain power to choose good over evil unerringly and always. As they do so, they are able to establish the righteousness of God and thus heaven on earth (Moses 7:18; D&C 50:34–35; see also ZION).

Human beings resist Satan and evil by controlling their desires—that is, (1) by not desiring the evil that Satan proffers; (2) by gaining more knowledge so that they will be able to see that Satan’s temptations are not what they really want; and (3) by having their hearts purified by Jesus Christ so that they will no longer desire any evil but desire instead to do the Father’s will in all things (Moro. 7:48; cf. the Savior’s answers in Matt. 4:1–10).

The great help in resisting temptation is the HOLY SPIRIT. It is Satan’s business to dwell in and with all individuals who do not have the Holy Spirit with them, sometimes even gaining total possession of a person’s body, so that he or she loses agency for a time. Partial possession may also occur, for whenever a human being becomes angry, he or she is at least partially possessed by Satan (James 1:20).

In his role as the destroyer, Satan can cause illness and death, but only with permission from God. He cannot take people before their time unless they disobey God and thus forfeit their mission (Job 1:6–12).

As the father of lies, Satan has a disinformation campaign. He spreads false notions about himself, about God, about people, about salvation—all for the purpose of defeating acts of faith in Jesus Christ. Mortals believe his lies because the lies are pleasing to the carnal mind and because they promote or support the selfish desires of the individual who believes them. About himself, Satan tells people that there is no devil, that such an idea is wild imagination (2 Ne. 28:22). About God, Satan desires human beings to believe either that he does not exist or that he is some distant, unknowable, or forbidding being. He tells people that they are to conquer in this world according to their strength and that whatever anyone does is no crime (Alma 30:17). Favorite lies about salvation are either that it comes to everyone in spite of anything one does (Alma 21:6) or that it is reserved only for a special few insiders (Alma 31:17). These erroneous creeds of the fathers, fastened upon their children in the form of false creeds, are called in the scriptures “the chains of hell” (Alma 12:11; D&C 123:7–8).

SECRET COMBINATIONS are another devilish device for spreading misery and obstructing the cause of righteousness (Ether 8:16–26; Hel. 6:16–32). Satan tempts selfish individuals to use others to their own oppressive advantage. Secrecy is essential to prevent retaliation by the victims and just execution of the laws against such combinations. Secret combinations involve personal, economic, educational, political, or military power that controls or enslaves some persons for the pleasure and profit of others.

Satan also has influence over the spirits of wicked persons who have passed from mortality by death and who inhabit the spirit prison (sometimes called Hades). The inhabitants of this prison do not yet suffer cleansing pain, which will later come, but continue to be subject to Satan’s lies and temptations (Alma 40–41). They also have the opportunity to hear the servants of Christ (D&C 138:28–37), and if they did not have the opportunity on earth, they now may repent unto exaltation. If they did have the opportunity on earth but did not use it, the spirit prison opportunity again allows them to reject Satan and his lies and temptations, but with the reward of a lesser glory (D&C 76:71–79).

During the MILLENNIUM, Satan will be bound (Rev. 20:2). He will still be on earth, attempting to tempt every person, as he has since the fall of Adam, but he will be bound because no one will hearken to his temptations (1 Ne. 22:26).

Toward the end of the Millennium, Satan will be loosed (D&C 88:110–15) because people will again hearken to him. But he will be vanquished and sent from this earth to outer darkness, where he and his followers, both spirits and resurrected sons of perdition (Satan is Perdition, “the lost one”), will dwell in the misery and darkness of selfishness and isolation forever.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For a more complete treatment of the concept of the devil from an LDS point of view, see LaMar E. Garrard, “A Study of the Problem of a Personal Devil and Its Relationship to Latter-day Saint Beliefs” (Master’s thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955). Especially valuable is his compilation of quotations from early General Authorities of the LDS Church concerning the topic. Jeffrey Burton Russell’s four companion works The Devil: Perceptions of Evil from Antiquity to Primitive Christianity (Ithaca, N.Y., 1977), Satan: The Early Christian Tradition (Ithaca, N.Y., 1981), Lucifer: The Devil in the Middle Ages (Ithaca, N.Y., 1984), and Mephistopheles: The Devil in the Modern World (Ithaca, N.Y., 1986) constitute a comprehensive history of the concept of the devil traced through literature, art, and philosophy from ancient times to the modern day. The presentation is a thorough and scholarly treatment but does not derive from an LDS frame of thought.

CHAUNCEY C. RIDDLE

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Joseph SMITH undertook his first diplomatic mission for the Church when he journeyed to Washington, D.C., in 1839 and met with President Martin Van Buren to seek federal intervention on behalf of Church members who had lost their lives or property during the Missouri persecutions. Since then, the diplomatic contacts of the Church with the governments of the world have been aimed mostly at securing legal recognition for the Church and freedom for its members to preach the gospel to others, meet together for religious worship, and live according to their religious precepts.

For a century and a half the Church had no formal diplomatic office; mission presidents or General Authorities on special assignment were responsible for creating a favorable climate for the Church's missionary effort and for resolving problems with host governments. In 1842, Lorenzo SNOW, an apostle, sought to establish a favorable impression of Latter-day Saints by presenting a handsome bound copy of the first British edition of the Book of Mormon to Queen Victoria and Albert, the Prince Consort. As the Church began practicing plural marriage, the task of maintaining a favorable public image became more difficult. That effort was not helped by a note sent by the U.S. government in 1887 to the governments of Great Britain and Scandinavia asking them to curtail immigration of Latter-day Saints to the United States—a move intended to stem the growth of polygamy. Since the Scandinavian countries did little and the note was ridiculed by the British press, the Church found it unnecessary to take any diplomatic initiative.

Fifty years later, a statute adopted by the legislature of Tonga barring entry of LDS missionaries was the subject of a diplomatic protest by the Church to the British government. The matter landed on the desk of Winston Churchill, who was then colonial secretary. He took no action because the British government could not veto a Tongan statute, and the Foreign Office informed him that the U.S. government would not protest if the statute did not apply retroactively to missionaries in the country but only to those subsequently applying for entry. The Church took no further action, since the mission president was able to convince the Tongan legislature to repeal the measure.

The rather limited extent of the Church's diplomatic relations with the governments of northern Europe, where the Church's missionary effort was concentrated in the nineteenth century, gave way in the twentieth to more extensive contacts as the Church became more ambitious in the reach of its missionary program. In many countries the right to proselytize was limited not only by statute but also by informal practice and tradition, stemming in part from the influence of an established state church with a special legal status. Moreover, the spread of communism had raised ideological barriers to missionary work in general. Still the Church maintained its policy of leaving the conduct of any needed diplomatic relations in the hands of mission presidents or General Authorities either permanently or temporarily in the country. That policy changed after 1975 when Spencer W. KIMBALL became President of the Church. He was determined to increase the Church's missionary effort, including gaining legal recognition in the countries where such recognition had been denied either as a matter of government policy or through the opposition of the established state church. The decision resulted in a policy that required organizational changes at Church headquarters. Such changes had been discussed during the tenure of President Harold B. LEE, but no steps had been taken before his death. N. Eldon Tanner, who served as first counselor to both President Lee and President Kimball, reviewed with President Kimball those previous discussions. They decided to appoint a special representative responsible to the First Presidency who would negotiate with governments outside the United States for removal of restrictive visa policies and for legal recognition of the Church where it had been denied. The special representative would also serve as liaison between the Church and U.S. embassies in foreign countries.

President Kimball appointed David M. Kennedy as the special representative of the First

Devil: Perceptions of Evil from Antiquity to Primitive Christianity (Ithaca, N.Y., 1977), Satan: The Early Christian Tradition (Ithaca, N.Y., 1981), Lucifer: The Devil in the Middle Ages (Ithaca, N.Y., 1984), and Mephistopheles: The Devil in the Modern World (Ithaca, N.Y., 1986) constitute a comprehensive history of the concept of the devil traced through literature, art, and philosophy from ancient times to the modern day. The presentation is a thorough and scholarly treatment but does not derive from an LDS frame of thought.

CHAUNCEY C. RIDDLE

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Joseph SMITH undertook his first diplomatic mission for the Church when he journeyed to Washington, D.C., in 1839 and met with President Martin Van Buren to seek federal intervention on behalf of Church members who had lost their lives or property during the Missouri persecutions. Since then, the diplomatic contacts of the Church with the governments of the world have been aimed mostly at securing legal recognition for the Church and freedom for its members to preach the gospel to others, meet together for religious worship, and live according to their religious precepts.

For a century and a half the Church had no formal diplomatic office; mission presidents or General Authorities on special assignment were responsible for creating a favorable climate for the Church's missionary effort and for resolving problems with host governments. In 1842, Lorenzo SNOW, an apostle, sought to establish a favorable impression of Latter-day Saints by presenting a handsome bound copy of the first British edition of the Book of Mormon to Queen Victoria and Albert, the Prince Consort. As the Church began practicing plural marriage, the task of maintaining a favorable public image became more difficult. That effort was not helped by a note sent by the U.S. government in 1887 to the governments of Great Britain and Scandinavia asking them to curtail immigration of Latter-day Saints to the United States—a move intended to stem the growth of polygamy. Since the Scandinavian countries did little and the note was ridiculed by the British press, the Church found it unnecessary to take any diplomatic initiative.

Fifty years later, a statute adopted by the legislature of Tonga barring entry of LDS missionaries was the subject of a diplomatic protest by the Church to the British government. The matter landed on the desk of Winston Churchill, who was then colonial secretary. He took no action because the British government could not veto a Tongan statute, and the Foreign Office informed him that the U.S. government would not protest if the statute did not apply retroactively to missionaries in the country but only to those subsequently applying for entry. The Church took no further action, since the mission president was able to convince the Tongan legislature to repeal the measure.

The rather limited extent of the Church's diplomatic relations with the governments of northern Europe, where the Church's missionary effort was concentrated in the nineteenth century, gave way in the twentieth to more extensive contacts as the Church became more ambitious in the reach of its missionary program. In many countries the right to proselytize was limited not only by statute but also by informal practice and tradition, stemming in part from the influence of an established state church with a special legal status. Moreover, the spread of communism had raised ideological barriers to missionary work in general. Still the Church maintained its policy of leaving the conduct of any needed diplomatic relations in the hands of mission presidents or General Authorities either permanently or temporarily in the country. That policy changed after 1975 when Spencer W. KIMBALL became President of the Church. He was determined to increase the Church's missionary effort, including gaining legal recognition in the countries where such recognition had been denied either as a matter of government policy or through the opposition of the established state church. The decision resulted in a policy that required organizational changes at Church headquarters. Such changes had been discussed during the tenure of President Harold B. LEE, but no steps had been taken before his death. N. Eldon Tanner, who served as first counselor to both President Lee and President Kimball, reviewed with President Kimball those previous discussions. They decided to appoint a special representative responsible to the First Presidency who would negotiate with governments outside the United States for removal of restrictive visa policies and for legal recognition of the Church where it had been denied. The special representative would also serve as liaison between the Church and U.S. embassies in foreign countries.

President Kimball appointed David M. Kennedy as the special representative of the First Presidency. Kennedy had extensive experience working with international governments and leaders as an international banker, as U.S. secretary of the treasury under U.S. President Richard M. Nixon, as ambassador-at-large, and as ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Since the Church wanted to gain legal recognition as rapidly as possible, the First Presidency and its special representative examined countries one by one, exploring the possibilities each offered. Barriers existed in each country. Some had statutes limiting freedom of religion. There were long-standing religious and cultural barriers in others. In some, legal recognition was possible, but statutes severely limited the right to proselytize. When President Kimball decided that legal recognition should be the first goal, he sent Kennedy to Greece, where recognition had long been withheld despite the vigorous efforts of Church leaders. Kennedy learned from his contacts in the Greek government and the U.S. embassy there that the key to recognition as "a house of prayer" required the approval of the Archbishop of Athens and All Greece, His Beatitude Seraphim. In a crucial interview, Kennedy pointed out that the Greek Orthodox Church enjoyed full freedom of religion in the United States, that the Greek government had honored President David O. MCKAY for the aid the Church had sent to Greece after the devastating earthquake of 1953, and that the Church was fully recognized by most of the other countries of Western Europe. Greece eventually gave legal recognition to the Church. Other countries where recognition would be sought and eventually granted included Yugoslavia, Portugal, and Poland.

When it became known that the Church was seeking recognition from communist countries, representatives of the media began asking how such action could be reconciled with the Church's ideological opposition to communism. Kennedy responded to those queries by referring to the Church's belief in "being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the law" (A of F 12). The essential reality, Kennedy emphasized, is that the Church could enter, and prosper in, any country that would "permit us to offer our sacraments, . . . permit us in our homes to have our family organization and live within our religious patterns" (Hickman, p. 340). These minimal freedoms were all Latter-day Saints needed to live consistently with their general beliefs. Kennedy also drew a distinction between the economic and political systems that Church members preferred as private citizens and those restrictions on individual freedoms that would make it impossible for the Church to exist as an institution or prevent its members from following its fundamental precepts. Through Kennedy, the Church reemphasized that its mission was to preach the restored gospel to all the world and to help its members' lives to be marked by moral and spiritual growth—not to import the American political and economic systems.

In every country visited, the Church's first goal was to gain recognition that included the right to open a mission, entry rights for missionaries, the right to proselytize openly, and the right to hold public worship meetings. The most notable success in reaching these goals was achieved in Portugal, where the 1974 revolution had resulted in the adoption of a statute granting freedom of religion. In other countries, notably Poland, the Church was successful in gaining legal recognition permitting it to own property, to hold religious meetings, and to send Church representatives to the country, but the right to proselytize was refused. Despite that limitation, Church leaders believed that legal recognition was a significant step forward and that the Polish government's offer should be accepted even though it did not contain the right to proselytize. The Church was granted legal recognition in Yugoslavia on essentially the same terms. In each country where the Church undertook negotiations, Kennedy, as special representative of the First Presidency, emphasized that the Church was recognized in many countries of the world and that in the United States members held important positions in government, education, and business. He also stressed that Church members were recognized in the United States for their honesty, reliability, and work ethic.

In recent years there have occurred several changes that have improved the diplomatic relations of the Church. Changes in Eastern Europe have made it easier for the Church to gain recognition than it was in 1975, and restrictions on proselytizing are also being removed. The revelation announced by President Kimball in 1978 granting the priesthood to every worthy male member of the Church has been followed by the establishment of more missions in Africa (see AFRICA, THE CHURCH IN; DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: OFFICIAL DECLARATION-2). Because of these changes, the First Presidency decided that the task assigned to its special representative had been achieved; hence, in 1990, Kennedy was released from that calling, and no replacement was named. The responsibilities of the special representative were assumed by the AREA presidencies and mission presidents.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hickman, Martin B. David Matthew Kennedy: Banker, Statesman, Churchman, pp. 334–65. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew E. Kimball. Spencer W. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Palmer, Spencer J., ed. The Expanding Church. Salt Lake City, 1978.

MARTIN B. HICKMAN

---

DISCERNMENT, GIFT OF

The gift of discernment consists of the spiritual quality or skill of being able to see or understand, especially that which is hidden or obscure. This ability is shared in a general way by all of God's children, but "discerning of spirits" is one of the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT that comes, under certain circumstances, specially from God (1 Cor. 12:10; D&C 46:23). The fuller gift of discerning in all spiritual matters—to know whether their occurrence is of God or not—is given by the Lord to "such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church" (D&C 46:27). To possess this gift is to receive divinely revealed understanding of opposing spirits—the spirit of God and the spirit of the DEVIL. Persons possessing such a gift also correctly perceive the right course of action (D&C 63:41).

Not only can the power of discernment distinguish good from evil (Moro. 7:12–18), the righteous from the wicked (D&C 101:95), and false spirits from divine (D&C 46:23), but its more sensitive operation can also make known even "the thoughts and intents of the heart" of other persons (Heb. 4:12; D&C 33:1). "The gift of discernment [embodies] the power to discriminate . . . between right and wrong . . . [and] arises largely out of an acute sensitivity to . . . spiritual impressions . . . to detect hidden evil, and more importantly to find the good that may be concealed. The highest type of discernment . . . uncovers [in others] . . . their better natures, the good inherent within them" (Richards, p. 371).

Every Latter-day Saint has spiritual leaders who, by virtue of their CALLINGS, are entitled to the gift of discernment to enable them to lead and counsel correctly. "The gift of discernment is essential to the leadership of the Church [of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints]. I never ordain a bishop or set apart a president of a stake without invoking upon him this divine blessing, that he may read the lives and hearts of his people and call forth the best within them. The gift and power of discernment . . . [are] essential equipment for every son and daughter of God. . . . The true gift of discernment is often premonitory. A sense of danger should be heeded to be of value" (Richards, p. 371).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Richards, Stephen L. "The Gifts of the Spirit." IE 53 [May 1950]:371.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding, ed. TPJS, pp. 202–215. Salt Lake City, 1938.

LEON R. HARTSHORN

---

DISCIPLESHIP

Like many other Christians, Latter-day Saints believe that only the transformational discipleship of those who believe in and follow Jesus Christ leads to a fulness of joy and peace in this life and ETERNAL LIFE in the world to come. Hence, true disciples are those who make the resurrected, revealing Christ the center of their lives, as did the faithful referred to in the New Testament who sat at the feet, followed in the footsteps, mourned the death, and rejoiced in the resurrection of Christ.

"Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ"—the first principle of the GOSPEL as stated in the fourth ARTICLE OF FAITH—is the explicit foundation of discipleship. From this principle all other principles and ORDINANCES of the gospel derive their efficacy, power, and harmony.

Through his perfect earthly life and infinite atoning sacrifice, Jesus Christ became not only the model and mentor but also the Savior and Redeemer and mankind's advocate with the Father. The atonement, meaning "at-one-ment," empowered the plan whereby all men and women can eventually become like FATHER IN HEAVEN and MOTHER IN HEAVEN. Through the atonement, Christ took upon himself not only the original transgression of Adam and Eve but also the per-its special representative had been achieved; hence, in 1990, Kennedy was released from that calling, and no replacement was named. The responsibilities of the special representative were assumed by the AREA presidencies and mission presidents.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hickman, Martin B. David Matthew Kennedy: Banker, Statesman, Churchman, pp. 334–65. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew E. Kimball. Spencer W. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Palmer, Spencer J., ed. The Expanding Church. Salt Lake City, 1978.

MARTIN B. HICKMAN

---

DISCERNMENT, GIFT OF

The gift of discernment consists of the spiritual quality or skill of being able to see or understand, especially that which is hidden or obscure. This ability is shared in a general way by all of God's children, but "discerning of spirits" is one of the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT that comes, under certain circumstances, specially from God (1 Cor. 12:10; D&C 46:23). The fuller gift of discerning in all spiritual matters—to know whether their occurrence is of God or not—is given by the Lord to "such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church" (D&C 46:27). To possess this gift is to receive divinely revealed understanding of opposing spirits—the spirit of God and the spirit of the DEVIL. Persons possessing such a gift also correctly perceive the right course of action (D&C 63:41).

Not only can the power of discernment distinguish good from evil (Moro. 7:12–18), the righteous from the wicked (D&C 101:95), and false spirits from divine (D&C 46:23), but its more sensitive operation can also make known even "the thoughts and intents of the heart" of other persons (Heb. 4:12; D&C 33:1). "The gift of discernment [embodies] the power to discriminate . . . between right and wrong . . . [and] arises largely out of an acute sensitivity to . . . spiritual impressions . . . to detect hidden evil, and more importantly to find the good that may be concealed. The highest type of discernment . . . uncovers [in others] . . . their better natures, the good inherent within them" (Richards, p. 371).

Every Latter-day Saint has spiritual leaders who, by virtue of their CALLINGS, are entitled to the gift of discernment to enable them to lead and counsel correctly. "The gift of discernment is essential to the leadership of the Church [of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints]. I never ordain a bishop or set apart a president of a stake without invoking upon him this divine blessing, that he may read the lives and hearts of his people and call forth the best within them. The gift and power of discernment . . . [are] essential equipment for every son and daughter of God. . . . The true gift of discernment is often premonitory. A sense of danger should be heeded to be of value" (Richards, p. 371).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Richards, Stephen L. "The Gifts of the Spirit." IE 53 [May 1950]:371.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding, ed. TPJS, pp. 202–215. Salt Lake City, 1938.

LEON R. HARTSHORN

---

DISCIPLESHIP

Like many other Christians, Latter-day Saints believe that only the transformational discipleship of those who believe in and follow Jesus Christ leads to a fulness of joy and peace in this life and ETERNAL LIFE in the world to come. Hence, true disciples are those who make the resurrected, revealing Christ the center of their lives, as did the faithful referred to in the New Testament who sat at the feet, followed in the footsteps, mourned the death, and rejoiced in the resurrection of Christ.

"Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ"—the first principle of the GOSPEL as stated in the fourth ARTICLE OF FAITH—is the explicit foundation of discipleship. From this principle all other principles and ORDINANCES of the gospel derive their efficacy, power, and harmony.

Through his perfect earthly life and infinite atoning sacrifice, Jesus Christ became not only the model and mentor but also the Savior and Redeemer and mankind's advocate with the Father. The atonement, meaning "at-one-ment," empowered the plan whereby all men and women can eventually become like FATHER IN HEAVEN and MOTHER IN HEAVEN. Through the atonement, Christ took upon himself not only the original transgression of Adam and Eve but also the per-its special representative had been achieved; hence, in 1990, Kennedy was released from that calling, and no replacement was named. The responsibilities of the special representative were assumed by the AREA presidencies and mission presidents.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hickman, Martin B. David Matthew Kennedy: Banker, Statesman, Churchman, pp. 334–65. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew E. Kimball. Spencer W. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Palmer, Spencer J., ed. The Expanding Church. Salt Lake City, 1978.

MARTIN B. HICKMAN

---

DISCERNMENT, GIFT OF

The gift of discernment consists of the spiritual quality or skill of being able to see or understand, especially that which is hidden or obscure. This ability is shared in a general way by all of God's children, but "discerning of spirits" is one of the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT that comes, under certain circumstances, specially from God (1 Cor. 12:10; D&C 46:23). The fuller gift of discerning in all spiritual matters—to know whether their occurrence is of God or not—is given by the Lord to "such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church" (D&C 46:27). To possess this gift is to receive divinely revealed understanding of opposing spirits—the spirit of God and the spirit of the DEVIL. Persons possessing such a gift also correctly perceive the right course of action (D&C 63:41).

Not only can the power of discernment distinguish good from evil (Moro. 7:12–18), the righteous from the wicked (D&C 101:95), and false spirits from divine (D&C 46:23), but its more sensitive operation can also make known even "the thoughts and intents of the heart" of other persons (Heb. 4:12; D&C 33:1). "The gift of discernment [embodies] the power to discriminate . . . between right and wrong . . . [and] arises largely out of an acute sensitivity to . . . spiritual impressions . . . to detect hidden evil, and more importantly to find the good that may be concealed. The highest type of discernment . . . uncovers [in others] . . . their better natures, the good inherent within them" (Richards, p. 371).

Every Latter-day Saint has spiritual leaders who, by virtue of their CALLINGS, are entitled to the gift of discernment to enable them to lead and counsel correctly. "The gift of discernment is essential to the leadership of the Church [of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints]. I never ordain a bishop or set apart a president of a stake without invoking upon him this divine blessing, that he may read the lives and hearts of his people and call forth the best within them. The gift and power of discernment . . . [are] essential equipment for every son and daughter of God. . . . The true gift of discernment is often premonitory. A sense of danger should be heeded to be of value" (Richards, p. 371).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Richards, Stephen L. "The Gifts of the Spirit." IE 53 [May 1950]:371.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding, ed. TPJS, pp. 202–215. Salt Lake City, 1938.

LEON R. HARTSHORN

---

DISCIPLESHIP

Like many other Christians, Latter-day Saints believe that only the transformational discipleship of those who believe in and follow Jesus Christ leads to a fulness of joy and peace in this life and ETERNAL LIFE in the world to come. Hence, true disciples are those who make the resurrected, revealing Christ the center of their lives, as did the faithful referred to in the New Testament who sat at the feet, followed in the footsteps, mourned the death, and rejoiced in the resurrection of Christ.

"Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ"—the first principle of the GOSPEL as stated in the fourth ARTICLE OF FAITH—is the explicit foundation of discipleship. From this principle all other principles and ORDINANCES of the gospel derive their efficacy, power, and harmony.

Through his perfect earthly life and infinite atoning sacrifice, Jesus Christ became not only the model and mentor but also the Savior and Redeemer and mankind's advocate with the Father. The atonement, meaning "at-one-ment," empowered the plan whereby all men and women can eventually become like FATHER IN HEAVEN and MOTHER IN HEAVEN. Through the atonement, Christ took upon himself not only the original transgression of Adam and Eve but also the personal sins of mankind, as well as the consequences of weaknesses and mistakes—including those transmitted through the generations—that are manifested in the lives even of individuals trying to follow in his footsteps. As the savior of mankind, Jesus sets the example and lovingly makes the blessings of the atonement and personal guidance available to anyone who comes to him with a broken (teachable) heart and a contrite (repentant) spirit (3 Ne. 9:20–22; 12:19–20).

The commitment to become a disciple of Christ is an unconditional one of “heart, might, mind and strength” (D&C 4:2). It centers a person’s life on Christ, making Jesus the supreme law-giver, the frame of reference through which all else is viewed. Christ’s influence then begins to direct a person’s words, acts, and even thoughts, enabling that individual to become a partaker of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1:4), line upon line, precept upon precept.

While some believe that full discipleship comes about almost instantaneously, Latter-day Saints view the commitment at baptism as the beginning of a lifelong process that involves an upward spiral of learning, committing, and doing on increasingly higher planes. The heart of this process is learning to educate and obey the conscience, the repository of the Spirit of Christ given to every person (John 1:9; Moro. 7:16). As individuals obey the general commandments given through his appointed prophets, they become more attuned to hear the “still small voice” of the Holy Ghost (1 Ne. 17:45) that communicates specific personal direction and leads individuals to full discipleship.

The educated conscience, schooled by prayerful study of the scriptures, selfless service, and the making and keeping of God’s COVENANTS, becomes a growing source of intrinsic security and well-being, the basis for decision making, the essence of personal FREEDOM. “If ye continue in my word,” said Christ, “then are ye my disciples indeed; And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:31–32). As a person begins to see more as the Lord sees, to acquire more of the “mind of Christ” (1 Cor. 2:16), that individual is empowered to become independent of all other influences and to rise above childhood, genetic, and environmental tendencies.

The fruits that naturally grow out of this divine center are described as characteristics of disciples in both ancient and modern scripture. Disciples receive and obey the Lord’s commandments (D&C 41:5); they are “submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon [them]” (Mosiah 3:19); they remember the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted (D&C 52:40); they act as a light to others (3 Ne. 15:12), love others as Christ loves (John 13:34–35), and are willing to forsake all to follow him (Luke 14:33) and to lay down their lives for his sake (D&C 103:28).

The role of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the process of discipleship is, as PAUL observed of the former-day Church, “for the perfecting of the saints” (Eph. 4:12), and for helping members bridge the gap between theory and practice in becoming true disciples.

While one can go to church without being active in the gospel, for Latter-day Saints it is not possible to be a full disciple of Christ without being active in his Church. The Church teaches the GOSPEL, administers its ordinances, and provides opportunities to bring both temporal and spiritual blessings to others. The Church is the KINGDOM OF GOD on earth for which the disciple prays and works while seeking to unify it with God’s kingdom in Heaven (Matt. 6:10). Gospel principles and ordinances empower the disciple of Christ, line upon line, to become even as he is.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Covey, Stephen R. The Divine Center. Salt Lake City, 1987.
 Hafen, Bruce C. The Broken Heart. Salt Lake City, 1989.
 Maxwell, Neal A. Deposition of a Disciple. Salt Lake City, 1976.
 ———. Even As I Am. Salt Lake City, 1982.

STEPHEN R. COVEY

---

DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES

To aid the spiritual development of its members, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has developed a system of counseling, rehabilitation, and, where needed, disciplinary action.

Members are accountable to the Lord for the way they conduct their lives, and personal worthiness is requisite for enjoying the full blessings of Church MEMBERSHIP. The judge of such worthiness is in most cases the BISHOP of the WARD, who is appointed “to be a judge in Israel” (D&C 107:72) and is “to judge his people by the testimony of the sonal sins of mankind, as well as the consequences of weaknesses and mistakes—including those transmitted through the generations—that are manifested in the lives even of individuals trying to follow in his footsteps. As the savior of mankind, Jesus sets the example and lovingly makes the blessings of the atonement and personal guidance available to anyone who comes to him with a broken (teachable) heart and a contrite (repentant) spirit (3 Ne. 9:20–22; 12:19–20).

The commitment to become a disciple of Christ is an unconditional one of “heart, might, mind and strength” (D&C 4:2). It centers a person’s life on Christ, making Jesus the supreme law-giver, the frame of reference through which all else is viewed. Christ’s influence then begins to direct a person’s words, acts, and even thoughts, enabling that individual to become a partaker of the divine nature (2 Pet. 1:4), line upon line, precept upon precept.

While some believe that full discipleship comes about almost instantaneously, Latter-day Saints view the commitment at baptism as the beginning of a lifelong process that involves an upward spiral of learning, committing, and doing on increasingly higher planes. The heart of this process is learning to educate and obey the conscience, the repository of the Spirit of Christ given to every person (John 1:9; Moro. 7:16). As individuals obey the general commandments given through his appointed prophets, they become more attuned to hear the “still small voice” of the Holy Ghost (1 Ne. 17:45) that communicates specific personal direction and leads individuals to full discipleship.

The educated conscience, schooled by prayerful study of the scriptures, selfless service, and the making and keeping of God’s COVENANTS, becomes a growing source of intrinsic security and well-being, the basis for decision making, the essence of personal FREEDOM. “If ye continue in my word,” said Christ, “then are ye my disciples indeed; And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free” (John 8:31–32). As a person begins to see more as the Lord sees, to acquire more of the “mind of Christ” (1 Cor. 2:16), that individual is empowered to become independent of all other influences and to rise above childhood, genetic, and environmental tendencies.

The fruits that naturally grow out of this divine center are described as characteristics of disciples in both ancient and modern scripture. Disciples receive and obey the Lord’s commandments (D&C 41:5); they are “submissive, meek, humble, patient, full of love, willing to submit to all things which the Lord seeth fit to inflict upon [them]” (Mosiah 3:19); they remember the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted (D&C 52:40); they act as a light to others (3 Ne. 15:12), love others as Christ loves (John 13:34–35), and are willing to forsake all to follow him (Luke 14:33) and to lay down their lives for his sake (D&C 103:28).

The role of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the process of discipleship is, as PAUL observed of the former-day Church, “for the perfecting of the saints” (Eph. 4:12), and for helping members bridge the gap between theory and practice in becoming true disciples.

While one can go to church without being active in the gospel, for Latter-day Saints it is not possible to be a full disciple of Christ without being active in his Church. The Church teaches the GOSPEL, administers its ordinances, and provides opportunities to bring both temporal and spiritual blessings to others. The Church is the KINGDOM OF GOD on earth for which the disciple prays and works while seeking to unify it with God’s kingdom in Heaven (Matt. 6:10). Gospel principles and ordinances empower the disciple of Christ, line upon line, to become even as he is.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Covey, Stephen R. The Divine Center. Salt Lake City, 1987.
 Hafen, Bruce C. The Broken Heart. Salt Lake City, 1989.
 Maxwell, Neal A. Deposition of a Disciple. Salt Lake City, 1976.
 ———. Even As I Am. Salt Lake City, 1982.

STEPHEN R. COVEY

---

DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES

To aid the spiritual development of its members, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has developed a system of counseling, rehabilitation, and, where needed, disciplinary action.

Members are accountable to the Lord for the way they conduct their lives, and personal worthiness is requisite for enjoying the full blessings of Church MEMBERSHIP. The judge of such worthiness is in most cases the BISHOP of the WARD, who is appointed “to be a judge in Israel” (D&C 107:72) and is “to judge his people by the testimony of the just, and by the assistance of his counselors, according to the laws of the kingdom which are given by the prophets of God” (D&C 58:18). General Authorities and stake, mission, district, and branch presidents may, in some circumstances, also exercise judicial responsibilities. The term “bishop” in this article usually refers to any Church officer acting in such a judicial role.

Bishops function as judges and also as counselors when they hear voluntary, private confessions from members. They must also determine a member’s worthiness before signing the temple recommend that permits a member to participate in temple ordinances. Moreover, bishops judge worthiness before recommending persons to serve as full-time missionaries, before calling officers or teachers to serve in Church organizations, or before a member enrolls at a Church-owned college or university. Although required standards of worthiness vary somewhat in these different situations, most worthiness interviews focus on conduct-oriented questions concerning personal MORALITY and CHASTITY, payment of tithes, observance of the WORD OF WISDOM, sustaining local and general Church leadership, obedience to gospel commandments, and general activity in the Church.

Because bishops are primarily concerned with the spiritual development of each member, they have wide discretion to make judgments and to give the counsel most likely to assist the member’s spiritual progress and, where needed, the member’s REPENTANCE. A bishop may simply accept a confession from a repentant person without imposing a penalty, may decide not to extend a proposed call for Church service, or may temporarily withhold other privileges of membership. In the most serious cases, bishops may impose disciplinary sanctions ranging from informal, probationary restrictions to formal proceedings that can result in disfellowshipment or EXCOMMUNICATION from the Church.

Church discipline may proceed from any or all of three purposes:

1. To aid the transgressors’ repentance, thereby helping them receive the Savior’s ATONEMENT for personal SINS (see JUSTICE AND MERCY). The Lord has said, “Whosoever transgresseth against me, him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed; and if he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive, and I will forgive him also. . . . And whosoever will not repent of his sins the same shall not be numbered among my people” (Mosiah 26:29, 32; see also D&C 64:12–13). Toward this end, bishops often encourage repentance without the necessity of formal disciplinary proceedings. However, in certain cases, unless a bishop invokes formal discipline, a transgressor may be unable to experience the change of heart and behavior necessary to achieve complete repentance.

2. To identify unrepentant predators and hostile apostates and thereby protect innocent persons from harm they might inflict. “But if he repent not he shall not be numbered among my people, that he may not destroy my people” (3 Ne. 18:31).

3. To safeguard the integrity of the Church.

Standard guidelines for conducting disciplinary proceedings are provided to Church officers in the GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS. Disciplinary councils are not normally convened to resolve civil disputes among members (see D&C 134:10), nor are they convened simply because a member does not attend Church meetings or is similarly neglectful. Furthermore, members who request to have their names removed from Church membership records for reasons of personal choice unrelated to serious misconduct need not appear before a disciplinary council to have their request honored.

When there has been transgression, bishops must decide each case according to its unique circumstances, including the extent of the member’s repentance. Therefore, the Church does not impose rigid requirements on bishops; rather, they are instructed to weigh all relevant factors and to seek spiritual guidance to accomplish the purposes of Church discipline as the individual case requires. When a bishop imposes discipline informally, the proceedings are strictly confidential and no official Church record is made.

Formal proceedings may involve a three-member ward BISHOPRIC or a fifteen-member STAKE PRESIDENCY and high council. Formal disciplinary councils are typically convened only for such extraordinary behavior as murder or other serious crimes, incest, open and harmful APOSTASY, and flagrant or highly visible transgressions against the law of chastity. Members for whom a formal disciplinary council is convened are given advance notice of the reasons for the council and an opportunity for a hearing. Although legal procedures do not govern the proceedings, the Church observes basic standards of fairness. The proceedings are officially recorded by written minutes. Both the hearing and the formal record are treated as confidential information, and disciplinary penalties are announced only to those Church officers who have a need to know, except when the offender poses serious risks to uninformed Church members. Those subjected to disciplinary sanctions have a right of appeal.

A formal disciplinary council can result in four possible outcomes: (1) no action; (2) a formal probation involving restricted privileges; (3) disfellowshipment; or (4) excommunication. Disfellowshipment is a temporary suspension of membership privileges. A disfellowshipped person remains a Church member but may not enter Church temples, hold Church callings, exercise the priesthood, partake of the sacrament, or participate openly in public meetings. An excommunicated person is no longer a member of the Church, and all priesthood ordinances and temple blessings previously received are suspended. Excommunicants may not pay tithing and, if previously endowed in a temple, may not wear temple garments. They may attend Church meetings. Excommunicants may later qualify for REBAPTISM after lengthy and full repentance and still later may apply for a formal restoration of their original priesthood and temple blessings.

Authorization to reinstate disfellowshipped persons or to rebaptize excommunicated persons must be given by a disciplinary council in the area where the applicant resides. In some cases, clearance by the FIRST PRESIDENCY is required. The ordinance of restoration of temple blessings may be authorized only by the First Presidency.

The isolation of the Latter-day Saints during the settlement era in the Great Basin gave a broader jurisdiction to Church judicial courts than is presently the case, in part because of the absence of a developed state court system. In addition, Church policy has in recent years given greater protection to the confidentiality of disciplinary decisions. For example, until the 1970s, decisions of excommunication and disfellowshipment were announced openly in ward Melchizedek Priesthood meetings, although the nature of the transgression was usually not announced.

Because the fundamental purpose of Church discipline has always been to save souls rather than only to punish, formal disciplinary councils are considered “courts of love,” marking the first step back to full harmony with the Lord and his Church, rather than the last step on the way out of the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ballard, M. Russell. “A Chance to Start Over: Church Disciplinary Councils and the Restoration of Blessings.” Ensign 20 (Sept. 1990):12–19.
- “The Church Judicial System.” In Seek to Obtain My Word: Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide 1989, pp. 29–36. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Kimball, Spencer W. “The Church Will Forgive.” The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 323–37. Salt Lake City, 1969.
- Moss, James R. “The Historical Development of the Church Court System.” Church History Symposium Paper, 1977. Abstract published in First Annual Church Educational System Religious Educators Symposium, pp. 75–77. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Preston, James J. “Expulsion.” ER 5:233–36.
- Simpson, Robert L. “Courts of Love.” Ensign 2 (July 1972):48–49.

BRUCE C. HAFEN

---

DISFELLOWSHIPMENT

See: Disciplinary Procedures

---

DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES

The Dispensation of the Fulness of Times is the final dispensation for this earth. Dispensations are periods of time in which the gospel of Jesus Christ is administered by holy PROPHETS called and ordained by God to deliver his message to the inhabitants of the world. The central work of the “dispensation of the fulness of times” consists of bringing together all gospel ordinances and truths of past dispensations and some items unique to the last days. Paul spoke of a future time when all things that are in heaven and on earth would at last be gathered together, and he called it the “dispensation of the fulness of times” (Eph. 1:10).

This dispensation began with the Prophet Jo-

given advance notice of the reasons for the council and an opportunity for a hearing. Although legal procedures do not govern the proceedings, the Church observes basic standards of fairness. The proceedings are officially recorded by written minutes. Both the hearing and the formal record are treated as confidential information, and disciplinary penalties are announced only to those Church officers who have a need to know, except when the offender poses serious risks to uninformed Church members. Those subjected to disciplinary sanctions have a right of appeal.

A formal disciplinary council can result in four possible outcomes: (1) no action; (2) a formal probation involving restricted privileges; (3) disfellowshipment; or (4) excommunication. Disfellowshipment is a temporary suspension of membership privileges. A disfellowshipped person remains a Church member but may not enter Church temples, hold Church callings, exercise the priesthood, partake of the sacrament, or participate openly in public meetings. An excommunicated person is no longer a member of the Church, and all priesthood ordinances and temple blessings previously received are suspended. Excommunicants may not pay tithing and, if previously endowed in a temple, may not wear temple garments. They may attend Church meetings. Excommunicants may later qualify for REBAPTISM after lengthy and full repentance and still later may apply for a formal restoration of their original priesthood and temple blessings.

Authorization to reinstate disfellowshipped persons or to rebaptize excommunicated persons must be given by a disciplinary council in the area where the applicant resides. In some cases, clearance by the FIRST PRESIDENCY is required. The ordinance of restoration of temple blessings may be authorized only by the First Presidency.

The isolation of the Latter-day Saints during the settlement era in the Great Basin gave a broader jurisdiction to Church judicial courts than is presently the case, in part because of the absence of a developed state court system. In addition, Church policy has in recent years given greater protection to the confidentiality of disciplinary decisions. For example, until the 1970s, decisions of excommunication and disfellowshipment were announced openly in ward Melchizedek Priesthood meetings, although the nature of the transgression was usually not announced.

Because the fundamental purpose of Church discipline has always been to save souls rather than only to punish, formal disciplinary councils are considered “courts of love,” marking the first step back to full harmony with the Lord and his Church, rather than the last step on the way out of the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ballard, M. Russell. “A Chance to Start Over: Church Disciplinary Councils and the Restoration of Blessings.” Ensign 20 (Sept. 1990):12–19.
- “The Church Judicial System.” In Seek to Obtain My Word: Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide 1989, pp. 29–36. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Firmage, Edwin Brown, and Richard Collin Mangrum. Zion in the Courts: A Legal History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Urbana, Ill., 1988.
- Kimball, Spencer W. “The Church Will Forgive.” The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 323–37. Salt Lake City, 1969.
- Moss, James R. “The Historical Development of the Church Court System.” Church History Symposium Paper, 1977. Abstract published in First Annual Church Educational System Religious Educators Symposium, pp. 75–77. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Preston, James J. “Expulsion.” ER 5:233–36.
- Simpson, Robert L. “Courts of Love.” Ensign 2 (July 1972):48–49.

BRUCE C. HAFEN

---

DISFELLOWSHIPMENT

See: Disciplinary Procedures

---

DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES

The Dispensation of the Fulness of Times is the final dispensation for this earth. Dispensations are periods of time in which the gospel of Jesus Christ is administered by holy PROPHETS called and ordained by God to deliver his message to the inhabitants of the world. The central work of the “dispensation of the fulness of times” consists of bringing together all gospel ordinances and truths of past dispensations and some items unique to the last days. Paul spoke of a future time when all things that are in heaven and on earth would at last be gathered together, and he called it the “dispensation of the fulness of times” (Eph. 1:10).

This dispensation began with the Prophet Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION, and all revelations and divine gifts of former dispensations continually flow into it. Concerning this, Joseph Smith wrote on September 6, 1842: "It is necessary in the ushering in of the dispensation of the fulness of times, which dispensation is now beginning to usher in, that a whole and complete and perfect union, and welding together of dispensations, and keys, and powers, and glories should take place, and be revealed from the days of Adam even to the present time" (D&C 128:18).

David W. PATTEN, a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, said in 1838: "The dispensation of the fullness of times is made up of all the dispensations that ever have been since the world began, until this time. . . . All [the prophets] received in their time a dispensation by revelation from God, to accomplish the great scheme of restoration, . . . the end of which is the dispensation of the fulness of times, in the which all things shall be fulfilled that have been spoken of since the earth was made" (HC 3:51).

Revelation and restoration characterize the fulness of times. Priesthood, keys (authorization to act), ordinances, covenants, and teachings of past dispensations have been, or will yet be, restored, and this can occur only by revelation. Heavenly messengers ministered to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY, giving them authority, keys, doctrines, and ordinances of past dispensations that had been lost to the world because of fragmentation, abuse, and APOSTASY. The Doctrine and Covenants records several instances in which these two men saw, talked with, and received authority from resurrected ancient prophets. On May 15, 1829, John the Baptist ordained them to the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD (D&C 13). Shortly thereafter, Peter, James, and John, three of Christ's original APOSTLES, conferred the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD on them (D&C 27:12). On April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, Moses gave them "the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north" (D&C 110:11); ELIAS committed the keys of the dispensation of the GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM (D&C 110:12); and ELIJAH fulfilled the promise of Malachi 4:5–6 by bestowing on them the SEALING power to "turn the hearts of the . . . children to the fathers" and make available the saving gospel ordinances to all who have lived on earth (D&C 110:13–15). As part of the restoration, the Book of Mormon, a scriptural witness of Jesus Christ and his dealings with ancient people of the Western Hemisphere, was translated by Joseph Smith by divine power. These events were part of the gathering "together in one all things in Christ" (Eph. 1:10; D&C 27:7–13; see also RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS). The priesthood has been revealed "for the last time," and those who now hold the keys do so "in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of the creation" (D&C 112:30–31).

Of things unique to the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, the Prophet Joseph Smith wrote, "Those things which never have been revealed from the foundation of the world, but have been kept hid from the wise and prudent, shall be revealed unto babes and sucklings in this, the dispensation of the fulness of times" (D&C 128:18). Although the PLAN OF SALVATION is the same in every dispensation, the fulness of times will see the accomplishment of specific and unique events, including the rebuilding of the old Jerusalem; building the NEW JERUSALEM; preaching the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people; the gathering of Israel; and the SECOND COMING of Jesus Christ. Everything necessary to usher in the MILLENNIUM comes under the purview of the dispensation of the fulness of times, which will continue until Christ has subdued all his enemies and has perfected his work (D&C 76:106; TPJS, pp. 231–32).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. "The Fulness of Times." Ensign 19 (Dec. 1989):46–51.
- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 137, 320. Salt Lake City, 1985.

RAND H. PACKER

---

DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL

The term "dispensation" is translated in the New Testament from the Greek oikonomia, denoting an idea of STEWARDSHIP and of ordering affairs of a household. "Dispensations" are also time periods in which the Lord placed on the earth the necessary knowledge, PRIESTHOOD, and KEYS of authority to implement his PLAN OF SALVATION for his children. This plan, along with priesthood, was first given to ADAM (Moses 5:4–12; 6:62–68; D&C 84:16–18; TPJS, pp. 157, 167), but as a conse-

seph Smith's FIRST VISION, and all revelations and divine gifts of former dispensations continually flow into it. Concerning this, Joseph Smith wrote on September 6, 1842: "It is necessary in the ushering in of the dispensation of the fulness of times, which dispensation is now beginning to usher in, that a whole and complete and perfect union, and welding together of dispensations, and keys, and powers, and glories should take place, and be revealed from the days of Adam even to the present time" (D&C 128:18).

David W. PATTEN, a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, said in 1838: "The dispensation of the fullness of times is made up of all the dispensations that ever have been since the world began, until this time. . . . All [the prophets] received in their time a dispensation by revelation from God, to accomplish the great scheme of restoration, . . . the end of which is the dispensation of the fulness of times, in the which all things shall be fulfilled that have been spoken of since the earth was made" (HC 3:51).

Revelation and restoration characterize the fulness of times. Priesthood, keys (authorization to act), ordinances, covenants, and teachings of past dispensations have been, or will yet be, restored, and this can occur only by revelation. Heavenly messengers ministered to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY, giving them authority, keys, doctrines, and ordinances of past dispensations that had been lost to the world because of fragmentation, abuse, and APOSTASY. The Doctrine and Covenants records several instances in which these two men saw, talked with, and received authority from resurrected ancient prophets. On May 15, 1829, John the Baptist ordained them to the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD (D&C 13). Shortly thereafter, Peter, James, and John, three of Christ's original APOSTLES, conferred the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD on them (D&C 27:12). On April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE, Moses gave them "the keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth, and the leading of the ten tribes from the land of the north" (D&C 110:11); ELIAS committed the keys of the dispensation of the GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM (D&C 110:12); and ELIJAH fulfilled the promise of Malachi 4:5–6 by bestowing on them the SEALING power to "turn the hearts of the . . . children to the fathers" and make available the saving gospel ordinances to all who have lived on earth (D&C 110:13–15). As part of the restoration, the Book of Mormon, a scriptural witness of Jesus Christ and his dealings with ancient people of the Western Hemisphere, was translated by Joseph Smith by divine power. These events were part of the gathering "together in one all things in Christ" (Eph. 1:10; D&C 27:7–13; see also RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS). The priesthood has been revealed "for the last time," and those who now hold the keys do so "in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of the creation" (D&C 112:30–31).

Of things unique to the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, the Prophet Joseph Smith wrote, "Those things which never have been revealed from the foundation of the world, but have been kept hid from the wise and prudent, shall be revealed unto babes and sucklings in this, the dispensation of the fulness of times" (D&C 128:18). Although the PLAN OF SALVATION is the same in every dispensation, the fulness of times will see the accomplishment of specific and unique events, including the rebuilding of the old Jerusalem; building the NEW JERUSALEM; preaching the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people; the gathering of Israel; and the SECOND COMING of Jesus Christ. Everything necessary to usher in the MILLENNIUM comes under the purview of the dispensation of the fulness of times, which will continue until Christ has subdued all his enemies and has perfected his work (D&C 76:106; TPJS, pp. 231–32).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. "The Fulness of Times." Ensign 19 (Dec. 1989):46–51.
- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 137, 320. Salt Lake City, 1985.

RAND H. PACKER

---

DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL

The term "dispensation" is translated in the New Testament from the Greek oikonomia, denoting an idea of STEWARDSHIP and of ordering affairs of a household. "Dispensations" are also time periods in which the Lord placed on the earth the necessary knowledge, PRIESTHOOD, and KEYS of authority to implement his PLAN OF SALVATION for his children. This plan, along with priesthood, was first given to ADAM (Moses 5:4–12; 6:62–68; D&C 84:16–18; TPJS, pp. 157, 167), but as a consequence of later APOSTASY and fragmentation among his descendants, it did not remain constantly upon the earth. Hence, from time to time the Lord called new prophets and again revealed the plan and bestowed the necessary priesthood authority, creating a new dispensation.

Each new dispensation, or period of restored truth, presents men and women with a divine stewardship in performing the Lord's work on earth. The recipients become custodians and co-workers with God in bringing to pass his purposes. They work according to his orderly and revealed design: His plan takes into account human weaknesses and provides for times of renewal following apostasy, just as it provides for a redemption from individual failings through repentance and obedience (D&C 121:31–32). The concepts of stewardship and orderliness are important themes in LDS theology.

Prophets are stewards who preach and organize the work of redemption in each dispensation. It has become traditional in some unofficial LDS commentaries to refer to seven major dispensations named after the principal prophet of each: Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jesus Christ (who led the dispensation of the MERIDIAN OF TIME), and Joseph SMITH (who introduced the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES; see Acts 3:21.) However, this list does not take into account other dispensations, such as those among the Jaredites, the Nephites, and the ten lost tribes of Israel.

Rarely have gospel dispensations been universal, reaching all nations, although that is the ideal (e.g., Abr. 2:11). More often, one people has been responsive, while other nations have languished in ignorance and unbelief. However, the Adamic dispensation would at first have been communicated to the entire family of Adam early in his time (see Moses 5:12), and again in the final dispensation, the fulness of times, the gospel "shall be preached unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (see D&C 133:37; cf. 90:9–11). The meridian of time was given the same mandate (Matt. 28:19–20), but we have no record that the gospel reached every nation in that period.

Several fundamentals are common to all dispensations: priesthood authority, BAPTISM by immersion and the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, the SEALING power (D&C 128:9–11), and TEMPLE worship. Basic gospel doctrines, including the FALL OF ADAM, faith in Jesus Christ, repentance, and the need for an infinite ATONEMENT, were taught in each era from Adam's day onward whenever there were living prophets selected by the Lord (Moses 5:4–12; D&C 112:29–32).

Some prophets have been given keys and responsibility over specific aspects of God's plan for this earth. In the sense of dispensation or stewardship, each of these assignments could with propriety be called a special dispensation. Joseph Smith taught that Adam, as "the father of all living," stands as the head of the patriarchal order of priesthood for this earth under Christ (TPJS, p. 158; D&C 78:16) and holds the keys from generation to generation. Whenever the gospel is revealed anew, it is under the direction of Adam. Noah, the "father of all living" after Adam, is also known as Gabriel and stands next to Adam in priesthood authority (TPJS, pp. 157, 167). Moses holds keys of the gathering of Israel (D&C 110:11); and Elijah, of sealing the generations (D&C 2; 110:13–16; JS—11 1:38–39). John the Baptist had a special role of messianic preparation (JST Matt. 11:13–15; 17:10–14). Peter, James, and John received the keys of the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (TPJS, p. 158) from Jesus, Moses, and Elias (Elijah). Moroni holds responsibility for the Book of Mormon (D&C 27:5). Each of these prophets has received a dispensation of keys for which he holds a stewardship and will give an account to the Lord (D&C 27:5–13). In a future gathering, all who hold keys will give a stewardship report to Adam, and he, to Christ (TPJS, p. 157; cf. JST Luke 3:8–9).

In establishing the final dispensation, the Lord prepared Joseph Smith by sending prophets from previous dispensations to confer their keys upon him (see D&C 110; 112:32; 128:20–21). Thus, in the dispensation of the fulness of times, all things will be "gathered together into one" (Eph. 1:10; D&C 27:13). Since the final dispensation is a culmination of all that has come before, Joseph Smith is revered as a preeminent figure under Jesus Christ (D&C 128:18; 135:3).

Every dispensation, beginning with Adam's, has been a dispensation of the gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ. That is, in each dispensation the same plan of redemption through the Savior and the necessary holy priesthood have been revealed by God in a similar and consistent manner.

The general consistency of the plan does not preclude differences in revealed counsel and direction appropriate to the diversity in times and cultures of different dispensations. CIRCUMCISION, for example, important in previous dispensations as a sign of a covenant, was not essential in later dispensations. Blood SACRIFICES required in Old Testament times to anticipate the Atonement were fulfilled in Christ, with new redemptive emblems of bread and wine being prescribed by Jesus. Latter-day Saints have a strong recognition of change and progress in sacred history. Personal growth and its implications for the development of a perfected Zion society are essential in LDS eschatology (see ETERNAL PROGRESSION). This view of progress is evidenced in the concept that the final dispensation builds upon previous ones and achieves the goals of all of them with the celestialization of the earth. The earth then will become a glorious residence for those of all dispensations who have been resurrected and perfected in Christ (D&C 88:17–26).

A definite priesthood line of authority is an essential component of the LDS understanding of dispensations. Thus, Moses and Elijah visited Peter, James, and John at the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION to restore certain keys of authority, and as already noted, these and many other ancient prophets visited Joseph Smith to give him the same authority (see RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL).

Although the Lord's Church in successive dispensations ceased to function on earth because of apostasy, the work of the Lord in each dispensation is open-ended, leading to the final dispensation. The Lord's work that was not completed in an earlier dispensation will continue into the final dispensation, which is appropriately called "the fulness of times." In this last dispensation, some ideals never before reached on the earth will be accomplished (i.e., GATHERING of Israel, the SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST, and the MILLENNIUM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, F. L. "Dispensationalism." In Dictionary of Pentecostal and Charismatic Movements, ed. Stanley M. Burgess and Gary B. McGee. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1988.
- Hunter, Milton R. The Gospel Through the Ages. Salt Lake City, 1945.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The Fulness of Times." Ensign 19 (Dec. 1989):46–51.
- Roberts, B. H., ed. A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Introduction. Salt Lake City, 1930.

COURTNEY J. LASSETTER

---

DISTRIBUTION CENTERS

In order to make standardized administrative and teaching materials available to its members, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has developed a system of distribution centers around the world. These distribute authorized Church literature and CURRICULUM materials to Church units, members, and officers in approximately one hundred languages. Such materials include scriptures, lesson manuals, teaching aids, handbooks, forms, reports, supplies, and video and cassette tapes.

The item in greatest demand is the Book of Mormon, with over four million copies distributed annually. Since 1989 the majority of these copies are in languages other than English. Some centers also coordinate local printing and distribution of Church magazines in their areas. Each center offers services geared to the particular proselytizing, teaching, and administrative needs of Church programs in its area. Some centers are equipped to print many of the materials they distribute, thus reducing the expense of shipping from Salt Lake City. Materials required in large quantities and hardbound books are often produced by commercial vendors. Wherever printed and regardless of language, all materials are uniform in their content.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "A Conversation about the Church's Distribution Centers." Ensign 16 (Oct. 1986):78–79.
- "Family Resources from the Church's Distribution Center." Ensign 15 (Mar. 1985): unnumbered insert opposite p. 40.

JOHN E. CARR

---

DISTRICT, DISTRICT PRESIDENT

A "district" is an ecclesiastical unit similar in function to a STAKE. Districts are found within missions in developing areas of the Church mostly outside the United States and Canada. Districts are meant to be transitional. Once membership in a district has grown to an average of 250–300 members per BRANCH, with 10 percent or more of these members holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, the district will normally be made into a stake and the qualifying branches within the district made into WARDS. Insofar as possible and practical, all

tures of different dispensations. CIRCUMCISION, for example, important in previous dispensations as a sign of a covenant, was not essential in later dispensations. Blood SACRIFICES required in Old Testament times to anticipate the Atonement were fulfilled in Christ, with new redemptive emblems of bread and wine being prescribed by Jesus. Latter-day Saints have a strong recognition of change and progress in sacred history. Personal growth and its implications for the development of a perfected Zion society are essential in LDS eschatology (see ETERNAL PROGRESSION). This view of progress is evidenced in the concept that the final dispensation builds upon previous ones and achieves the goals of all of them with the celestialization of the earth. The earth then will become a glorious residence for those of all dispensations who have been resurrected and perfected in Christ (D&C 88:17–26).

A definite priesthood line of authority is an essential component of the LDS understanding of dispensations. Thus, Moses and Elijah visited Peter, James, and John at the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION to restore certain keys of authority, and as already noted, these and many other ancient prophets visited Joseph Smith to give him the same authority (see RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL).

Although the Lord's Church in successive dispensations ceased to function on earth because of apostasy, the work of the Lord in each dispensation is open-ended, leading to the final dispensation. The Lord's work that was not completed in an earlier dispensation will continue into the final dispensation, which is appropriately called "the fulness of times." In this last dispensation, some ideals never before reached on the earth will be accomplished (i.e., GATHERING of Israel, the SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST, and the MILLENNIUM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, F. L. "Dispensationalism." In Dictionary of Pentecostal and Charismatic Movements, ed. Stanley M. Burgess and Gary B. McGee. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1988.
- Hunter, Milton R. The Gospel Through the Ages. Salt Lake City, 1945.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The Fulness of Times." Ensign 19 (Dec. 1989):46–51.
- Roberts, B. H., ed. A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Introduction. Salt Lake City, 1930.

COURTNEY J. LASSETTER

---

DISTRIBUTION CENTERS

In order to make standardized administrative and teaching materials available to its members, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has developed a system of distribution centers around the world. These distribute authorized Church literature and CURRICULUM materials to Church units, members, and officers in approximately one hundred languages. Such materials include scriptures, lesson manuals, teaching aids, handbooks, forms, reports, supplies, and video and cassette tapes.

The item in greatest demand is the Book of Mormon, with over four million copies distributed annually. Since 1989 the majority of these copies are in languages other than English. Some centers also coordinate local printing and distribution of Church magazines in their areas. Each center offers services geared to the particular proselytizing, teaching, and administrative needs of Church programs in its area. Some centers are equipped to print many of the materials they distribute, thus reducing the expense of shipping from Salt Lake City. Materials required in large quantities and hardbound books are often produced by commercial vendors. Wherever printed and regardless of language, all materials are uniform in their content.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "A Conversation about the Church's Distribution Centers." Ensign 16 (Oct. 1986):78–79.
- "Family Resources from the Church's Distribution Center." Ensign 15 (Mar. 1985): unnumbered insert opposite p. 40.

JOHN E. CARR

---

DISTRICT, DISTRICT PRESIDENT

A "district" is an ecclesiastical unit similar in function to a STAKE. Districts are found within missions in developing areas of the Church mostly outside the United States and Canada. Districts are meant to be transitional. Once membership in a district has grown to an average of 250–300 members per BRANCH, with 10 percent or more of these members holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, the district will normally be made into a stake and the qualifying branches within the district made into WARDS. Insofar as possible and practical, all

tures of different dispensations. CIRCUMCISION, for example, important in previous dispensations as a sign of a covenant, was not essential in later dispensations. Blood SACRIFICES required in Old Testament times to anticipate the Atonement were fulfilled in Christ, with new redemptive emblems of bread and wine being prescribed by Jesus. Latter-day Saints have a strong recognition of change and progress in sacred history. Personal growth and its implications for the development of a perfected Zion society are essential in LDS eschatology (see ETERNAL PROGRESSION). This view of progress is evidenced in the concept that the final dispensation builds upon previous ones and achieves the goals of all of them with the celestialization of the earth. The earth then will become a glorious residence for those of all dispensations who have been resurrected and perfected in Christ (D&C 88:17–26).

A definite priesthood line of authority is an essential component of the LDS understanding of dispensations. Thus, Moses and Elijah visited Peter, James, and John at the MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION to restore certain keys of authority, and as already noted, these and many other ancient prophets visited Joseph Smith to give him the same authority (see RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL).

Although the Lord's Church in successive dispensations ceased to function on earth because of apostasy, the work of the Lord in each dispensation is open-ended, leading to the final dispensation. The Lord's work that was not completed in an earlier dispensation will continue into the final dispensation, which is appropriately called "the fulness of times." In this last dispensation, some ideals never before reached on the earth will be accomplished (i.e., GATHERING of Israel, the SECOND COMING OF JESUS CHRIST, and the MILLENNIUM).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, F. L. "Dispensationalism." In Dictionary of Pentecostal and Charismatic Movements, ed. Stanley M. Burgess and Gary B. McGee. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1988.
- Hunter, Milton R. The Gospel Through the Ages. Salt Lake City, 1945.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The Fulness of Times." Ensign 19 (Dec. 1989):46–51.
- Roberts, B. H., ed. A Comprehensive History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Introduction. Salt Lake City, 1930.

COURTNEY J. LASSETTER

---

DISTRIBUTION CENTERS

In order to make standardized administrative and teaching materials available to its members, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has developed a system of distribution centers around the world. These distribute authorized Church literature and CURRICULUM materials to Church units, members, and officers in approximately one hundred languages. Such materials include scriptures, lesson manuals, teaching aids, handbooks, forms, reports, supplies, and video and cassette tapes.

The item in greatest demand is the Book of Mormon, with over four million copies distributed annually. Since 1989 the majority of these copies are in languages other than English. Some centers also coordinate local printing and distribution of Church magazines in their areas. Each center offers services geared to the particular proselytizing, teaching, and administrative needs of Church programs in its area. Some centers are equipped to print many of the materials they distribute, thus reducing the expense of shipping from Salt Lake City. Materials required in large quantities and hardbound books are often produced by commercial vendors. Wherever printed and regardless of language, all materials are uniform in their content.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "A Conversation about the Church's Distribution Centers." Ensign 16 (Oct. 1986):78–79.
- "Family Resources from the Church's Distribution Center." Ensign 15 (Mar. 1985): unnumbered insert opposite p. 40.

JOHN E. CARR

---

DISTRICT, DISTRICT PRESIDENT

A "district" is an ecclesiastical unit similar in function to a STAKE. Districts are found within missions in developing areas of the Church mostly outside the United States and Canada. Districts are meant to be transitional. Once membership in a district has grown to an average of 250–300 members per BRANCH, with 10 percent or more of these members holding the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, the district will normally be made into a stake and the qualifying branches within the district made into WARDS. Insofar as possible and practical, all

Church programs are made available to members living within districts.

Until recent years, there were more districts in the Church than stakes. But Church growth from 1965 to 1990 has changed that ratio. As of January 1, 1991, there were 1,784 stakes and 482 districts in the Church (457 of these districts were outside the United States and Canada).

A district is presided over by a district president, who must hold the Melchizedek Priesthood (either elder or high priest). The district president is nominated by the mission president, approved by the AREA PRESIDENCY, called and set apart by the mission president, and sustained by a vote at district conference or district general priesthood meeting. He serves with two counselors and generally serves with a district council of twelve Melchizedek Priesthood holders.

The word "district" is also used to describe certain other Church geographical divisions. For example, a temple district is made up of a number of stakes and/or missions whose members are encouraged to perform their TEMPLE ORDINANCES in a designated temple.

WILLIAM S. EVANS

DIVORCE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints officially disapproves of divorce but does permit both divorce (the legal dissolution of a marriage bond) and annulment (a decree that a marriage was illegal or invalid) in civil marriages and "cancellation of sealing" in temple marriages.

Latter-day Saints believe that God intended marriage to be an eternal union when he commanded that a man and woman "shall be one flesh" (Gen. 2:24). However, under Jewish interpretation of the LAW OF MOSES, a man had the right to divorce his wife if she found disfavor in his eyes or for "uncleaness" (adultery or other reasons). The man was required to give his wife a written bill of divorcement, which freed her to remarry (Deut. 24:1–2), although in some cases he was not allowed to "put away" his wife (Deut. 22:29).

Jesus Christ condemned divorce under most circumstances, saying, "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" (Matt. 19:6). He explained that Moses had permitted divorce only "because of the hardness of your hearts" and because the people could not live the higher law of eternal marriage, "but from the beginning it was not so" (Matt. 19:8). To this he added, speaking in the Sermon on the Mount to those who would strive to be the light of the world and the children of God, "Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery" (Luke 16:18; Matt. 5:31–32; 3 Ne. 12:31–32).

The Doctrine and Covenants reiterates the teaching that marriage is ordained of God (D&C 49:15–16). The Church distinguishes between (1) civil marriages, which are valid for "time" (until divorce or the death of one spouse), and (2) temple marriages, or sealings, solemnized by proper ecclesiastical authority, which are binding for "time and all eternity" if the participants are obedient to the gospel (see MARRIAGE: ETERNAL). Legal annulments and divorces free the individuals married civilly for remarriage. Only the President of the Church can authorize a "cancellation of sealing" in temple marriages to free a worthy member to remarry in the temple. Without a cancellation of sealing, divorced members may remarry for time only (see SEALING: CANCELLATION OF).

For nineteenth-century Latter-day Saints, feelings about divorce were mixed. President Brigham Young did not approve of men divorcing their wives, but women were relatively free to dissolve an unhappy marriage, especially a polygamous union (see PLURAL MARRIAGE). Such divorces were handled in ecclesiastical COURTS because polygamous marriages were not considered legal by the government. Records of the number of divorces granted between 1847 and 1877 show a relatively high rate of divorce for polygamous marriages. This rate was high, not so much because polygamy was difficult, but because LDS society had not developed clear rules and expectations for the practice or the participants (Campbell and Campbell, p. 22).

Early Utah laws reflected general LDS beliefs and may have influenced the incidence of divorce. An 1851 territorial divorce law had lenient residency requirements and allowed divorce when it was clear "that the parties cannot live in peace and union together, and that their welfare requires a separation" (First Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, 1851, p. 83).

Current Church statistics on divorces among Latter-day Saints show somewhat fewer divorces among U.S. Mormons than among the general U.S. population. Data from a 1981 Church mem-

Church programs are made available to members living within districts.

Until recent years, there were more districts in the Church than stakes. But Church growth from 1965 to 1990 has changed that ratio. As of January 1, 1991, there were 1,784 stakes and 482 districts in the Church (457 of these districts were outside the United States and Canada).

A district is presided over by a district president, who must hold the Melchizedek Priesthood (either elder or high priest). The district president is nominated by the mission president, approved by the AREA PRESIDENCY, called and set apart by the mission president, and sustained by a vote at district conference or district general priesthood meeting. He serves with two counselors and generally serves with a district council of twelve Melchizedek Priesthood holders.

The word "district" is also used to describe certain other Church geographical divisions. For example, a temple district is made up of a number of stakes and/or missions whose members are encouraged to perform their TEMPLE ORDINANCES in a designated temple.

WILLIAM S. EVANS

DIVORCE

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints officially disapproves of divorce but does permit both divorce (the legal dissolution of a marriage bond) and annulment (a decree that a marriage was illegal or invalid) in civil marriages and "cancellation of sealing" in temple marriages.

Latter-day Saints believe that God intended marriage to be an eternal union when he commanded that a man and woman "shall be one flesh" (Gen. 2:24). However, under Jewish interpretation of the LAW OF MOSES, a man had the right to divorce his wife if she found disfavor in his eyes or for "uncleaness" (adultery or other reasons). The man was required to give his wife a written bill of divorcement, which freed her to remarry (Deut. 24:1–2), although in some cases he was not allowed to "put away" his wife (Deut. 22:29).

Jesus Christ condemned divorce under most circumstances, saying, "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" (Matt. 19:6). He explained that Moses had permitted divorce only "because of the hardness of your hearts" and because the people could not live the higher law of eternal marriage, "but from the beginning it was not so" (Matt. 19:8). To this he added, speaking in the Sermon on the Mount to those who would strive to be the light of the world and the children of God, "Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery" (Luke 16:18; Matt. 5:31–32; 3 Ne. 12:31–32).

The Doctrine and Covenants reiterates the teaching that marriage is ordained of God (D&C 49:15–16). The Church distinguishes between (1) civil marriages, which are valid for "time" (until divorce or the death of one spouse), and (2) temple marriages, or sealings, solemnized by proper ecclesiastical authority, which are binding for "time and all eternity" if the participants are obedient to the gospel (see MARRIAGE: ETERNAL). Legal annulments and divorces free the individuals married civilly for remarriage. Only the President of the Church can authorize a "cancellation of sealing" in temple marriages to free a worthy member to remarry in the temple. Without a cancellation of sealing, divorced members may remarry for time only (see SEALING: CANCELLATION OF).

For nineteenth-century Latter-day Saints, feelings about divorce were mixed. President Brigham Young did not approve of men divorcing their wives, but women were relatively free to dissolve an unhappy marriage, especially a polygamous union (see PLURAL MARRIAGE). Such divorces were handled in ecclesiastical COURTS because polygamous marriages were not considered legal by the government. Records of the number of divorces granted between 1847 and 1877 show a relatively high rate of divorce for polygamous marriages. This rate was high, not so much because polygamy was difficult, but because LDS society had not developed clear rules and expectations for the practice or the participants (Campbell and Campbell, p. 22).

Early Utah laws reflected general LDS beliefs and may have influenced the incidence of divorce. An 1851 territorial divorce law had lenient residency requirements and allowed divorce when it was clear "that the parties cannot live in peace and union together, and that their welfare requires a separation" (First Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, 1851, p. 83).

Current Church statistics on divorces among Latter-day Saints show somewhat fewer divorces among U.S. Mormons than among the general U.S. population. Data from a 1981 Church membership survey in the United States show that 16 percent of members (as compared to 23 percent of U.S. whites, statistically the most comparable group) had been divorced (Goodman and Heaton, p. 93). Latter-day Saints in Canada, Great Britain, Mexico, and Japan were more likely than their respective national populations to be divorced. However, converts who had divorced before joining the Church contributed to the relatively high proportion of divorced members outside the United States.

Recent U.S. data from the National Survey of Families and Households indicate that about 26 percent of both Latter-day Saints and non-LDS have experienced a divorce (Heaton et al., Table 2). If these trends continue, researchers project that about one-third of recent U.S. LDS marriages may end in divorce (Goodman and Heaton, p. 92). Nationally, experts predict that 50–60 percent of recent marriages will end in divorce or separation (Cherlin, p. 148).

Societal pressures and individual characteristics affect the likelihood of divorce. There will be a higher incidence of divorce among Latter-day Saints if they marry younger than age twenty or older than age thirty, have less than a college education, or marry outside the faith. These factors correlate with factors influencing divorce among U.S. citizens generally. In addition, divorce is more common when Latter-day Saints marry within the faith but do not have the marriage sealed in the temple. Goodman and Heaton found that such marriages are five times more likely to end in divorce than are temple marriages (p. 94). Those who choose a temple marriage usually are more committed to the Church and are required to comply with strict behavioral standards of chastity and fidelity to qualify for the temple marriage.

Severe personal and economic consequences usually accompany divorce among Latter-day Saints. LDS women are often not well prepared to support themselves and their children, and men may pay little in child support or alimony. About one-third of female-headed LDS households, a majority of which were the result of divorce, are living in poverty, despite a high rate of employment among single mothers (Goodman and Heaton, pp. 101, 104).

Divorced Latter-day Saints have lower religious participation than married members. They attend Church less often, and they pray, pay tithing, and hold Church callings less frequently than married members. These may be symptomatic of both the causes and the consequences of divorce.

Divorced Latter-day Saints are also more likely to remarry than the general divorced U.S. population. More than three-fourths of divorced Mormons probably will remarry (Goodman and Heaton).

After the divorce of their parents, most LDS children live with their mothers. They attend Church less frequently than children in two-parent households, even when the custodial parent attends regularly. Church researchers estimate that one-third of LDS children in the United States will live with a single or remarried parent.

Twentieth-century Church leaders speak of divorce as a threat to the family. In the April 1969 general conference, President David O. MCKAY declared, "Christ's ideal pertaining to marriage is the unbroken home, and conditions that cause divorce are violations of his divine teachings. Except in cases of infidelity or other extreme conditions, the Church frowns upon divorce" (IE 72 [June 1969]:2–5). President Spencer W. KIMBALL said that relatively few divorces are justifiable. He also told members that divorce frequently results from selfishness and other sins of one or both spouses (Kimball, 1975, p. 6). Other Church leaders also emphasize selfishness and mention additional causes of divorce, such as poor choice of a marriage partner, infidelity, lack of understanding of the divine nature of marriage, poor financial management, and lack of continued marital enrichment. "The current philosophy—get a divorce if it doesn't work out—handicaps a marriage from the beginning" (Haight, p. 12).

Church leaders urge members to prepare for marriage, marry within the faith, marry in the temple, live righteously and nurture their marriage relationships, pray for guidance, and counsel with each other and with priesthood leaders to resolve differences and deter divorce. Priesthood leaders are advised to help members strengthen their marriages but, when necessary, to permit divorce and to determine whether disciplinary action should be taken against any spouse guilty of moral transgression, such as infidelity or abuse. Priesthood leaders are to "cast out" (i.e., excommunicate) unrepentant adulterers from among the Saints, but to accept the victims of divorce (D&C 42:74–77).

Church members who are divorced and the children of divorced parents sometimes report feelings of isolation or lack of acceptance because of the strong orientation toward two-parent families in the Church (Hulse, p. 17). Church leaders admonish all members to be sensitive to the needs of people in difficult circumstances and to offer help and appropriate encouragement and compassionate service wherever possible.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Campbell, Eugene E., and Bruce L. Campbell. "Divorce Among Mormon Polygamists: Extent and Explanations." Utah Historical Quarterly 46 (Winter 1978):4–23.
- Cherlin, Andrew. "Recent Changes in American Fertility, Marriage and Divorce." ANNALS, AAPSS 510 [July 1990]:148.
- Foster, Lawrence. "A Little-Known Defense of Polygamy from the Mormon Press in 1842." Dialogue 9 (Winter 1974):21–34.
- . Religion and Sexuality: Three American Communal Experiments of the Nineteenth Century. New York, 1981.
- Goodman, Kristen L., and Tim B. Heaton. "LDS Church Members in the U.S. and Canada: A Demographic Profile." AMCAP Journal 12 (1986):88–107.
- Haight, David B. "Marriage and Divorce." Ensign 14 (May 1984):12.
- Heaton, Tim B., and Kristen L. Goodman. "Religion and Family Formation." Review of Religious Research 26 (June 1985):343–59.
- Heaton, Tim B., et al. "In Search of a Peculiar People: Are Mormon Families Really Different?" Meeting of the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion, October 1989, Table 2.
- Hulse, Cathy. "On Being Divorced." Ensign 16 (Mar. 1986):17.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "The Time to Labor is Now." Ensign 5 (Nov. 1975):6.
- . Marriage. Salt Lake City, 1978.

KRISTEN L. GOODMAN

DOCTRINE

[This entry consists of five articles:

- Meaning, Source, and History of Doctrine
- Distinctive Teachings
- LDS Doctrine Compared with Other Christian Doctrines
- Harmonization of Paradox
- Treatises on Doctrine

For related articles, see, generally, Articles of Faith; Gospel; Jesus Christ; and Plan of Salvation. See also Intellectual History and Smith, Joseph: Teachings of. For articles of a philosophical nature, see Epistemology; Ethics; Knowledge; Metaphysics; Philosophy; Reason and Revelation; Theology; and Truth, among others.]

MEANING, SOURCE, AND HISTORY OF DOCTRINE

MEANING OF DOCTRINE. The word "doctrine" in the scriptures means "a teaching" as well as "that which is taught." Most often in the Church it refers to the teachings or doctrine of Jesus Christ, understood in a rather specific sense. Scripturally, then, the term "doctrine" means the core message of Jesus Christ—that Jesus is the Messiah, the Redeemer. All other teachings are subordinate to those by which all people "know how to come unto Christ and be saved"—that is, to the "points of doctrine," such as faith, repentance, baptism, and receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost. At one time, stressing the preeminence and foundational nature of this message, Jesus taught, "And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock" (3 Ne. 11:40).

In the King James Version (KJV) of the Old Testament, the word "doctrine" occurs six times (Deut. 32:2; Job 11:4; Prov. 4:2; Isa. 28:9, 29:24; Jer. 10:8), usually as a translation of the Hebrew word leqakh, meaning "instruction" or, more literally, "what is to be received." In the KJV New Testament it is used some fifty times, most often in reference to the teaching or instruction of Jesus Christ, less frequently to the teachings of others.

The "doctrine of Jesus Christ," which the Savior's listeners found "astonishing" (Matt. 7:28) and "new" (Mark 1:27) and which he attributed to the Father (John 7:16–19), is synonymous with his central message, the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST. In Paul's words, it was the good news that the kingdom of God is at hand and that God "hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 5:18).

The apostles, following the death and resurrection of the Savior, continued to teach this essential message (Acts 13:12; 1 Tim. 6:1). They used the word "doctrine" most often in reference to what a person must believe and do in order to be saved (Acts 2:41–47; 1 Tim. 4:16; Heb. 6:1–3).

Most occurrences of the term "doctrine" in the New Testament are in the singular and refer to the "doctrine of Jesus Christ." The plural "doctrines" usually refers to the teachings of men and devils, false and vain teachings contrary to or denying the Savior's "doctrine." Jesus' message comes from the Father and has its content in Jesus Christ, the Messiah and Redeemer, the way of salvation. The "doctrine" of Jesus Christ is the foundation the strong orientation toward two-parent families in the Church (Hulse, p. 17). Church leaders admonish all members to be sensitive to the needs of people in difficult circumstances and to offer help and appropriate encouragement and compassionate service wherever possible.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Campbell, Eugene E., and Bruce L. Campbell. "Divorce Among Mormon Polygamists: Extent and Explanations." Utah Historical Quarterly 46 (Winter 1978):4–23.
- Cherlin, Andrew. "Recent Changes in American Fertility, Marriage and Divorce." ANNALS, AAPSS 510 [July 1990]:148.
- Foster, Lawrence. "A Little-Known Defense of Polygamy from the Mormon Press in 1842." Dialogue 9 (Winter 1974):21–34.
- . Religion and Sexuality: Three American Communal Experiments of the Nineteenth Century. New York, 1981.
- Goodman, Kristen L., and Tim B. Heaton. "LDS Church Members in the U.S. and Canada: A Demographic Profile." AMCAP Journal 12 (1986):88–107.
- Haight, David B. "Marriage and Divorce." Ensign 14 (May 1984):12.
- Heaton, Tim B., and Kristen L. Goodman. "Religion and Family Formation." Review of Religious Research 26 (June 1985):343–59.
- Heaton, Tim B., et al. "In Search of a Peculiar People: Are Mormon Families Really Different?" Meeting of the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion, October 1989, Table 2.
- Hulse, Cathy. "On Being Divorced." Ensign 16 (Mar. 1986):17.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "The Time to Labor is Now." Ensign 5 (Nov. 1975):6.
- . Marriage. Salt Lake City, 1978.

KRISTEN L. GOODMAN

DOCTRINE

[This entry consists of five articles:

- Meaning, Source, and History of Doctrine
- Distinctive Teachings
- LDS Doctrine Compared with Other Christian Doctrines
- Harmonization of Paradox
- Treatises on Doctrine

For related articles, see, generally, Articles of Faith; Gospel; Jesus Christ; and Plan of Salvation. See also Intellectual History and Smith, Joseph: Teachings of. For articles of a philosophical nature, see Epistemology; Ethics; Knowledge; Metaphysics; Philosophy; Reason and Revelation; Theology; and Truth, among others.]

MEANING, SOURCE, AND HISTORY OF DOCTRINE

MEANING OF DOCTRINE. The word "doctrine" in the scriptures means "a teaching" as well as "that which is taught." Most often in the Church it refers to the teachings or doctrine of Jesus Christ, understood in a rather specific sense. Scripturally, then, the term "doctrine" means the core message of Jesus Christ—that Jesus is the Messiah, the Redeemer. All other teachings are subordinate to those by which all people "know how to come unto Christ and be saved"—that is, to the "points of doctrine," such as faith, repentance, baptism, and receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost. At one time, stressing the preeminence and foundational nature of this message, Jesus taught, "And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock" (3 Ne. 11:40).

In the King James Version (KJV) of the Old Testament, the word "doctrine" occurs six times (Deut. 32:2; Job 11:4; Prov. 4:2; Isa. 28:9, 29:24; Jer. 10:8), usually as a translation of the Hebrew word leqakh, meaning "instruction" or, more literally, "what is to be received." In the KJV New Testament it is used some fifty times, most often in reference to the teaching or instruction of Jesus Christ, less frequently to the teachings of others.

The "doctrine of Jesus Christ," which the Savior's listeners found "astonishing" (Matt. 7:28) and "new" (Mark 1:27) and which he attributed to the Father (John 7:16–19), is synonymous with his central message, the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST. In Paul's words, it was the good news that the kingdom of God is at hand and that God "hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 5:18).

The apostles, following the death and resurrection of the Savior, continued to teach this essential message (Acts 13:12; 1 Tim. 6:1). They used the word "doctrine" most often in reference to what a person must believe and do in order to be saved (Acts 2:41–47; 1 Tim. 4:16; Heb. 6:1–3).

Most occurrences of the term "doctrine" in the New Testament are in the singular and refer to the "doctrine of Jesus Christ." The plural "doctrines" usually refers to the teachings of men and devils, false and vain teachings contrary to or denying the Savior's "doctrine." Jesus' message comes from the Father and has its content in Jesus Christ, the Messiah and Redeemer, the way of salvation. The "doctrine" of Jesus Christ is the foundation upon which all other teachings, principles, and practices rest.

The Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants use the word “doctrine” in the same way. In the singular it always refers to the “doctrine of Jesus Christ” or to the “points of his doctrine” and means “that which will ensure the salvation of those who accept and act upon it.” In the plural, it refers to the false teachings of devils or others (2 Ne. 3:12; 28:9; D&C 46:7). The Book of Mormon uses “doctrine” in this special sense as the “doctrine of Jesus Christ” or the gospel (twenty-eight times). Jesus attributed his teaching to the Father: “This is my doctrine, . . . that the Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent and believe in me. And whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God” (3 Ne. 11:32–33). Later he declared, “This is the gospel which I have given unto you—that I came into the world to do the will of the Father, . . . and my Father sent me that I might be lifted up upon the cross; . . . that whoso repenteth and is baptized in my name shall be filled; and if he endureth to the end, behold, him will I hold guiltless before the Father at that day when I shall stand to judge the world” (3 Ne. 27:13–16; cf. D&C 76:40–42).

Thus, the “doctrine of Jesus Christ” is the only teaching that can properly be called “doctrine.” It is fixed and unchanging. It cannot be modified or contradicted, but merely amplified as additional truths that deepen understanding and appreciation of its meaning are revealed. It is the basis on which the test of faith is made, and the rock or foundation of all other revealed teachings, principles, and practices.

Some of these other teachings comprise what is sometimes referred to as the PLAN OF SALVATION, which is understood as the larger historical setting in which the “doctrine of Jesus Christ” is situated and hence best understood. This is the plan worked out by the Father from the beginning, centering on the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ as the necessary means by which all individuals are saved and exalted. All other revealed teachings are either aspects of the doctrine of Jesus Christ or extensions, elaborations, or appendages of it. The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught, “The fundamental principles of our religion are the testimony of the Apostles and Prophets, concerning Jesus Christ, that He died, was buried, and rose again the third day, and ascended unto heaven; and all other things which pertain to our religion are only appendages to it” (TPJS, p. 121).

Some of the “appendages” that are explicitly identified in the scriptures as part of the doctrine of Jesus Christ are (1) faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God; (2) repentance of all sins; (3) baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; (4) the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying-on of hands by those in AUTHORITY; (5) enduring in righteousness to the end; and (6) the resurrection of all human beings to be judged by Christ (3 Ne. 9:1–16; 11:23–39; 19:7–28; 27:13–21; D&C 10:62–69; 33:10–15; 39:5–6; 76:40–43). Additional teachings, or “things we know” (D&C 20:17), that are closely associated with this foundation include knowledge about the nature of GOD, the CREATION and the FALL OF ADAM, AGENCY, continuing REVELATION, an open CANON and the continual search for the truth of all things, PREMORTAL LIFE, the CATHERING OF ISRAEL, the role of a COVENANT people, sharing the gospel, HOPE and CHARITY, the establishment of ZION, the second coming of Christ, Christ’s reign on earth for a thousand years, TEMPLE ORDINANCES for the living and the dead, the preaching of the gospel in the postearth SPIRIT WORLD, the need for PRIESTHOOD, degrees of glory in the hereafter, ETERNAL MARRIAGE, and the concept of ultimate EXALTATION in the presence of God to share his glory and life.

In addition to its scriptural use, the word “doctrine” has a broad meaning in Mormon vernacular, where it is used to mean virtually everything that is, or has been, taught or believed by the Latter-day Saints. In this sense, doctrinal teachings answer a host of questions. Some relate closely to the core message of the gospel of Jesus Christ; others are farther removed and unsystematically lap over into such disciplines as history, psychology, philosophy, science, politics, business, and economics. Some of these beliefs qualify as official doctrine and are given to the Saints as counsel, exhortation, reproof, and instruction (2 Tim. 3:16). Continual effort is made to harmonize and implement these principles and doctrine into a righteous life. Other teachings, ones that lack official or authoritative standing, may also be widespread among Church members at any given time.

SOURCE OF DOCTRINE. God is the source of doctrine. It is not devised or developed by man. It is based on eternal truth and is revealed by God to man. It can be properly understood only by revelation through the Spirit of God (1 Cor. 2:11–14; Jacob 4:8).

God dispenses eternal truths “line upon line, precept upon precept” (2 Ne. 28:30). At times, he has revealed the fulness of the gospel, and those who have accepted and lived it were received into his presence. When people have ignored or rejected his gospel, God has on occasion withheld his Spirit, and people have had to live in a state of spiritual darkness (see APOSTASY).

God reveals as much light as humankind is willing to abide. Hence, varying amounts of true doctrine have existed on the earth at different periods of time, and people on earth during the same era have enjoyed differing amounts of truth. In this sense, there can be said to be a history of doctrine—that is, an account of how, over time, humankind has either grown or declined in the knowledge of the things of God, man, and the world. Joseph Smith taught, “This is the principle on which the government of heaven is conducted—by revelation adapted to the circumstances in which the children of the kingdom are placed” (TPJS, p. 256).

Many factors influence how much God reveals, to whom, and under what circumstances. These include (1) who takes the opportunity to ask the Father in the name of Christ; (2) how much faith those seeking knowledge have; (3) what they ask for; (4) what is good for them to receive (D&C 18:18); (5) how willing they are to obey what is given (Alma 12:9–11); (6) what the will and wisdom of God require, for he gives “all that he seeth fit that they should have” (Alma 29:8); (7) whether the faith of people needs to be tested (Mormon was about to write more, but “the Lord forbade it, saying: I will try the faith of my people” [3 Ne. 26:8–11]); and (8) how spiritually prepared people are to receive the revelation (for example, Jesus taught through PARABLES in order to protect those who were not ready to understand [Luke 8:10; D&C 19:22]). The eternal truths constituting the gospel do not change, and eventually all who are exalted in the kingdom of God will understand them and apply them fully. However, mankind’s knowledge and understanding of these truths change, as do the policies and practices appropriate to concurrent levels of understanding and obedience.

Inasmuch as God’s house “is a house of order . . . and not a house of confusion” (D&C 132:8), there must be one who can speak for God for the whole Church and also settle differences. In The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the living prophet is the only one authorized to “receive revelations and commandments” binding on the entire Church (D&C 28:1–7; 43:1–7; 128:11). From the time the Church was organized, there has been—and always will be—“a prophet, recognized of God and his people, who will continue to interpret the mind and will of the Lord” (Spencer W. Kimball, Ensign 7 [May 1977]:78). Ordinarily, the prophet acts in concert with his counselors in the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES—those who hold, with the Prophet, the “keys of the kingdom” (D&C 81:2; 112:30)—with the principle of quorum unanimity and COMMON CONSENT of the members of the Church giving power and validity to their decisions (D&C 26:2; 107:27–31). Acting collectively and under the inspiration of God, these leaders are authorized to determine the position of the Church at any given time on matters of doctrine, policy, and practice. This is the proper channel through which changes come. Latter-day Saints believe that God “will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God” (A of F 9). It is expected that such revelations will involve an expanded understanding of doctrine.

Many individuals write or preach their views. Some, by study and obedience, may learn truths that go beyond the stated position of the Church, but this does not authorize them to speak officially for the Church or to present their views as binding on the Church. There are many subjects about which the scriptures are not clear and about which the Church has made no official pronouncements. In such matters, one can find differences of opinion among Church members and leaders. Until the truth of these matters is made known by revelation, there is room for different levels of understanding and interpretation of unsettled issues.

HISTORY OF DOCTRINE. The doctrine of the Church was revealed principally through the Prophet Joseph Smith, though subsequent additions and clarifications have been made. These truths are part of the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, known on earth in earlier times but now lost, necessitating a restoration by revelation.

The Prophet Joseph Smith received and shared his doctrinal understanding line upon line, from the time of his FIRST VISION in 1820 to his death in 1844. In many instances, his own understanding was progressively enhanced. In other matters, he learned certain principles early but only taught them as his followers were able and willing to accept them. Concerning the hereafter, for example, he said, “I could explain a hundred fold more than I ever have of the glories of the kingdoms manifested to me in the vision, were I permitted, and were the people prepared to receive them” (TPJS, p. 305).

There is no simple pattern or predictable sequence in the growth of Joseph Smith’s knowledge. Much of his doctrinal understanding gradually unfolded through revelations that he received in response to various contemporary issues and circumstances facing the infant but quickly expanding Church. Other teachings emerged quite spontaneously. His perceptions grew in completeness and detail, but they did not lose their historical footing in past dispensations or their undeviating goal of bringing people to Christ.

One important catalyst in this process was Joseph Smith’s systematic examination of the Bible (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]), which yielded inspired biblical interpretations and textual restorations. Also, many sections of the Doctrine and Covenants are revelations answering questions that arose in this process (e.g., D&C 76, 91, 132).

Joseph’s teachings about the Godhead illustrate the previous points. At first, he simply taught that God the Father and the Son were separate personages, without mentioning explicitly the nature of their bodies, even though 3 Nephi 11:15 (translated in 1829) made it clear that Jesus’ resurrected body was tangible. Later, in Nauvoo, Joseph declared that “there is no other God in heaven but that God who has flesh and bones” (TPJS, p. 181, a comment made in 1841 on the biblical text in John 5:26), and that both the Father and the Son have bodies of “flesh and bones as tangible as man’s” (D&C 130:22). Two months before his death, Joseph, for the first time in a recorded public sermon—indeed, in his crowning sermon about the nature of God, the KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE—taught that God is an exalted man. And two weeks before his death he spoke of a “plurality of Gods,” expanding one’s understanding in Genesis 1 of the Hebrew plural elohim, or “gods” (Joseph had studied Hebrew in 1835), explaining that “there are Gods many and Lords many, but to us only one, and we are to be in subjection to that one,” and declaring that for fifteen years he had always preached “the plurality of Gods” (TPJS, pp. 370-71; cf. 1 Cor. 8:5-6).

Similarly, Joseph’s teachings relating to such things as the nature of man, his premortal existence, his agency, and his eternal potential of GODHOOD also gradually unfolded to him and to those around him. He learned in December 1830 that “all the children of men” were created “spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth” (Moses 3:5). A revelation in 1833 indicated that a component of each individual existed before his or her spiritual creation, a component called INTELLIGENCE, which “was not created or made, neither indeed can be” (D&C 93:29). During the period 1835-1842, while translating the book of Abraham, Joseph Smith learned that Abraham had seen into the premortal world and beheld myriads of “intelligences that were organized before the world was,” in the presence of God (Abr. 3:22). Many were “noble and great” and chose to follow Christ. To this was added in 1841 that “at the first organization in heaven we were all present, and saw the Savior chosen and appointed and the plan of salvation made, and we sanctioned it” (TPJS, p. 181).

The Prophet’s teachings on the atonement of Jesus Christ, creation, foreordination, salvation for the dead, priesthood, temple ordinances, eternal marriage, exaltation, and many other subjects can all be shown to have followed similar courses of development during his ministry (Cannon, Dahl, and Welch).

By 1844, the basic doctrinal structure of the Church was in place. Since that time, however, there have been official pronouncements clarifying doctrinal understanding or adapting doctrinal applications to particular circumstances. Some are now included in the Doctrine and Covenants; others are published as official messages of the First Presidency (cf. MFP). Over the years, various procedures and practices have received greater or lesser emphasis as changes have occurred in economic conditions (see CONSECRATION; TITHING; UNITED ORDER; WELFARE), political circumstances (see CHURCH AND STATE; POLITICS; WAR AND PEACE), intellectual atmosphere (see INTELLECTUAL HISTORY), Church growth (see ORGANIZATION), and many other areas. The essential doctrine of the Church, however, has remained constant amid such change.

Certain Church leaders have written extensively of their understanding of the doctrines of the Church and, as a consequence, have had a significant influence on what many members believe (see TREATISES ON DOCTRINE below). These have included Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, James E. Talmage, John A. Widtsoe, B. H. Roberts, Joseph Fielding Smith, and Bruce R. McConkie. Their writings evidence some differences of opinion on unsettled issues, just as different schools of thought exist among Church members in general on certain issues. Examples include efforts to reconcile current scientific teachings and revealed truths, to ponder the nature of uncreated intelligence, and to define eternal progression. Latter-day Saints have faith that answers will eventually be revealed, and are urged, in the meantime, to seek knowledge by all available means and to show tolerance toward those espousing differing opinions on such subjects.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q.; Larry E. Dahl; and John W. Welch. "The Restoration of Major Doctrines Through Joseph Smith: The Godhead, Mankind, and the Creation." Ensign 19 (Jan. 1989):27–33; and "The Restoration of Major Doctrines Through Joseph Smith: Priesthood, the Word of God, and the Temple." Ensign 19 (Feb. 1989):7–13.

Lyon, T. Edgar. "Doctrinal Development of the Church During the Nauvoo Sojourn, 1839–1846." BYU Studies 15 (Summer 1975):435–46.

M. GERALD BRADFORD
LARRY E. DAHL

DISTINCTIVE TEACHINGS

Few religious doctrines are unique in the strict sense, but many are rare enough to be considered distinctive features of this or that religion or denomination. Several doctrines of the Latter-day Saints are distinctive in this sense, although in most cases other Christians have at some time held identical or similar beliefs. Latter-day Saints insist that their distinctive doctrines were revealed by God in earlier DISPENSATIONS headed by Adam, Enoch, Noah, and so forth down to the time of Christ. Thus, while they may be distinct among modern denominations, these newly revealed doctrines were shared with the one true Church of Jesus Christ in ancient times.

Unique to LDS theology in modern times is a view of the GODHEAD as consisting of three separate beings, two possessing bodies of flesh and bone and one possessing a spirit body. An official declaration concerning the Godhead states: "The Father has a body of flesh and bones as tangible as man's; the Son also; but the Holy Ghost has not a body of flesh and bones, but is a personage of Spirit" (D&C 130:22). Latter-day Saints take the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, in a literal, anthropomorphic sense, attributing to God both a human form and emotions. They accept both a "oneness" and "threeness" of the Godhead as taught in the Bible. However, they reject the traditional doctrine of the Trinity, and believe instead that the Godhead is one in mind, purpose, and testimony, but three in number. Thus, they believe that God is spirit in the sense that he is infused with spirit, and in the sense that the Holy Ghost is a spirit, but they do not limit the Father or the Son to incorporeality.

Latter-day Saints identify Jehovah, the God of the Old Testament, specifically as Jesus Christ. They believe that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the God who walked with Enoch and who talked with Moses on Mount Sinai, was the pre-mortal Jesus Christ, or God the Son, acting as the agent of his Father.

Latter-day Saints also have distinct doctrines about the nature of the universe and how it began. Because they believe that spirit and matter are actually the same thing in different degrees of refinement (see D&C 131:2), Latter-day Saints perceive the universe in terms of two realms, the physical and the spiritual, but these are not antithetical. They deny the spirit/matter dichotomy and insist that both spirit and matter make up a single eternal universe.

Moreover, Latter-day Saints understand "in the beginning" to mean "in the beginning of our part of the story," or in the premortal state "when God began to create our world." They do not believe in an absolute beginning, for in LDS theology spirit, matter, and element are all eternal. Creations may progress from lower to higher orders, and it is God's work and glory to bring this development about (Moses 1:39), but there never was a time when matter did not exist. Latter-day Saints reject the common idea of an ex nihilo creation—that God made everything that exists out of nonexistence. They teach instead that God created everything out of pre-existing but unorganized materials. He organized pre-existing elements to create worlds, and he organized pre-existing intelligence to beget spirits. The spirits of all human beings existed as God's spirit children before their mortal birth on earth.

LDS eschatology also offers several distinct doctrines. For example, Latter-day Saints believe in a temporary state between DEATH and RESURRECTION that the scriptures call the spirit world. This temporary spirit world includes Paradise, where the spirits of the righteous await their glorious resurrection, and Hell, where the spirits of the wicked suffer for their sins while they await resurrection to a lesser degree of glory (Alma 40:11–14; cf. Luke 16:22–23). LDS doctrine teaches that every human being will be resurrected. Many were resurrected soon after Jesus' resurrection; the remaining righteous will be resurrected at the second coming of Christ, and the wicked at the end of Christ's one-thousand-year reign on earth. Hell is a temporary condition, which will yield up its captive spirits at the Resurrection, just as death will yield up its bodies (2 Ne. 9:10–14; cf. Rev. 20:13–14). In the Resurrection all suffering comes to an end (D&C 76:84, 88–89), and all human beings except the sons of perdition will be saved in one of three kingdoms, or degrees of glory: the celestial, the terrestrial, or the telestial (D&C 76:1–19; 88:29–32; cf. 1 Cor. 15:4–42).

Distinctive LDS doctrines concerning the nature of the Church include the belief that the Church of Jesus Christ has been on earth many times, beginning with father Adam, in much the same form it has now and with the same doctrines. The Church and gospel of Jesus Christ are eternal. They were revealed to the people of Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jared, Lehi, and others. Adam knew the gospel, was baptized by immersion in the name of Jesus Christ, and received the gift of the Holy Ghost, just as the Saints in all other dispensations. At times humanity has rejected or distorted the gospel and fallen into apostasy. But eventually the gospel has been restored to its original purity through prophets called to begin a new dispensation. Most recently this same eternal gospel has been restored through the modern Prophet Joseph SMITH. Thus the establishment of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was not the result of a long religious evolution, nor was it merely the restoration of primitive Christianity, but it was the final restoration to earth of an eternal gospel of Jesus Christ revealed to humanity many times since the beginning.

What distinguishes “the true and living Church” from all other churches is possession of the priesthood keys of the kingdom of heaven (see Matt. 16:19). The belief that possession of the apostolic keys is necessary in the true Church is not unique to Latter-day Saints, but the insistence that one of those keys necessarily bestows the gifts of prophecy and revelation is. To hold the keys of the kingdom as Peter did is to be a prophet, seer, and revelator like Peter. And in order to be “true and living” a church must receive these apostolic keys as exercised and transmitted through the hands of its living prophets. As a tree is alive only when its branches are connected to its trunk and roots, so a church is alive only when it is connected by an open channel of revelation to its divine source. Where ecclesiastical leaders have no such prophetic link with the heavens, a church may even teach true doctrines, but it can not be “true and living” (see D&C 1:30; 27:12–13), for it lacks the necessary communication with its own divine roots.

With such emphasis placed on the need for living prophets, it follows that the word of God is primarily the word as spoken to and communicated by the prophets. The written words, the scriptures, are always important as historical precedent and as a record of what the Lord has said to his people in the past, but they are supplemental and secondary to what he may say now through his living prophet. Since Latter-day Saints believe in the genuine gift of prophecy, it follows that the revelations received by modern prophets should be esteemed as highly as those received by ancient ones. Hence, the LDS canon of scripture can never be closed: “We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God” (A of F 9).

The Latter-day Saints are also unique in several aspects of their concept of salvation. While most of the LDS doctrines would be familiar to other Christians—for example, the doctrines of the Atonement, justification, sanctification, and grace—there are several distinct features found among the Latter-day Saints. They make a distinction between generic “salvation,” which to them means that through the atonement of Christ one is delivered from the grave and from the power of Satan and hell to enter a degree of glory, and “exaltation,” which means that through the atonement of Christ and personal obedience to the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ one is raised to the highest degree of glory to share the powers and privileges of God, to sit on his throne and reign in eternity (see D&C 76:1–119; 88:22–23; cf. Rev. 1:6; 3:21). To be exalted is to become like God (see DEIFICATION).

Faithful Latter-day Saints receive in the LDS temples the ordinances and knowledge necessary for celestial exaltation. One part of these sacred rites is called the temple ENDOWMENT because it constitutes a major part of the overwhelming gift extended to humanity through the atonement of Christ. Another temple ordinance is the SEALING of husbands and wives, parents and children into families that will endure for time and for eternity. The celestial kingdom will consist of God's heavenly family linked together in love as husbands and wives, parents and children, and brothers and sisters forever. As single individuals, human beings may be saved in lesser degrees of glory, but only families can be exalted.

Not everyone has had the opportunity in mortal life to hear the gospel of Christ and receive all the ordinances of exaltation. Latter-day Saints teach that God has provided for all to hear the gospel so they can accept or reject its blessings. Those who do not have that opportunity in mortality will receive it in the spirit world. The New Testament teaches that Jesus himself visited the spirit world after his death on the cross and preached to the spirits there: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison" (1 Pet. 3:18–19). The purpose of his preaching ministry to the spirits is revealed in the next chapter: "For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit" (1 Pet. 4:6). This doctrine has been amplified and explained in latter-day revelation (D&C 137, 138; see SALVATION FOR THE DEAD).

Other areas in which the views of the Latter-day Saints differ noticeably from those of the contemporary religious world are the concepts of TIME AND ETERNITY, the LIGHT OF CHRIST, the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, the positive estimate of the CREATION and of the physical EARTH, the eternal necessity of ORDINANCES, the centrality of the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT for modern Christians, and the concept of heaven as a CELESTIAL KINGDOM located upon this renewed and glorified earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Keller, Roger R. Reformed Christians and Mormon Christians: Let's Talk. Ann Arbor, Mich., 1986.
- Madsen, Truman G. "Are Christians Mormon?" BYU Studies 15 (Autumn 1974):73–94.
- McConkie, Bruce R. MD. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Robinson, Stephen E. Are Mormons Christians?, chaps. 6–8. Salt Lake City, 1991.
- Talmage, James E. AF. Salt Lake City, 1924.

ALMA P. BURTON

LDS DOCTRINE COMPARED WITH OTHER CHRISTIAN DOCTRINES

As biblical scholar W. D. Davies once pointed out, LDS doctrine can be described as biblical Christianity separated from hellenized Christianity, a conjunction of first-century Judaism and Christianity. Latter-day Saints accept the BIBLE and its apostolic teachings as God's word, but reject many later interpretations of the Bible that express Greek philosophical concerns—they accept John and Paul but reject Augustine. For example, Latter-day Saints accept both the threeness of God and the oneness of God as biblical teachings. The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are three divine personages who together constitute one GODHEAD. But Mormons reject the attempts of postbiblical, nonapostolic Christianity to define how the oneness and the threeness of God are related. They accept the biblical doctrine of the Trinity, but reject the philosophical doctrine of the Trinity as defined at the Council of Nicea and later. In short, Latter-day Saints reject the AUTHORITY and conclusions of theologians and philosophers to define or interpret what the Bible, apostles, or prophets have not. They accept biblical Christianity, but not its extension in extrabiblical CREEDS and traditions.

To those Christians who have welded the Bible to its later interpretation and cannot separate Plato and Augustine from Peter and Paul, and cannot think of "true" Christianity in first-century categories, LDS doctrine may seem inelastic in separating biblical texts from their later "traditional" interpretation. Nevertheless, Latter-day Saints feel that New Testament Saints would have been just as uncomfortable with the philosophical creeds of later Christianity as they themselves are.

LDS rejection of much postbiblical Christianity is based on belief in an ancient APOSTASY that is both predicted and chronicled in the New Testament (e.g., 2 Thes. 2:1–5; 3 Jn. 9–10). Apostolic authority ceased just after the New Testament period, and without apostolic leadership and authority the Church was soon overwhelmed by alien intellectual and cultural pressures. The simple affirmations of biblical faith were turned into the complex propositions of THEOLOGY. Though subsequent churches were still “Christian,” in the LDS view they no longer possessed the fulness of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST or apostolic authority. Latter-day Saints would agree with Catholics and “high church” Protestants that apostolic authority is essential in the true church but would also agree with other Protestants that apostolic authority was lacking in medieval orthodoxy. A close parallel is presented by Protestant rejection of Roman Catholic claims to binding apostolic authority. While Latter-day Saints trace the Apostasy to roughly the second century and reject subsequent orthodoxy, most Protestants would place it somewhere nearer the fifteenth century and then reject subsequent Catholicism.

Protestants who denied the necessity of apostolic succession, or who did not believe its links were severed by the Reformation, generally held that the fulness of the gospel could be achieved by reforming the Roman Church. Latter-day Saints, who insist on the necessity of apostolic succession but believe its links were severed early, see a reformation as inadequate for recovering the fulness of the gospel and reestablishing original Christianity. Only a total restoration of apostolic doctrines and authority could reestablish the pure Christianity of the first century. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints sees itself as constituting this Restoration.

LDS rejection of hellenistic philosophy in matters of doctrine accounts for many characteristic differences between Latter-day Saints and other Christians. For example, Latter-day Saints reject the Platonic spirit–matter dichotomy, which holds that spirit and matter are opposed and inimical to each other. They believe instead that spirit is refined matter and that both spirit and matter are eternal, being neither created nor destroyed. The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that “there is no such thing as immaterial matter. All spirit is matter, but it is more fine or pure, and can only be discerned by purer eyes” (D&C 131:7).

Thus, for Latter-day Saints there is no ultimate incompatibility between spirit and matter or between the spiritual and the physical realms. In LDS theology, the physical elements are coeternal with God. The idea that physical matter is transitory, corrupt, or incompatible with spiritual or eternal life is rejected. Latter-day Saints usually define “spiritual” as “infused with spirit” rather than as “nonphysical.” This unitary understanding of spirit and matter allows them to accept the Father and the Son as the concrete, anthropomorphic beings represented in scripture and reject the definition of God as the abstract, “totally other” non-being of philosophical theology. For Latter-day Saints, God exists in the normal sense in association with time and space, rather than in the abstract Platonic sense of beyond time and space. The traditional disparagement of matter and of the physical state of being is not well grounded biblically, and Latter-day Saints believe it is a product of hellenistic thought. They also think the concept of a God “without body, parts or passions” dismisses too much of the biblical data or allegorizes it excessively.

Since Mormons believe that the elements are eternal, it follows that they deny the ex nihilo creation. Rather, the universe was created (organized) out of preexisting elements that God organized by imposing physical laws. The Prophet Joseph Smith also taught that intelligence is also eternal and uncreated: “The intelligence of spirits had no beginning, neither will it have an end. . . . Intelligence is eternal and exists upon a self-existent principle” (TPJS, pp. 353–54).

Just as God organized preexisting matter to create the universe, so he organized preexisting intelligence to create the spirits that eventually became human beings. Consequently, Latter-day Saints do not view God as the total cause of what human beings are. Human intelligence is uncreated by God, and therefore independent of his control. Thus Mormons insist that human beings are free agents in the fullest sense, and deny both the doctrines of prevenient and irresistible grace, which make God’s choice determinative for SALVATION or damnation. God will not coerce independent, self-existent wills. Though he desires the exaltation of all, and offers it equally to all, its achievement requires individual cooperation, a covenant relationship. In this way, LDS theology escapes the classical dilemma of predestination and theodicy imposed by believing that God created all things from nothing and is therefore solely responsible for the final products. Their radical doctrine of individual free agency also allows the Latter-day Saints to deny the theory of human depravity. The fall of Adam did not totally incapacitate humans from doing any good thing—they remain able to choose and to perform either good or evil. Moreover, Latter-day Saints accept the concept of the “fortunate Fall” (mea culpa). The Fall was a necessary step in the progress of humanity: “Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy” (2 Ne. 2:25).

A positive view of the physical universe and of man also allows Latter-day Saints to anticipate a physical afterlife, the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, a community of physically resurrected beings transformed and perfected. Unlike many ancient church fathers, they do not long to escape the realm of the flesh, but rather to sanctify it. Hence, in the LDS view, even the physical relationships of FAMILY and MARRIAGE can continue in the eternities in a sanctified state. Thus there is little asceticism and no CELIBACY in LDS theology, which sees in both of these tendencies a denial of the goodness of God’s physical creation (Gen. 1:31); and LDS theology avoids the traditional disparagement of the human body and the contempt for human SEXUALITY that are largely due to the neoplatonism of late antiquity.

While common ground for Latter-day Saints and other Christians is an acceptance of the Bible and its teachings, issues of interpretation aside, Mormonism agrees with “high church” orthodoxy against conservative Protestantism on the doctrine of the sufficiency of scripture. Though they accept the Bible, Latter-day Saints, like Roman Catholics and the Eastern Orthodox, for example, do not believe that the biblical text alone is sufficient for salvation. Biblical teaching, while true and accepted, has been imperfectly preserved and can be fully reconstituted only through supplemental REVELATION. This is not because New Testament Christianity was defective, but because New Testament Christianity is only partially preserved in the modern Bible. Those doctrines that were not preserved must be restored; consequently, Mormons deny both biblical inerrancy and sufficiency. Since the apostles and prophets of earliest Christianity received direct revelation from God (see, e.g., Acts 10:9–16, 28), Latter-day Saints believe that any church claiming the fulness of the gospel must also enjoy this gift.

This crucial principle of continuing revelation is illustrated in the experience of the Prophet Joseph Smith, whose visions and revelations form the foundation of LDS doctrine. As the magisterium of the church is fundamental for Roman Catholics, and the scriptures are the fontes for Protestants, for Latter-day Saints the highest authority in religious matters is continuing revelation from God given through the living APOSTLES and prophets of his Church, beginning with Joseph Smith and continuing to the present leadership.

Latter-day Saints insist that both the CANON of SCRIPTURE and the structure of theology are always open-ended, and can always be added upon by God through revelation to his PROPHETS (A of F 9). Through this means they have received clarification of biblical doctrines that are disputed in other denominations, for example, Christ’s ministry to the dead in 1 Peter 3:18 and 4:6 (see D&C 128; 137; 138). Also through modern revelation Latter-day Saints have received some distinctive doctrines that are not explicitly found in the Bible. In these cases modern revelation has not rehabilitated a doctrine that is unclear, but has restored a doctrine that was entirely lost.

Latter-day Saints share with most Christians the conviction that salvation comes only through the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ, which is representative, exemplary, and substitutionary in nature. Christ is the mediator of humanity to the Father instead of fallen Adam; he sets an example for humans to emulate; and he takes mankind’s place in suffering for sins.

Latter-day Saints are monophysite in their CHRISTOLOGY; that is, they believe Christ has only one nature, which is simultaneously both human and divine. This is possible because the human and the divine are not mutually exclusive categories in LDS thought, as in the duophysite christology of much orthodoxy. As Lorenzo SNOW said, “As man now is, God once was: As God now is, man may be” (Snow, p. 46). Most Christians would agree with the first half of this couplet as applied to the person of Christ, but Latter-day Saints apply it also to the Father. The second half of the couplet is more orthodox in the denominational sense than either Protestants or Catholics, for Latter-day Saints share the ancient biblical doctrine of DEIFICATION (apotheosis) with Eastern Orthodoxy. Several of early Christianity’s theologians said essentially the same thing as Lorenzo Snow. Irenaeus said, "If the word became a man, it was so men may become gods" (Against Heresies, 4. Pref), and Athanasius maintained that "[Christ] became man that we might be made divine" (On the Incarnation, 54). Yet Latter-day Saints combine both halves of the couplet to reach what they feel is the only possible conclusion—human and divine are not mutually exclusive categories. Mormons insist that the two categories are one: Humans are of the lineage of the gods. Latter-day Saints would agree entirely with C. S. Lewis in Mere Christianity:

He said (in the Bible) that we were "gods" and He is going to make good His words. If we let Him—for we can prevent Him, if we choose—He will make the feeblest and filthiest of us into a god or goddess, dazzling, radiant, immortal creature, pulsating all through with such energy and joy and wisdom and love as we cannot now imagine [p. 175].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Dodds, Erwin. Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety. New York, 1970.
- Keller, Roger. Reformed Christians and Mormon Christians: Let's Talk. Ann Arbor, Mich., 1986.
- Lash, Symeon. "Deification." In The Westminster Dictionary of Christian Theology, ed. A. Richardson and J. Bowden. Philadelphia, 1983.
- Madsen, Truman, ed. Reflections on Mormonism: Judaeo-Christian Parallels. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Robinson, Stephen E. Are the Mormons Christians? Salt Lake City, 1991.
- Snow, Eliza R. Biography and Family Record of Lorenzo Snow. Salt Lake City, 1884.

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

HARMONIZATION OF PARADOX

Because Latter-day Saints reject the influences of Neoplatonism on original Christian theology, they are not on the horns of the dilemmas posed by some of the paradoxes in traditional Christian theology. This is not to say, however, that LDS ethical life and religious thought are free of paradox. LDS perspective tends to harmonize many paradoxes through its views that opposition is necessary in all things and that God and mankind are in the same order of reality but at different stages of knowledge and progression.

As used in ordinary discourse, "paradox" usually refers to a statement that on its face is unbelievable because it is apparently self-contradictory or is contrary to well-established facts, common sense, or generally received belief. While many paradoxes are no doubt false, not all necessarily are. Indeed, in the history of human thought, many brash paradoxes have overthrown a generally received but false belief, eventually to become widely accepted themselves—"some time a paradox, but now time gives it proof" (Hamlet 3.1.115).

Classical Christian theology is in many ways paradoxical. This is often the result of the unstable theological blending that occurred in the early centuries of Christianity when (a) insights that came from personal Judeo-Christian revelation were (b) interpretatively recast within an impersonal Neoplatonic view of reality. To mention a few:

1. (a) The loving God who is profoundly touched by the feelings of our infirmities is (b) without passions or outside influences.
2. (a) The God who acts in human history and responds to personal prayers is (b) timeless and unchangeable.
3. (b) The God without body or parts became (a) embodied in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.
4. The God who is (b) absolutely unlimited and good, and who created all things out of nothing (a) created a world abounding with evils.
5. (a) The Godhead consists of three perfect and separate persons who (b) collectively constitute one metaphysical substance.

Latter-day Saint doctrine, while affirming (a) the Judeo-Christian dimensions of the foregoing propositions regarding God, rejects (b) the Neoplatonic framework and metaphysic within which Judeo-Christian revelation has historically been interpreted. Accordingly, LDS understanding of Christian doctrine does not manifest those paradoxes that are generated by the union of these two incompatible sets of beliefs.

Latter-day Saint thought builds bridges between entities and quantities that are normally thought to be incongruous (see METAPHYSICS). Reality is not seen as a dichotomy but as a graded continuum: Thus, SPIRIT is understood to be a form of MATTER, but a highly refined form; and TIME is part of eternity. A corporeal God is omnipresent through the light that emanates from him and that is in and through all things (D&C 88: 12–13).

In ethical discourse, the axiomatic and eternal principle of AGENCY demands that there be "an opposition in all things" (2 Ne. 2:11) to ensure that meaningful choices can be made—not only between good and evil but also from among an array of righteous alternatives (see ETHICS; EVIL; SUFFERING IN THE WORLD; THEODICY). Weakness exists that it may bring strength (Ether 12:27). Thus, Latter-day Saint moral life ranges between options that are often paradoxical: the imperatives of improving oneself or serving other people; spending time at home or rendering Church service; favoring individuality or institutionality; obtaining wealth or giving to the poor; finding one's life by losing it in service to others (Matt. 10:39).

Such tensions, however, do not impede LDS action, nor are they transcended through mysticism, irony, or resignation (whether optimistically or pessimistically). They are embraced in a series of interrelated gospel principles that guide LDS life, including

- personal revelation (by the Holy Ghost each individual can tell what leads to Christ [Moro. 7:12–13; 10:5–6])
- the mandate to act (knowledge of what is right comes by doing it [John 7:17])
- the making of voluntary covenants (people obligate themselves by what they agree to do)
- an extended concept of self (helping others is tantamount to helping oneself)
- the atonement of Jesus Christ (his judgment will encompass both divine grace and human works, retributive justice and compassionate mercy)
- the eternal relativity of kingdoms and progression (with all their differences, all people are on the same pathway to perfection).

For Latter-day Saints, the paradoxes of knowledge are generally resolved under the concept of "continuing revelation" (see EPISTEMOLOGY; REVELATION). While Latter-day Saints are inclined to hold that each truth is self-consistent and coherent with all other truth, they also acknowledge the imperfection of human understanding. Mortal attempts to comprehend or express divine truths are inherently liable to error for at least two reasons: (1) the linguistic-conceptual frameworks within which such facts are expressed and interpreted are culturally conditioned and manifestly inadequate; and (2) mankind's awareness of the facts is fragmentary and incomplete, "for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts" (Isa. 55:8–9), and in mortality "man doth not comprehend all the things which the Lord can comprehend" (Mosiah 4:9). But by revelation, human knowledge may increase: "No man knoweth of [God's] ways save it be revealed unto him" (Jacob 4:8). "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, . . . neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14).

Thus where definitively clear revelation appears to contradict generally received opinion, common sense, or well-established facts, Latter-day Saints give priority to revelation and trust that time will give proof to what now seems paradoxical or that within God's more complete comprehension of things there may be mediating principles by which two apparently conflicting partial truths may be reconciled. This trust and hope for further revelation quiet such unsearchable paradoxes as how God's complete knowledge can be reconciled with mankind's agency, how scriptural and scientific accounts of creation can be harmonized, or how, in general, study and faith, REASON AND REVELATION, symbolic vision and practical literal-mindedness can all be accommodated concurrently. LDS doctrine is resistant to extremes: Its authoritative-ness has not been transformed into abstractions or absolutes; nor have its revelations wandered into mysticism or vagueness. In such ways, the doctrines of the eternal gospel maintain their own set of tensions in a mortal world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hafen, Bruce C. "Love Is Not Blind: Some Thoughts for College Students on Faith and Ambiguity." In BYU Speeches of the Year, pp. 8–17. Provo, Utah, 1979.

DAVID L. PAULSEN

TREATISES ON DOCTRINE

Doctrinal works—that is, periodicals, tracts, and books—have been numerous in the LDS tradition, reflecting the lay character of the ministry, the large corpus of scripture, and continuing concern with right belief as well as right conduct.

Official letters, including doctrinal expositions, of the First Presidency are published in Messages of the First Presidency, ed. James R. Clark, 6 vols. (Salt Lake City, 1965–1975). Influential tracts and pamphlets have been compiled in Handbook of the Restoration and in Scrapbook of Mormon

Literature, comp. Ben E. Rich, 2 vols. (Chicago, n.d.).

In addition to volumes on Joseph Smith's teachings (TPJS, WJS), there are doctrinal statements in Journal of Discourses (1980). Compilations of discourses of the Presidents of the Church, all published in Salt Lake City, include Brigham Young, Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe (1954); John Taylor, The Gospel Kingdom, ed. G. Homer Durham (1987); Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, ed. G. Homer Durham (1946); Teachings of Lorenzo Snow, comp. Clyde J. Williams (1984); Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine (1939); Heber J. Grant, Gospel Standards (1941); George Albert Smith, Sharing the Gospel with Others (1948); David O. McKay, Gospel Ideals (1953); Joseph Fielding Smith, Doctrines of Salvation, comp. Bruce R. McConkie, 3 vols. (1954–1956); Harold B. Lee, Stand Ye in Holy Places and Ye Are the Light of the World (1974); Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball (1982); and Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson (1988).

Following is a list of books that have made significant contributions to the understanding of doctrine (unless otherwise noted, these works were published in Salt Lake City): Parley P. Pratt, A Voice of Warning (New York, 1837) and Key to Theology (1856); Orson Pratt, An Interesting Account of Several Remarkable Visions and of the Late Discovery of Ancient American Records (Edinburgh, 1840); Orson Spencer, Spencer's Letters (Liverpool and London, 1852); John Taylor, Mediation and Atonement (1882) and The Government of God (1884); Franklin D. Richards and James Little, A Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel (1882); B. H. Roberts, The Gospel (Liverpool, 1888), Mormon Doctrine of Deity and Jesus Christ: The Revelation of God (1903) and The Seventy's Course in Theology, 5 vols. (1907–1912); James E. Talmage, Articles of Faith (1899) and Jesus the Christ (1915); Orson F. Whitney, Gospel Themes (1914) and Saturday Night Thoughts (1921); Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine (1919); Brigham Young, Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe (1926); John A. Widtsoe, Priesthood and Church Government (1939), A Rational Theology (1945), and Evidences and Reconciliations, 3 vols. in 1 (1960); Joseph Smith, Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, comp. by Joseph Fielding Smith (1938); Orson Pratt, Orson Pratt's Works, ed. Parker P. Robison (1945), and Masterful Discourses of Orson Pratt, ed. N. B. Lundwall (1946); Milton R.

Hunter, The Gospel Through the Ages (1945); Daniel H. Ludlow, ed., Latter-day Prophets Speak (1948); J. Reuben Clark, Jr., On the Way to Immortality and Eternal Life (1949); Writings of Parley P. Pratt, ed. Parker P. Robison (1952); Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine (1958, rev. 1966); Spencer W. Kimball, The Miracle of Forgiveness (1969); and George Q. Cannon, Gospel Truth, ed. Jerreld Newquist, 2 vols. (1972, 1974).

Shorter treatises include Oliver Cowdery, "General Charge to the Twelve" (1835); Quorum of the Twelve, "A Proclamation to the World" (1845); Lorenzo Snow, "Law of Tithing" (1899); James E. Talmage, "The Honor and Dignity of the Priesthood" (1914); J. Reuben Clark, Jr., "The Charted Course of the Church in Education" (1938) and "When Are the Writings or Sermons of Church Leaders Entitled to the Claim of Scripture?" (1954); Harold B. Lee, "Priesthood . . . Core of All Activity" (1961) and "Priesthood Correlation" (1961); Spencer W. Kimball, "When the World Will Be Converted" (1974), "Lengthening Our Stride" (1974), and "Becoming Pure in Heart" (1978); N. Eldon Tanner, "Church Administration" (1979).

ELEANOR KNOWLES

---

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

[This entry consists of twenty articles:

- Overview
- Contents
- Section 1
- Sections 20–22
- Section 25
- Section 42
- Section 45
- Section 76
- Section 84
- Section 88
- Section 89
- Section 93
- Section 107
- Sections 109–110
- Sections 121–123
- Section 124
- Sections 127–128

Literature, comp. Ben E. Rich, 2 vols. (Chicago, n.d.).

In addition to volumes on Joseph Smith's teachings (TPJS, WJS), there are doctrinal statements in Journal of Discourses (1980). Compilations of discourses of the Presidents of the Church, all published in Salt Lake City, include Brigham Young, Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe (1954); John Taylor, The Gospel Kingdom, ed. G. Homer Durham (1987); Discourses of Wilford Woodruff, ed. G. Homer Durham (1946); Teachings of Lorenzo Snow, comp. Clyde J. Williams (1984); Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine (1939); Heber J. Grant, Gospel Standards (1941); George Albert Smith, Sharing the Gospel with Others (1948); David O. McKay, Gospel Ideals (1953); Joseph Fielding Smith, Doctrines of Salvation, comp. Bruce R. McConkie, 3 vols. (1954–1956); Harold B. Lee, Stand Ye in Holy Places and Ye Are the Light of the World (1974); Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball (1982); and Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson (1988).

Following is a list of books that have made significant contributions to the understanding of doctrine (unless otherwise noted, these works were published in Salt Lake City): Parley P. Pratt, A Voice of Warning (New York, 1837) and Key to Theology (1856); Orson Pratt, An Interesting Account of Several Remarkable Visions and of the Late Discovery of Ancient American Records (Edinburgh, 1840); Orson Spencer, Spencer's Letters (Liverpool and London, 1852); John Taylor, Mediation and Atonement (1882) and The Government of God (1884); Franklin D. Richards and James Little, A Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel (1882); B. H. Roberts, The Gospel (Liverpool, 1888), Mormon Doctrine of Deity and Jesus Christ: The Revelation of God (1903) and The Seventy's Course in Theology, 5 vols. (1907–1912); James E. Talmage, Articles of Faith (1899) and Jesus the Christ (1915); Orson F. Whitney, Gospel Themes (1914) and Saturday Night Thoughts (1921); Joseph F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine (1919); Brigham Young, Discourses of Brigham Young, ed. John A. Widtsoe (1926); John A. Widtsoe, Priesthood and Church Government (1939), A Rational Theology (1945), and Evidences and Reconciliations, 3 vols. in 1 (1960); Joseph Smith, Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, comp. by Joseph Fielding Smith (1938); Orson Pratt, Orson Pratt's Works, ed. Parker P. Robison (1945), and Masterful Discourses of Orson Pratt, ed. N. B. Lundwall (1946); Milton R.

Hunter, The Gospel Through the Ages (1945); Daniel H. Ludlow, ed., Latter-day Prophets Speak (1948); J. Reuben Clark, Jr., On the Way to Immortality and Eternal Life (1949); Writings of Parley P. Pratt, ed. Parker P. Robison (1952); Bruce R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine (1958, rev. 1966); Spencer W. Kimball, The Miracle of Forgiveness (1969); and George Q. Cannon, Gospel Truth, ed. Jerreld Newquist, 2 vols. (1972, 1974).

Shorter treatises include Oliver Cowdery, "General Charge to the Twelve" (1835); Quorum of the Twelve, "A Proclamation to the World" (1845); Lorenzo Snow, "Law of Tithing" (1899); James E. Talmage, "The Honor and Dignity of the Priesthood" (1914); J. Reuben Clark, Jr., "The Charted Course of the Church in Education" (1938) and "When Are the Writings or Sermons of Church Leaders Entitled to the Claim of Scripture?" (1954); Harold B. Lee, "Priesthood . . . Core of All Activity" (1961) and "Priesthood Correlation" (1961); Spencer W. Kimball, "When the World Will Be Converted" (1974), "Lengthening Our Stride" (1974), and "Becoming Pure in Heart" (1978); N. Eldon Tanner, "Church Administration" (1979).

ELEANOR KNOWLES

---

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

[This entry consists of twenty articles:

- Overview
- Contents
- Section 1
- Sections 20–22
- Section 25
- Section 42
- Section 45
- Section 76
- Section 84
- Section 88
- Section 89
- Section 93
- Section 107
- Sections 109–110
- Sections 121–123
- Section 124
- Sections 127–128

Sections 131–132

Sections 137–138

Official Declaration—2

The first article is an introduction to the Latter-day Saint scripture known as the Doctrine and Covenants, its meaning, significance, and use in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The second article summarizes the main contents of this collection of revelations and official statements of the Church. A series of individual articles follows on selected sections of the Doctrine and Covenants, summarizing their contents and importance. For Official Declaration—1, see MANIFESTO. Commentaries on, editions of, and literary features of the Doctrine and Covenants are also discussed in the separate articles.]

OVERVIEW

The Doctrine and Covenants is a compilation of REVELATIONS, most of which were received by the Prophet Joseph SMITH for the establishment and governance of the KINGDOM OF GOD in the latter days. It is a STANDARD WORK of the Church and functions as its open, ever-expanding, ecclesiastical constitution. Its main focus is to build up the Church of Jesus Christ and to bring people into harmony with Christ's kingdom. It is viewed as the capstone of the Church; its companion volume, the Book of Mormon, is seen as the keystone (Benson, pp. 83–85). The Book of Mormon was written to convince all individuals that Jesus is the Christ (see BOOK OF MORMON: OVERVIEW); the Doctrine and Covenants was given to organize and orient them according to God's mind and kingdom.

Of the 138 sections and 2 declarations presently in this collection, 133 were received principally through Joseph SMITH, the first prophet and President of the Church. The seven remaining sections were received or written by or under the direction of Oliver COWDERY (sections 102 and 134), John TAYLOR (section 135), Brigham YOUNG (section 136), Joseph F. SMITH (section 138), Wilford WOODRUFF (Official Declaration—1), and Spencer W. KIMBALL (Official Declaration—2).

While most passages in the Doctrine and Covenants have a specific historical setting, virtually every verse is one of wisdom, general instruction, religious principle, or doctrine. Most of the revelations were received in answer to specific prayerful requests. Although many were given for the benefit of particular individuals, by and large their guidance has universal application, making these revelations as relevant today as when first received.

They were given to the servants of the Lord “in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding” (1:24). They are recognized by Latter-day Saints as “the will of the Lord, . . . the mind of the Lord, . . . the word of the Lord, . . . the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation” (68:4).

The revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants were received by various methods. Some were received by INSPIRATION, the mind being enlightened by the Holy Spirit (e.g., sections 20–22); others came from an ANGEL (sections 2, 13, 27, 110); in VISIONS, or sight-knowledge, usually through the spiritual eyes of the prophet (sections 76, 137–138); by the still small voice, a voice that comes into the mind (section 85); or by an audible voice (section 130:12–13). At times, other people were present and shared the spiritual manifestations (see VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH).

The sections are of many types, containing various kinds of materials and historical docu-

THEOLOGY. LECTURE FIRST ON THE DOCTRINE OF THE CHURCH OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS. Of Faith. SECTION I.

1 FAITH being the first principle in revealed religion, and the foundation of all righteousness, necessarily claims the first place in a course of lectures which are designed to unfold to the understanding the doctrine of Jesus Christ.

2 In presenting the subject of faith, we shall observe the following order:

3 First, Faith itself—what it is;

4 Secondly, The object on which it rests; and 5 Thirdly, The effects which flow from it.

6 Agreeably to this order we have first to show what faith is.

7 The author of the epistle to the Hebrews, in the eleventh chapter of that epistle, and first verse, gives the following definition of the word faith:

8 Now faith is the substance [assurance] of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

9 From this we learn, that faith is the assurance which men have of the existence of things which they have not seen; and the principle of action in all intelligent beings.

10 If men were duly to consider themselves, and turn their thoughts and reflections to the operations of ments. For example, section 102 contains the minutes of a high council meeting; section 113 answers questions on the writings of Isaiah; sections 121–23 are part of a letter written by Joseph Smith in relation to persecution; sections 127–28 are epistles on baptisms for the dead; section 134 is an article on government and laws; and section 135 reports the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Section 7 is a translation of a record written and hidden up by the Apostle John; sections 65 and 109 are prayers; other sections are items of instruction (sections 130–31) and prophecies (sections 87 and 121). Section 1 is the Lord’s Preface to the other revelations. Section 133 is known as the Appendix; it was given two days after the Preface and contains eschatological information. Both sections 1 and 133 were provided in preparation for the publication of the revelations.

After a short preface, this was the first page in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. It is the first of seventy pages of lectures on the doctrine of the Church, the origin of the word “doctrine” in the title of this book of scripture.

The first compilation of the revelations given to Joseph Smith was printed in 1833 and was known as A Book of Commandments, for the Government of the Church of Christ (see BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS). It contained sixty-five chapters. This collection was submitted to a priesthood conference of the Church on November 1, 1831, for approval prior to publication. Because of the unpolished language of the revelations, one member doubted their authenticity. A revelation, section 67 in modern editions, challenged any person to write a revelation; when the doubter confessed that he was unable to do so, the compilation was approved by those assembled. Because the printing office of the Church in Independence, Missouri, was destroyed by a mob in July 1833 while the book was in production, only a few copies of this first compilation have survived.

Over the years after the first printing, other revelations were received and some earlier materials were deleted. An 1835 edition, published in Kirtland, Ohio, was entitled Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter Day Saints and contained 103 sections. In subsequent editions, more sections were added (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS EDITIONS). The most recent additions were sections 137 (1836) and 138 (1918) on salvation of the dead, and the Official Declaration—2 announcing the PRIESTHOOD available to every worthy male member of the Church (1978). An article on marriage written by Oliver Cowdery in 1835 was deleted from the 1876 edition. Beginning with the 1921 edition, a set of lessons called the LECTURES ON FAITH have not been included.

PART SECOND.
COVENANTS AND COMMANDMENTS
OF THE LORD,
to his servants of the church of the
LATTER DAY SAINTS.
SECTION I.

1 Hearken, O ye people of my church, saith the voice of him who dwells on high, and whose eyes are upon all men; yea, verily I say, hearken ye people from afar, and ye that are upon the islands of the sea, listen together; for verily the voice of the Lord is unto all men, and there is none to escape, and there is no eye that shall not see, neither ear that shall not hear, neither heart that shall not be penetrated; and the rebellious shall be pierced with much sorrow, for their iniquities shall be spoken upon the house-tops, and their secret acts shall be revealed; and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, by the mouths of my disciples, whom I have chosen in these last days, and they shall go forth and none shall stay them, for I the Lord have commanded them.

2 Behold, this is mine authority, and the authority of my servants, and my preface unto the book of my commandments, which I have given them to publish unto you O inhabitants of the earth; wherefore fear and tremble, O ye people, for what I the Lord have decreed, in them, shall be fulfilled. And verily, I say unto you, that they who go forth, bearing these things unto the inhabitants of the earth, to them is power given to seal both on earth and in heaven, the unbelieving and rebellious; yea, verily, to seal them up unto the day when the wrath of God shall be poured out upon the wicked without measure; unto the day when the Lord shall come to recompense unto every man according to his work, and measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow man.

3 Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear: prepare ye, prepare ye

The beginning of the second part of the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, containing the “Covenants and Commandments of the Lord to his servants.”

One hundred of the revelations were received before 1834, during the early, formative years of the Church. Many of them were addressed to specific individuals who sought wisdom from the Prophet. Gospel doctrines were often not revealed in their fulness at first, but were received progressively from time to time. As the Church grew and relocated, questions regarding Church administration, duties of officers, guidance for the members of the Church, and events of the future became the subjects of further revelations.

Not all the revelations received by Joseph Smith are included in the Doctrine and Covenants (see UNPUBLISHED REVELATIONS). Some are contained in the History of the Church, giving counsel and instruction to individuals (HC 1:229), concerning the Saints being driven to the Rocky Mountains (HC 5:85), and a prophecy about Stephen A. Douglas (HC 5:393–94).

Deciding which revelations to include in the Doctrine and Covenants is a prerogative of the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. The selection is then affirmed by the COMMON CONSENT of Church members.

The Doctrine and Covenants is directed to the people of this generation. To the Latter-day Saints it is the voice of the Lord Jesus Christ confirming and revealing the way of salvation and instruction for the government of his Church. It warns individuals and nations of impending destruction if they do not repent. It witnesses to the reality of life beyond the grave.

Prominent among its teachings are the specific principles, covenants, and ordinances that lead to eternal life. It prescribes priesthood ordinances from baptism to marriage sealed for eternity. Salvation of the dead also is made known by revelations concerning baptism for the dead and visions of preaching to the spirits who are awaiting resurrection.

Its emphasis upon the spiritual nature of temporal matters heightens one's appreciation of and respect for this life. For example, its code of health, known as the WORD OF WISDOM, promises both spiritual and physical health to those who obey it (section 89).

The Doctrine and Covenants contains numerous teachings and pithy sayings that powerfully influence the daily lives and feelings of Latter-day Saints, which set the tone of Church service and instill vitality into the work. Among its frequently quoted lines are the following maxims and words of counsel and divine assurance: "If ye are prepared ye shall not fear" (D&C 38:30); "Seek not for riches but for wisdom" (11:7); "He who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world, and eternal life in the world to come" (59:23); "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning, even by study and also by faith" (88:118); "Without faith you can do nothing" (8:10); "Of you it is required to forgive all men" (64:10); "Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will" (58:27); "All these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good" (122:7); "For I will raise up unto myself a pure people, that will serve me in righteousness" (100:16); "Be not weary in well-doing" (64:32); "Search diligently, pray always, and be believing, and all things shall work together for your good" (90:24); and "Now what do we hear in the gospel which we have received? A voice of gladness! A voice of mercy from heaven; and a voice of truth out of the earth; glad tidings for the dead; a voice of gladness for the living and the dead; glad tidings of great joy" (128:19).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants." Ensign 17 (May 1987):83-85.
- Doxey, Roy W. The Latter-day Prophets and the Doctrine and Covenants, 4 vols. Salt Lake City, 1963-1970.
- . The Doctrine and Covenants Speaks, 2 vols. Salt Lake City, 1969-1970.
- Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Doctrine and Covenants, 2 vols. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Millet, Robert L., and Larry E. Dahl, eds. The Capstone of Our Religion. Salt Lake City, 1989.

ROY W. DOXEY

CONTENTS

The revelations compiled in the Doctrine and Covenants contain directions and doctrine needed to inspire, organize, and administer the affairs of the Church. They were not received or written as a textbook, treatise, or organized curriculum of lesson plans, but were received intermittently when the Prophet Joseph SMITH and others sought divine guidance in various circumstances.

Despite the fact that many of these revelations are personally directed to certain individuals or groups in nineteenth-century times and places, they contain principles that have eternal application and thus current value. The revelations include warnings of divine judgments upon the wicked; teachings about the progression of human souls toward exaltation and eternal life through the gospel of Jesus Christ; information about scripture, including the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the translation of the Bible by Joseph Smith; instructions about the priesthood, its restoration, functions, offices, and ordinances; commandments and instructions to people of the Church regarding personal behavior, education, lands and property, buildings, and caring for the poor; and callings and counsel to preach and live the gospel.

Section I is the Preface, given at a conference of the Church on November 1, 1831. It came in response to Joseph Smith's request for authority from the Lord to publish some of the revelations that he had previously received. In it, the Lord authorized the request and issued the following challenge and declaration to all who would read it: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled" (D&C 1:37).

Sections 2-19 are revelations received prior to the organization of the Church in 1830. In them, the Lord instructed Joseph Smith and his companions on many subjects, especially the translation, publication, and value of the Book of Mormon, and the need to trust completely in the Lord and to safeguard sacred things (sections 3, 5, 10, 17, 20). Joseph SMITH, Sr.; Hyrum SMITH; Joseph Knight, Sr.; John, Peter, and David WHITMER; Oliver COWDERY; and Martin HARRIS were taught how they might be a part of the work that was about to come forth and were instructed about its sacredness (sections 4, 6, 8–9, 11–12, 14–19). They were also counseled to become worthy to receive the Lord's Spirit so that they might recognize God's revelations and carry out his will (sections 6, 8–9, 11).

The first page of the Book of Commandments (1833), predecessor to the Doctrine and Covenants. "A Preface or instruction" to the commandments "given of the Lord unto his church." Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Also during this time, the authority to act in the name of the Lord was restored (see PRIESTHOOD), and the purpose and scope of that authority were explained (sections 13, 18, 20; cf. 27). The Lord gave counsel concerning the value of individual souls and encouraged his servants to labor for one another's salvation by teaching the restored gospel and bringing people to repentance (section 18). The value of and need for the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST were revealed, and people were directed to come to him for forgiveness and spiritual strength (section 19).

Sections 20–40 gave instructions in 1830 to the newly organized Church in New York. The basic doctrines of the Church as contained in the Bible and the Book of Mormon and the criteria for establishing COVENANTS with the Lord were summarized, and the responsibilities of members and priesthood holders in the Church were established (section 20).

The Lord gave a revelation concerning the relationship of the Prophet to the Lord and of Church members to the word of the Lord through his Prophet (section 21). This is a major topic in the Doctrine and Covenants and provides the basis for understanding the process of continuing revelation through the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH (section 28; cf. 43, 68, 81, 90, 124).

Further revelations were received for the benefit of various individuals and for the Church in general, in which many doctrinal insights were provided on such subjects as BAPTISM (section 22); following counsel (sections 23–24, 31); music, and counsel to the Prophet's wife, Emma SMITH (section 25); COMMON CONSENT (section 26); the SACRAMENT (section 27); the HOLY SPIRIT (sections 29–30, 34, cf. 46, 50, 75, 79); preaching to the American Indians, or Lamanites (section 30, 32); proclaiming the gospel to all the world in the last days (sections 29, 33, 35, 38; cf. 43, 45, 86–87, 90, 101, 116, 133); and Joseph Smith's work on translating the Bible and other records (sections 35, 37; cf. 41–42, 45, 73–74, 76–77, 86, 91, 93–94, 124:89). It was through this translation activity that many of the doctrines of the Church were revealed to Joseph Smith (see Matthews).

The Lord directed members of the Church to gather to Ohio, where he promised that he would give them his law, establish Zion, and endow them with power from on high (sections 37–38, 42). The making and keeping of covenants are identified as the basis for individuals becoming God's people or his disciples (sections 39–41).

Sections 41–123 were given during the Ohio and Missouri periods of the Church (1831–1839) and contain various instructions concerning the affairs of the Church. During these years many doctrines and principles of the gospel were revealed that helped to build a vital doctrinal framework for the Church. The first revelation recorded by Joseph Smith in Ohio called Edward Partridge to serve as the first BISHOP of the Church (section 41). As promised, the Saints were given the Lord's laws by which members of the Church are governed, including the law of teaching (sections 42, 68, 88, 93, 100); moral laws (sections 42, 58–59); the law of CONSECRATION (sections 42, 51, 54, 70, 78, 82–83, 104); the law of labor (sections 42, 60, 68, 75; see WORK); instructions concerning administration to the sick (sections 42, 46, 63); laws of remuneration for goods and services (sections 42, 43, 70, 106); and laws pertaining to transgressors (sections 42, 58, 102, 107). Joseph Smith also received instruction concerning the importance of marriage and the family (section 49; cf. 131–32), and the Lord revealed information by which counterfeit and evil practices might be detected and avoided (sections 43, 46, 50, 52; cf. 129).

A major theme of the Doctrine and Covenants is the establishment and building of ZION, both as a place (see NEW JERUSALEM) and as a condition of the people (the pure in heart; D&C 97:21). Joseph Smith was instructed to go to Missouri, where the site for the city of Zion would be made known (section 52). While there, he received guidance from the Lord concerning the establishment of Zion and its people (sections 57–59). The Saints began to gather in Missouri to fulfill the Lord's requirements, and additional revelations were received pertaining to their various responsibilities (sections 63–64). They were taught the necessity of building and having a TEMPLE, or house of the Lord, in connection with becoming a people of Zion (sections 57, 84, 88, 97, 101, 109–110; cf. 124). Since some members did not reach levels of consecrated faith and obedience reflective of a Zion society, they failed to establish Zion at that time. They were expelled from Missouri, and the building of Zion in that place was temporarily suspended (sections 101, 103, 105).

During this same time and later, other insightful revelations were provided concerning health rules (sections 49, 89); the life, light, spirit, and power of Christ (sections 50, 84, 88, 93); missionary work (sections 75, 79–80, 84, 99); the SABBATH (section 59); obedience and sacrifice (sections 58–59, 82, 97, 117–18); obtaining and extending forgiveness (sections 58, 64, 82, 98); the PLAN OF SALVATION for all humankind (sections 76, 93; cf. 131, 137–38); priesthood functions and quorums (sections 81, 84, 90, 107, 112, 121; cf. 124; and Official Declaration—2 of 1978); impending wars (section 87); biblical texts (sections 74, 77, 113); and TRYING (sections 119–20).

Sections 124–135 were recorded in Nauvoo during the last years of Joseph Smith's life (1839–1844). They include directions to the Church regarding the NAUVOO TEMPLE, the first full-ordination temple (section 124); ordinances and SALVATION FOR THE DEAD (sections 124, 127–128); the nature of the GODHEAD and exalted beings (sections 130, 132); eternal and PLURAL MARRIAGE (sections 131–32; see also Official Declaration—1); political laws and governments (section 134); and a statement of the contributions of Joseph Smith and of his testimony at the time of his martyrdom (sections 135–36).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Berrett, William E. Teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants. Salt Lake City, 1956.
- Cook, Lyndon W. The Revelations of Joseph Smith. Provo, Utah, 1981.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The Joseph Smith Translation and The Doctrine and Covenants: Historical and Doctrinal Companions." In The Capstone of Our Religion: Insights into the Doctrine and Covenants, ed. Robert L. Millet and Larry E. Dahl. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Otten, Leam G., and C. Max Caldwell. Sacred Truths of the Doctrine and Covenants, 2 vols. Springville, Utah, 1983.
- Smith, Hyrum M., and Janne M. Sjodahl. Doctrine and Covenants Commentary. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Church History and Modern Revelation, 2 vols. Salt Lake City, 1946.
- Welch, John W., and Jeannie Welch. The Doctrine and Covenants by Themes. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- Widtsoe, John A. The Message of the Doctrine and Covenants, ed. G. Homer Durham. Salt Lake City, 1969.
- Woodford, Robert J. "The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants," 3 vols. Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1974.

C. MAX CALDWELL

SECTION 1

Section 1 of the Doctrine and Covenants is called the "Preface." It was a revelation received by Joseph SMITH between sessions of a conference in Hiram, Ohio, on November 1, 1831. The conference had been convened to consider publishing sixty-three of the revelations Joseph Smith had received (see BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS). The conference voted unanimously to publish them as the word of the Lord. In accordance with the Lord's declaration, this section was published as "my preface unto the book of my commandments" (D&C 1:6). It sets an urgent tone for the entire Doctrine and Covenants.

Like the revelations it introduces, section 1 is written predominantly in the first person as the word of the Lord: "What I the Lord have spoken, I have spoken" (verse 38). It proclaims to the world that through the RESTORATION of his Church, God has set his hand the last time to redeem his children and prepare the earth for the Savior's return.

Section 1 is a bold declaration that God sees all things and speaks to all people, that his words will go to all nations through his chosen disciples, that every person eventually will hear the gospel in his or her own language so that each may understand, and that weak things of the world will break down the mighty and strong and the Church will be brought out of obscurity by the power of God (see also the revelation given two days later, D&C 133).

Section 1 balances judgment and relief. It is a voice of warning of impending judgments: "Prepare ye, prepare ye" (verse 12). It warns that those who do not repent will suffer much sorrow, for worldwide sin has kindled the "anger of the Lord" and people "have strayed from [his] ordinances and have broken [his] everlasting covenant" (verses 13–15). Those who hearken, however, are promised instruction, chastening, correction, knowledge, and blessings from God.

The section ends with the certification of the Lord that all his prophecies and promises, though given to men in their weakness, are true and will be fulfilled.

GEORGE W. PACE

SECTIONS 20–22

Sections 20–22 of the Doctrine and Covenants are fundamental, formative documents in early Church history. They continue to serve as a definitive statement of beliefs and PRIESTHOOD functions. Originally sections 20 and 22 were published together as "Articles and Covenants of the Church of Christ." They were first published in the Painesville (Ohio) Telegraph in April 1831 and later on the first page of the first issue of The Evening and the Morning Star in June 1832. The earliest known version of section 20 is dated June 1829. Many early copies were made of a draft in Oliver COWDERY's hand.

Sections 20–22 were officially adopted as doctrinal revelations by the Church at its first conference on June 9, 1830, and were the first sections of the Doctrine and Covenants to be thus approved. Later, missionaries often would read manuscript copies of these "Articles" at public meetings and conferences because they had been instructed to include the "Church Articles" in their teachings

Section 20 was known originally as the Articles and Covenants of the Church, setting forth basic beliefs and duties. Pictured here is an 1835 letter, or license, indicating that Edward Partridge was the authorized bishop of the Church (cf. D&C 20:63–64, 84). It is signed by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, John Whitmer, and Sidney Rigdon.

(D&C 42:13). Section 20 was Chapter II in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, right after the revealed Preface. The present order was established in the 1876 edition.

Section 20 is a composite text that divides into a historical prologue (verses 1–16), a statement of beliefs (verses 17–36), and a collection of policies and procedures (verses 37–84). While its principles continue to guide Latter-day Saints today, its provisions also provide glimpses of Church life in its initial years. The prologue contains the earliest published references to the ordination of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery as APOSTLES (verses 2–3) and to Joseph Smith's FIRST VISION: "It was truly manifested unto this first elder that he had received a remission of his sins" (verse 5). The personal dimension of this account is consistent with Joseph's 1832 and 1835 accounts of his First Vision.

Section 20 also contains the Church's earliest known declaration of faith. It affirms basic Christian doctrines, following the sequence common to most Protestant confessions, beginning with the nature of God (verse 17), the Creation (verses 18–19), the Fall (verse 20), Jesus Christ, the Atonement, and the plan of salvation (verses 21–28).

Additional comments discuss the possibility of “falling from grace” and the nature of sanctification, which were lively issues in the 1820s. Sensitivity to the surrounding Christian world is shown in verse 35, which assures that these articles are “neither adding to, nor diminishing from the prophecy of [John’s] book, the holy scriptures, or the revelations of God that will come hereafter.”

Most of section 20 gives guidelines for Church government. Drawing partly upon texts from the Book of Mormon, it explains the ordinances of BAPTISM and the SACRAMENT, and the duties of baptized members. Originally, priests, teachers, and deacons were local adult priesthood leaders, which explains the significant pastoral charge given them (verses 46–59) and their role in signing certificates of worthiness for members moving from one branch of the Church to another (verse 84). The AARONIC PRIESTHOOD had a public ministry to “preach, teach, expound, exhort” (verse 46) and needed to be properly “licensed” (verse 64).

Received on the day the Church was incorporated, section 21 defines Joseph Smith’s leadership of the new Church as “a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ” (verse 1), with Oliver Cowdery as an elder “under his hand” (verse 11). Church members are counseled to keep records and to receive Joseph’s words “as if from mine own mouth” (verses 1, 5).

Section 22, received the same month, requires all people, even those previously baptized, to be baptized into “a new and an everlasting covenant” (verse 1).

Together, these three sections provide a firm organizational foundation for the restored Church of Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. “The Organization Revelations: D&C 20, 21, and 22.” In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 1, pp. 109–123, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson. Sandy, Utah, 1984.
- Woodford, Robert J. “The Articles and Covenants of the Church of Christ and the Book of Mormon.” In Doctrines for Exaltation, pp. 262–73. Salt Lake City, 1989.

GRANT UNDERWOOD

SECTION 25

This revelation was given in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, in July 1830, three months after the organization of the Church. It was first printed in the BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS in 1833 as Chapter

XXVI. It is addressed to Emma SMITH, wife of the Prophet Joseph Smith. In the earliest version, Emma Smith is addressed as “my daughter in Zion.” Joseph Smith later expanded this verse to add, “All those who receive my Gospel are sons and daughters in my kingdom.”

The section has five main components:

1. Emma is designated as an “elect lady” (verse 3). Later, on March 17, 1842, when Emma Smith became the first president of the RELIEF SOCIETY and the women were organized in the order of the priesthood, Joseph explained that this was the office of her “elect” calling. The benevolent organization that she led had grown to more than 3 million women by 1990.

2. Emma is admonished to unity with her husband to “be unto him for a scribe” and to “go with him at the time of his going” (verse 6). She accepted these callings, though she was later required to abandon home and security.

3. Emma is called to “be ordained under [Joseph’s] hand to expound scriptures, and exhort the church,” as “given thee by my Spirit” (verse 7). She is also commanded to study and devote her time “to writing, and to learning much” (verse 8). In the course of her life, she taught, expounded, exhorted, presided, and served in many Church organizations. The mandate has remained with LDS women: to master the scriptures, thus the more powerfully to lead, teach, minister, and serve.

4. Emma is charged to select sacred hymns, and a manifesto is given of the spiritual power of music: “The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me” (verse 12). Her hymnal was first published in 1836 (although 1835 appears on the title page). This collection utilizes many classical Christian words and melodies but also embodies songs related to most of the unique events and teachings of the RESTORATION (see HYMNS AND HYMNODY; MUSIC).

5. Emma is counseled against murmuring, putting her public ministry before her role as companion of her husband, seeking “the things of this world” (verse 10), and pride. “Let thy soul delight in thy husband” (verse 14). She is to glorify her husband while involved in a public ministry. Emma fulfilled each of these callings, endured the loss of five children, and stood by Joseph until his martyrdom.

This inclusion of women in leading roles of the Church, presiding in some organizations and over certain sacred functions, was a marked departure from nineteenth-century patterns. Church leaders, both men and women, continue to cite passages from this inspired calling of Emma to exemplify some of the potentials of women and facilitate their full participation in all spiritual callings and blessings of the Gospel.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. "If Thou Art Faithful." Ensign 14 (Nov. 84):89–92.

KLIS HALE VOLKENING

SECTION 42

This section is called the "law of Christ" and the "law of the Church," and receiving it fulfilled a promise made on January 2, 1831, in Doctrine and Covenants 38:32, that the law would be given to the Church in Ohio. As a precondition (see D&C 41:2–3), the ELDERS were to unite in the prayer of faith. The first seventy verses of section 42 were given February 9, 1831, while twelve elders were, as the record states, "united in mighty prayer." Verses 71–93 were received two weeks later in similar circumstances. The revelation was first published in The Evening and The Morning Star, in July and October 1832, and was included as chapters 44 and 47 of the BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS in 1833.

High requirements were here imposed on the infant Church, with a small and scattered membership and little instruction and experience. They can be divided into six main segments:

1. A missionary commission to travel to the West (verses 1–17). Its members were to go two by two, under proper ordination and authority, to teach the principles of the gospel from the Bible and Book of Mormon and to teach only "by the Spirit."
2. A reaffirmation of the TEN COMMANDMENTS (verses 18–29). The ancient decalogue of Moses stressed the laws of behavior. The New Testament, especially the SERMON ON THE MOUNT, and a similar sermon in 3 Nephi emphasize both the act and the inner condition, letter and spirit. Section 42 also affirms the more inclusive expectations and aspirations of the NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT. Additions include "Thou shalt not lie . . . [nor] speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm" and "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else." Violators, it is said, "shall not have the Spirit" and shall fear.

3. A statement on the laws of STEWARDSHIP and CONSECRATION (verses 30–39). Properties were to be consecrated by a covenant "which cannot be broken," for support of the poor, each person acting as a steward over his own property, and a HIGH COUNCIL and BISHOP as stewards over the Church storehouse. The storehouse, replenished by "residues," would administer to the poor and needy. "Inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these, ye do it unto me." Through these principles, the Church was to procure land, build houses of worship, and eventually establish the NEW JERUSALEM.

4. Warnings against pride of heart, ostentation, idleness, and uncleanness (verses 40–42).

5. Admonitions to compassionate care for the sick who are without the gift of faith unto HEALING (verses 43–52). Signs, including healing, will follow specific gifts of faith, but the highest form of faith is to "have power to become my sons." Reassurance is given those who die unto the Lord, for their death "shall be sweet unto them" (verse 46).

6. Instructions on Church procedures regarding transgressors, trials, witnesses, Church discipline in relation to the laws of the land, and patterns of confession and reconciliation (verses 53–93).

[See also DISCIPLINARY COUNCILS.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Otten, L. G., and C. M. Caldwell. Sacred Truths of the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, pp. 195–206. Springville, Utah, 1982.

VICTOR L. BROWN, SR.

SECTION 45

This revelation of the Doctrine and Covenants was received in early March 1831, a time when "many false reports, lies, and foolish stories, were published in the newspapers, and circulated in every direction, to prevent people from investigating the work, or embracing the faith" (HIC 1:158). In it the Lord called the Saints to hearken to his voice, and noted that he was pleading unto the Father for them (D&C 45:1–7). He then told them he would "prophesy, as unto men in days of old," and gave them what he had given his disciples in Jerusalem concerning events that would take place in that day, in the last days, and at his second coming.

Three events would take place during the time of the Savior's own generation: (1) the temple in Jerusalem would be destroyed (verses 18–20); (2) the Jewish nation would be desolated and destroyed (verse 21); and (3) the Jews would be scattered among all nations (verse 24). History shows that these prophecies were fulfilled. Before the end of first century, Roman conquests brought about a literal and exact fulfillment of all that Jesus had described. Some who heard him prophesy lived to witness those events.

Many events would happen in the last days preceding the Lord's second coming:

1. The Jews shall be gathered to Jerusalem (verse 25).
2. There shall be wars and rumors of wars (verse 26).
3. Men's hearts shall fail them (verse 26).
4. There shall be claims of a delay in Christ's coming (verse 26).
5. The love of men shall wax cold (verse 27).
6. Iniquity shall abound (verse 27).
7. The fulness of the gospel shall be restored (verse 28).
8. Times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled (verse 30).
9. There shall be an overflowing scourge and desolating sickness (verse 31).
10. The wicked shall curse God (verse 32).
11. There shall be earthquakes and many desolations (verse 33).
12. There shall be displays of heavenly phenomena—sun, moon, stars (verses 40–44).

The Times of the Gentiles referred to in item 8 began with the taking of the gospel to the Gentiles by the apostles after the death of Christ. The second opportunity for the Gentiles came with the restoration of the gospel through Joseph Smith, to be preached first to the Gentiles and then to the Jews.

When the Savior comes a second time, he will make at least three general appearances:

1. He will appear to the Saints or covenant members of his church (verses 45–46, 56–57). The Savior likened those faithful members to the five wise virgins who had taken the Holy Spirit to be their guide (cf. Matt. 25:1–13).

2. He will appear to the Jews at Jerusalem (verses 47–53). When the Jews are engaged in a battle for survival, the Savior will appear and intervene in their behalf and they will recognize him as their Messiah.

3. He will appear to the world (verses 74–75). This appearance will not be to a select group, but rather will be of such magnitude that the wicked will be destroyed, leaving only the righteous to enjoy the millennial reign of the Savior. The second coming of the Savior will coincide with the resurrection of faithful covenant members of his Church who shall be caught up to meet him when he comes in his glory (verse 45). And the heathen who lived without the law will be resurrected, and also "they that knew no law" (verse 54).

The revelation known as section 45 then focuses on Joseph Smith's work on the Bible translation (verses 60–62), and also mentions wars abroad and at home (verse 63). The last verses call the Saints to gather "with one heart and with one mind . . . [to build] the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety" (verses 65–66).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Church Educational System. The Doctrine and Covenants Student Manual. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Cook, Lyndon W. The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Provo, 1981.
- Otten, Leann G., and C. Max Caldwell. Sacred Truths of the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1. Springville, Utah, 1982.

C. MAX CALDWELL

SECTION 76

Section 76 presents a vision about the PLAN OF SALVATION, particularly the nature of the three kingdoms or heavens of glory that mankind may inherit following the Resurrection, depending on their personal faithfulness (see DEGREES OF GLORY).

As Joseph SMITH and Sidney RIGDON were working on the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) on February 16, 1832, they came to John 5:29, concerning the resurrection of the just and the unjust. Of that experience, Joseph explained, "It appeared self-evident that . . . if God rewarded every one according to the deeds done in the body, the term 'Heaven,' as intended for the Saints' eternal home must include more kingdoms than one. . . . While translating St. John's Gospel, myself and Elder Rigdon saw the following vision" (HC 1:245). At least ten people were in the room when this revelation was received. One of them, Philo Dibble, sixty years later recalled how Joseph and Sidney, almost motionless for about one hour, would alternately relate and confirm to each other what they were concurrently seeing in the vision (Cannon, pp. 303–304).

The revelation contains a series of six visions: They see the Son of God on the right hand of God (verses 1–24); they see how the devil and his followers rebelled and were cast down (25–49); they see the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (50–70), TERRESTRIAL KINGDOM (71–80), and TELESTIAL KINGDOM (81–90), and those who will inherit each of these degrees of glory; and they see the three kingdoms of glory compared (91–119). The text was first published in The Evening and the Morning Star in July 1832 and was included as section 91 in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Because this section, called "The Vision," departed significantly from the mainstream Christian view of one heaven and one hell, it was not easily received by some at first. Brigham YOUNG said, "My traditions were such, that when the Vision came first to me, it was so directly contrary and opposed to my former education, I said, wait a little; I did not reject it, but I could not understand it" (Deseret News, Extra, September 14, 1852, p. 24). Entire BRANCHES of the Church had the same problem. John Murdock and Orson Pratt, serving missions in Ohio at the time, struggled to help Church members there accept these new outlooks on eternity. Soon, however, most members believed and understood the concepts, and came to revere this vision as one of the most beautiful and awe-inspiring ever given.

Joseph Smith himself rejoiced in "the light which burst upon the world through the foregoing vision" (PJS 1:372), which he said was "a transcript from the records of the eternal world. The sublimity of the ideas; the purity of the language; the scope for action; the continued duration for completion, in order that the heirs of salvation may confess the Lord and bow the knee; the rewards for faithfulness, and the punishments for sins; are so much beyond the narrow-mindedness of men, that every man is constrained to exclaim: 'It came from God'" (TPJS, p. 11).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cannon, George Q., ed. "Recollections of the Prophet Joseph Smith." Juvenile Instructor, 27 (May 15, 1892):302–304.
- Cook, Lyndon W. The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith, pp. 157–66, 311–12. Provo, Utah, 1981.
- Dahl, Larry E. "The Vision of the Glories." In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 1, pp. 279–308. Sandy, Utah, 1984.

DONALD Q. CANNON

SECTION 84

Given on September 22–23, 1832, at KIRTLAND, OHIO, section 84 was first published as Chapter IV in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. It is called a revelation on priesthood and was given in the presence of six ELDERS who had just returned from their MISSIONS to the eastern states. The revelation has four main themes.

ZION. Earlier, the establishment of ZION and the need for a TEMPLE as its center had been revealed (D&C 57:1–3). Section 84 makes the Church responsible for assembling the Saints and building the NEW JERUSALEM (Zion), beginning with the temple. Both undertakings are to be completed in a "generation." Zion is to be established through the power and authority of the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (verses 1–5).

PRIESTHOOD. Priesthood is the power and authority delegated to man to act for God in saving souls, and it cannot be assumed, but must be passed on from one who already has it. Section 84 clearly distinguishes two priesthoods, namely, the Melchizedek and Aaronic. Moses, for example, received the Melchizedek Priesthood from Jethro, who received it through rightful heirs back to "Adam, who was the first man" (verses 6–17). The Melchizedek Priesthood administers the GOSPEL and holds the KEYS of the mysteries of the kingdom and knowledge of God. Through the ORDINANCES administered by this priesthood, men and women partake of the powers of godliness. Only thus may they behold his face and endure his presence (verses 19–22).

The AARONIC PRIESTHOOD holds the keys of the ministering of ANGELS and the preparatory gospel. It continued in an unbroken line from Aaron and was the priesthood of the law of Moses. It was also the priesthood held by John the Baptist. This preparatory gospel includes FAITH, REPENTANCE, and BAPTISM, and leads to the Mel-chizedek Priesthood and its ordinances (verses 26–27).

OATH AND COVENANT OF THE PRIESTHOOD. When worthy men receive the Melchizedek Priesthood, they enter into a covenant relationship with the Lord. They covenant that in faithfulness and OBEDIENCE they will magnify their priesthood CALLINGS—that is, wholeheartedly honor and fulfill their stewardships. By keeping this covenant, the priesthood holder receives the oath of the Father, which leads to receiving the Father’s kingdom and “all that [the] Father hath” (verse 38). Those who violate or break this covenant and altogether turn from it “shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come” (verse 41; see also OATH AND COVENANT OF THE PRIESTHOOD).

The elders of the Church are told that because of “vanity and unbelief” they and all the children of Zion have been spiritually darkened and are under condemnation before the Lord. They are to repent and remember the “new covenant,” even the Book of Mormon. Through obeying this counsel, they will be forgiven their sins and bring forth fruit worthy for the kingdom (verses 54–61).

MISSIONARY COUNSEL. Section 84 gives instruction and promises to those who are emissaries of Jesus Christ. Under their direction, the gospel is to be taken to all the world. Those who desire to enter into the kingdom of Christ are to be baptized and receive the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. Signs will follow those who believe. The missionaries are promised protection as well as necessities of life (verses 62–119, cf. Matt. 10).

In summary, priesthood bearers are counseled to learn their duties and faithfully function in their offices and callings. Each calling is essential within the kingdom of Christ (verses 109–110).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Otten, Leam G., and C. Max Caldwell. Sacred Truths of the Doctrine and Covenants, 2 vols. Springville, Utah, 1983.
- Smith, Hyrum M., and Janne M. Sjodahl. Doctrine and Covenants Commentary, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1978.

LEAM G. OTTEN

SECTION 88

Section 88 was given through Joseph Smith in the “translating room” of the WHITNEY STORE in KIRTLAND, OHIO. Verses 1–126 were given on December 27 and 28, 1832, and verses 127–141 on January 3, 1833. The revelation was recorded in the Kirtland Council Minute Book, and portions of it were published in The Evening and the Morning Star in February and March 1833. It was printed as section 7 in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants.

On Christmas Day 1832, Joseph Smith received what has become known as the prophecy on war (D&C 87), which predicted “the death and misery of many souls.” His brethren were troubled at this. They united in FASTING AND PRAYER before the Lord, seeking his will concerning the upbuilding of Zion. The Prophet designated the subsequent revelation (D&C 88) the “olive leaf” and “the Lord’s message of peace to us” (HC 1:316).

The section opens with an intimate promise “even upon you my friends,” which is given of God through Jesus Christ, his Son (D&C 88:3–5) and is comparable with the promise of John 14 of the Comforter and the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE.

Passages follow on the pervasive immanence of divine light: THE LIGHT OF CHRIST enlightens the eyes and quickens the understanding (see LIGHT AND DARKNESS). It is in and through all things, the very light of the sun, moon, and stars. It “proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space” (verse 12). It is equated with the life, the law, and the power of God.

In this context the following doctrines are clarified:

The SPIRIT and BODY are the SOUL of man. There are three DEGREES OF GLORY and three orders of glorified bodies. One receives a resurrected body according to the law by which one abides while in this world: “Your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened” (verse 28). In the resurrection one receives in full what in this world one has had only in part. A fourth order of resurrected bodies pertains to the Sons of Perdition, who, though resurrected, receive no glory (verses 32–33).

The earth itself is alive. It will die and be glorified, and the bodies who are quickened by a celestial spirit will inherit; “for this intent was it made and created, and for this intent are they sanctified” (verse 20).

There are multiple worlds, multiple creations, all governed by law. “Unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also and conditions” (verse 38). Law includes appointed cosmic times, seasons, and orders, as well as the divine attributes and powers of mercy, justice, and judgment. “All beings who abide not in those conditions are not justified” (verse 39; see JUSTIFICATION). Those who seek to become a law unto themselves will not, and cannot, be sanctified.

A parable of laborers in a field teaches the magnitude of the Lord’s creations (verses 46–61), that glorification comes only in appointed time and sequence, “every man in his own order” (verse 60).

The call is given to build a TEMPLE and hold a SOLEMN ASSEMBLY. The temple is to become a house of God: of prayer, fasting, faith, learning, glory, and order. All incomings, outgoings, and salutations will be in the name of the Lord. The Saints are commanded to “organize yourselves, and prepare yourselves, and sanctify yourselves” (verse 74) through solemnity and sober study, to be ready for the temple experience. (See KIRTLAND TEMPLE; TEMPLE DEDICATIONS.)

A comprehensive curriculum for the SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS is introduced. It includes languages, history, and a study of “the wars and the perplexities of the nations, . . . and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms” (verse 79).

Prophecies are reiterated concerning the changes, earthquakes, tempests, and commotion in the earth and the heavens that will precede the second coming of Christ. Six periods or epochs of one thousand years each are designated. These are to culminate in the seventh or millennial era. An angel and an angelic trumpet symbolize each period.

The revelation concludes with specific instructions on the conduct of meetings, the duties of the presidency, admission into the School of the Prophets, and WASHING OF FEET, in the pattern of John 13, as an initiatory and purifying ordinance for members of the school.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cook, Lyndon W. The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Provo, Utah, 1981.

BARBARA R. CARTER

SECTION 89

This section, known as the WORD OF WISDOM from its first words, was received at a meeting of the SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS in the upper level of the Whitney store on February 27, 1833, in Kirtland, Ohio. According to Zebedee Coltrin, one of twenty-two Church leaders in attendance, Joseph Smith received the revelation in an adjoining room in the presence of two or three brethren, walked in with the document in hand, and read the contents to the assembled school members. The revelation was first printed in December 1833 or January 1834 on a broadsheet and was included in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants.

The Word of Wisdom was given “in consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days” (verse 4). As some of these designs pertain to what people eat and drink, the Word of Wisdom gives basic directions on what is good and not good, and posits a strong relationship between what individuals take into their bodies and their physical and spiritual well-being. The revelation prohibits three things: tobacco, strong drinks, and hot drinks (verses 5–9). “Strong drinks” were understood as alcoholic beverages; “hot drinks” were defined by early Church leaders as tea and coffee. Church leaders have traditionally confined relevant worthiness requirements to the prohibited items. The revelation also recommends the prudent use of herbs and fruits, the sparing consumption of meat, and the use of “all grain,” but especially “wheat for man” (verses 10–17). Saints who obey the admonitions are promised health and strength, wisdom and knowledge, and protection from the destroying angel (verses 18–21).

The Word of Wisdom was an inspired response to specific problems or paradoxes within the Church and to pressing social issues in contemporary American society. Brigham Young recalled in 1868 that Joseph Smith was bothered by the seeming incongruity of discussing spiritual matters in a cloud of tobacco smoke and that Joseph’s wife, Emma Smith, was bothered at having to clean the quid-littered floor. It is also probable that the Prophet was sensitive to, and supportive of, the widespread temperance sentiment of the 1830s. As was his custom, the Prophet went to the Lord for instructions, and section 89 is distinctive in the sense that it is a divinely approved code of health.

Interpretations and applications of the Word of Wisdom have gradually changed through the years. In part, this change is consistent with the Church’s belief in continuing revelation through living PROPHETS. With regard to this particular section, the varied interpretations also reflect some ambiguity in verse 2, which states that the revelation was given “not by commandment or constraint.” Since verses 1–4 were part of the introduction to this section in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, through the years there have been differences of opinion as to whether the Word of Wisdom is a commandment in the sense that observance is obligatory to enjoy full Church fellowship as well as whether observance implies abstinence or merely moderation.

In the mid-1830s, many Church members felt that abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, tea, and coffee was a criterion for fellowship. The one possible exception to this otherwise strict interpretation was wine, which some early Church leaders may not have considered “strong drink.” This early emphasis on abstinence or near abstinence failed to gain Church-wide or official acceptance, although Joseph Smith said no member “is worthy to hold an office” who has been taught the word of wisdom and fails “to comply with and obey it” (TPJS, p.117, fn.). Even so, the early statement gradually gave way to an emphasis on moderation. President Joseph F. Smith later taught that the Lord did not insist on strict compliance in these early years in order to allow a generation addicted to noxious substances some years to discard bad habits. This early pattern of moderation, observable by the 1840s, continued throughout the nineteenth century. President John TAYLOR initiated a reform in the early 1880s in which he stressed that all Church officers should abstain from the prohibited items, but his efforts were cut short by the social disruption caused by federal antipolygamy raids. While Church leaders did not require abstinence in the nineteenth century, they stressed moderation, counseled strongly against drunkenness, and opposed or carefully regulated the establishment of distilleries and grog shops. The numerous observations by visitors in UTAH TERRITORY attest to the prevailing orderliness and sobriety of Mormon communities and evidence the effectiveness of such preaching.

The path leading to the present position on the Word of Wisdom began with the presidency of Joseph F. Smith (1901–1918) and culminated in the administration of Heber J. Grant (1918–1945), who, more than any other Church leader, preached strict compliance with frequency and fervor. By the early 1930s, abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, tea, and coffee had become an established test of Church fellowship. There was no known specific revelation that brought this about. It resulted from Church leaders’ long-term concern over the deleterious physical and spiritual effects of alcohol, tobacco, tea, and coffee on both individuals and communities. National and local agitation over prohibition and the mounting scientific evidence attesting to the harmful effects of certain substances intensified that concern.

The Word of Wisdom has resulted in, among other things, better physical health among LDS people (see VITAL STATISTICS) and physical affirmations of truths received through revelation. It has also brought about a distinguishing separateness that reminds Latter-day Saints of their religious commitments and responsibilities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Alexander, Thomas G. Mormonism in Transition, pp. 258–71. Urbana, Ill., 1986.
- Bush, Lester E., Jr. “The Word of Wisdom in Early Nineteenth-Century Perspective.” Dialogue 14 (Fall 1981):47–65.

PAUL H. PETERSON

SECTION 93

Section 93 is a revelation received through the Prophet Joseph SMITH on May 6, 1833, during a conference of high priests at KIRTLAND, OHIO. It was first printed as chapter 82 of the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. The insights of this revelation pervade LDS understanding of the nature and relationship of God and man.

It begins with the divine promise that every soul who forsakes sin, comes unto Christ, calls upon his name, obeys his voice, and keeps his commandments shall see his face “and know that I am, and that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world” (verses 1–2).

The next verses refer to sayings from a record of John yet to be revealed in full. They are reminiscent of the prologue to John’s Gospel, but they also witness to Jesus’ baptism by John the Baptist.

Christ is called the Father and is one with the Father because “he gave me of his fulness” (verse 4). He is called the Word because he is the “messenger of salvation” (verse 8). In him is “the life of men and the light of men” (verse 9). “The worlds were made by him; men were made by him; all things were made by him, and through him, and of him” (verse 10).

In contrast with theologies of static being, several verses affirm Christ’s becoming. Three times they reiterate that Christ did not receive a fulness at the beginning but continued “from grace to grace” until he received a fulness of the glory of the Father (verses 12, 13, 14; cf. Luke 2:40; Heb. 5:8–9). Christ became like the Father in the exalted sense only after his resurrection and glorification (cf. Rev. 5:12–13). An understanding of this process is the foundation of authentic worship.

The revelation denies the notion of ex nihilo creation. The intelligence of man, “the light of truth,” (verse 29), is not created but is self-existent. Man, like Christ himself, “was . . . in the beginning with God” (verse 29). Furthermore, “The elements are eternal” (verse 33).

Truth is “knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come” (verse 24). Truth and intelligence are independent in the spheres in which God has placed them (verse 30). The spirit of man is native to the spirit of truth, which is “plainly manifest” from the beginning (verse 31). This is the basis of AGENCY and ACCOUNTABILITY. “Every man whose spirit receiveth not the light is under condemnation” (verse 32).

Christ is the exemplar in all things. All may “come unto the Father in my name” (verse 19) and, in due time, “be glorified in me as I am in the Father” (verse 20). Man is a temple and a defiled temple will be destroyed. “Spirit and element” inseparably connected (resurrected) can receive a fulness of joy. “The glory of God is intelligence” defined as “light and truth.” One who receives light and truth forsakes the evil one (verse 37).

“Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God having redeemed man from the fall, men became again, in their infant state, innocent before God” (verse 38). Through disobedience men become sinful, “light and truth” taken as they embrace the “traditions of their fathers” (verse 39).

The revelation closes with admonitions to the assembled high priests to set their houses in order by teaching the gospel more fully to their families (verses 42–50). Sidney Rigdon is to proclaim “the gospel of salvation” (verse 51) and the brethren are to “hasten to translate my scriptures” (Bible) and “to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man,” all “for the salvation of Zion” (verse 53).

DAN J. WORKMAN

SECTION 107

Section 107 is one of the most important statements in latter-day scripture on the divisions, offices, quorums, and councils of the PRIESTHOOD. Section 107 establishes an orderly arrangement of lay priesthood responsibilities at several levels. It was first published as Chapter III in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants and was entitled “On Priesthood.” Over the years it has been accepted as a major document and has been viewed as a wise and effective charter on priesthood keys and offices. It is the foundation of the priesthood administration of the Church (see ORGANIZATION).

On March 28, 1835, in Kirtland, Ohio, the recently organized QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES met in preparation for their mission to the eastern United States. Feeling a sense of inadequacy in their new callings as special witnesses for Christ, the quorum drafted a letter to the Prophet Joseph SMITH requesting a revelation on their behalf: “The time when we are about to separate is near; and when we shall meet again, God only knows; we therefore feel to ask of him whom we have acknowledged to be our Prophet and Seer, that he inquire of God for us, and obtain a revelation, (if consistent) that we may look upon it when we are separated, that our hearts may be comforted” (HC 2:209–210).

Joseph “inquired of the Lord” and received section 107:1–57. The document distinguishes the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD from the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD and defines which offices fall under each: The FIRST PRESIDENCY, and under it the twelve apostles, HIGH PRIESTS, and ELDERS, officiate in the Melchizedek Priesthood and function in all “spiritual things” (verses 1–12, 18–19, 21–26); the BISHOP, with his counselors, serves in the Aaronic Priesthood, which administers the “outward ordinances” of the Church, including baptism (verses 13–17, 20). The First Presidency presides over the Church; the Twelve are “special witnesses of the name of Christ in all the world” (verse 23); and the SEVENTY are called to preach the gospel abroad (verse 25).

The principles of priesthood organization established by this revelation combine democratic and hierarchic elements. “Of necessity there are presidents” over the several offices (verse 21), but every decision of one of the three governing quorums of the Church “must be by the unanimous voice of the same” (verse 27), made “in all righteousness, in holiness, and lowliness of heart” (verse 30). These quorums—the First Presidency, the Quorum of the Twelve, and the quorums of the Seventy—are “equal in authority” but function under the priesthood keys of the First Presidency, or of the Quorum of the Twelve when the presidency is dissolved on the death of the President (verses 22–26). The revelation also traces the lineage of the patriarchal priesthood in ancient times from Adam to Noah (verses 39–57).

With few exceptions, verses 58–100 were excerpted from an earlier revelation and vision that Joseph Smith had received. It declared that the President of the High Priesthood is “to preside over the whole Church, . . . like unto Moses” (verse 91), and defined the duties, presidencies, and membership limits for quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. It also specified the duties of the bishop as a judge in Zion and gave the procedures for trying the conduct of a general officer of the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cook, Lyndon W. The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith, pp. 215–16, 326–29. Provo, Utah, 1981.

WALTER D. BOWEN

SECTIONS 109–110

Section 109 is the dedicatory prayer for the KIRTLAND TEMPLE. Joseph Smith records that he received this prayer under the spirit of revelation (HC 2:420). The prayer contains some temple language repeated from Doctrine and Covenants 88 (see verses 119–21), and some passages in it pertaining to the redemption of Jerusalem are paralleled in the Orson Hyde prayer given on the Mount of Olives five years later.

Section 109 is Hebraic in tone and reminiscent of the Solomonic dedication of the first temple and the temple-related benedictions of Jewish tradition (cf. 1 Kgs. 8).

It begins with thanksgiving, “Thanks be to thy name, O Lord God of Israel, who keepest covenant and showest mercy”; seeks divine acceptance and visible manifestation of divine glory upon the temple and the faithful; petitions that God accept what has been done in the spirit of sacrifice; designates the building as a house of God, of prayer, fasting, faith, learning, glory, and order (verse 8; cf. verse 16), where the divine name may be put upon his servants; asks forgiveness and the blotting out of sin; pleads for emissaries of truth to go forth in power and seal their witness with power; pleads for protection from enemies and deliverance from the calamities in Missouri; and prays for mercy on the nations of the earth, for expansion of stakes, for the gathering of scattered Jacob and Judah, for the redemption of Jerusalem “from this hour” (verse 62), and finally for blessings on the homes and families of the leaders of the Church. It ends with “O hear, O hear, O hear us, O Lord . . . that we may mingle our voices with those bright, shining seraphs around thy throne” and an “Amen, and Amen” (verses 78, 80).

Section 110 is the record of events following the temple dedication on April 3, 1836. The account (not canonical in the RLDS church) was recorded by Joseph’s scribe Warren Cowdery, and first published one week after the events it describes in the Messenger and Advocate, and later was included in the 1876 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants (see headnote). After partaking of the sacrament and bowing in “solemn and silent prayer,” Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery received a shared vision. The Savior appeared and accepted the temple, saying, “My name shall be here; and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this house” (verse 7). MOSES next appeared to restore the “keys of the gathering of Israel from the four parts of the earth” (verse 11) preparatory to the renewal of temples and temple worship (see ISRAEL: GATHERING OF ISRAEL; TEMPLE ORDINANCES). Elias “committed the dispensation of the Gospel of Abraham” (verse 12) to restore the covenant promise made to Abraham that through him and his seed all generations would be blessed (see COVENANT OF ABRAHAM; GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM). Finally Elijah appeared and bestowed the keys of SEALING for all priesthood ordinances, including the sealing of families, and announced the imminence of the second coming of the Messiah (verses 13–16). This was in keeping with the final prophecy of Malachi that Elijah would come to turn the hearts of the children to the fathers before the great and dreadful day of the Lord (Mal. 4:5–6; see ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Sperry, Sidney B. Doctrine and Covenants Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1960.

S. MICHAEL WILCOX

SECTIONS 121–123

These sections are selections from a long letter written by Joseph Smith in LIBERTY JAIL, Missouri, on March 20, 1839, addressed “To the Church of Latter-day Saints at Quincy, Illinois and scattered abroad and to Bishop Partridge in particular” (HC 3:289). The power and richness of the letter, both its doctrinal content and its literary images, may have resulted from the Prophet’s personal suffering.

Section 121 begins with a prayer, a cry of “O God, where art thou?” a plea that God will recognize the sufferings of the Saints, punish their enemies, and avenge their wrongs (verses 1–6). In the next verse, the Prophet hears the consoling voice of inspiration saying, “My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment” (verse 7). He is reminded “Thy friends do stand by thee,” and promised “They shall hail thee again with warm hearts and friendly hands” (verse 9). “Thou art not yet as Job” (verse 10). The righteousness of the Saints’ actions is confirmed; in the Lord’s time those who have afflicted the Saints will be punished (verses 11–25).

Interior of the Liberty Jail, restored. Joseph Smith and his companions were held in the dark, low-ceilinged basement of this building from December 1838 to April 1839. D&C 121–123 were written in March, beginning with the prayer, “O God, where art thou?”

Verses 26–33 promise blessings of knowledge that will soon be poured out upon the Latter-day Saints by the Holy Spirit, including a knowledge of all God’s dominions and the laws by which they operate. The last part of section 121 includes some of the most sensitive and powerful verses in LDS scripture. Here the Prophet teaches against all forms of unrighteous dominion. True authority, he writes, is always linked to love. “No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned” (verse 41).

Section 122 is a revelation directed specifically to Joseph Smith, to help him understand the trials he is suffering. It assures him that he will be known for good among the noble and virtuous of the earth, and that his own people will never be turned against him by “the testimony of traitors” (verse 3). The verses graphically name perils and betrayals he has suffered or has yet to suffer, and then continues “Know thou, my son, that all these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good” (verse 7). The section ends by reminding the young prophet that “the Son of Man hath descended below them all” (verse 8).

Section 123 instructs the Saints in the steps they should take to seek redress for their persecution and losses in Missouri. They are admonished to compile lists of property damages and character and personal injuries, to take affidavits, and to gather libelous publications so that they may present their case before government officials. This course of action is explained as the last duty they owe to God, to their families, and to the rising generation. The section ends by assuring the Saints that these efforts, although they may not understand their value, will be important to the Church in the future (verse 15).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Christianson, James R. “A Ray of Light in an Hour of Darkness.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millett and K. Jackson 1:463–75. Salt Lake City, 1984.

Maxwell, Neal A. But for a Small Moment. Salt Lake City, 1986.

SUSAN HOWE

SECTION 124

Section 124, given January 19, 1841, to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, is the longest revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants. It was the first section received at NAUVOO, Illinois, and was first printed in the 1844 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants as number 103.

Church members had fled from Missouri to Illinois in 1839 to escape the EXTERMINATION ORDER of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs. The eastern banks of the Mississippi River became a place of refuge and the Church headquarters. By 1841, Nauvoo had been established there and the village had grown to approximately 3,000 inhabitants. In that setting, section 124 served as an important inaugural, a kind of constitution for further development of Nauvoo and the Church. It provided instruction on temporal, doctrinal, and organizational matters, and gave assignments and counsel to fifty-five individuals.

Section 124 includes the following:

- A charge to Joseph Smith to “make a solemn proclamation” of the gospel to rulers of all nations (verses 2–14, 16–17, 107).
- Directions to build the NAUVOO HOUSE, a hotel where “the weary traveler may find health and safety” while contemplating the word of the Lord (verses 22–24, 56–82).
- A commandment to members to assist in building the NAUVOO TEMPLE, begun three months earlier. It was to be a place for the Lord to restore the fulness of the PRIESTHOOD and reveal “things which have been kept hid from before the foundation of the world” pertaining to the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES (verses 25–28, 40–44; see also TEMPLE ORDINANCES).
- A promise that if members would hearken unto the voice of God and his servants, “they shall not be moved out of their place” (verses 45–46).
- A clarification on BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD, defined as a temple ordinance. The revelation said Moses had received a similar charge to build a tabernacle for ordinance work (verses 25–48).
- A declaration that efforts of the Saints to establish a city and temple in Missouri were accepted by the Lord, even though persecutions prevented their establishment at that time (verses 49–54).

- Callings and confirmations of various positions in the Church, including a listing of some new officers and a reiteration of some previous callings. For example, Hyrum SMITH was named as PATRIARCH, replacing his father, who had died September 14, 1840. Joseph Smith, Sidney RIGDON, and William Law were appointed to the FIRST PRESIDENCY. Brigham YOUNG was re-named President of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES (he had been sustained in this position on April 14, 1840), and assignments were made to that quorum. Twelve members were named for a stake HIGH COUNCIL, and others were called to serve in the presidencies of the high priests, elders, seventies, two bishoprics, and priests. Teachers, deacons, and stake organizations were mentioned, but no leadership assignments in these were made (verses 20–21, 123–42).

PAUL C. RICHARDS

SECTIONS 127–128

Sections 127 and 128 constitute two doctrinal letters dictated by the Prophet Joseph SMITH while “in exile” near Nauvoo, Illinois, during the first week of September 1842. His scribe was William Clayton. The sections were first published in the TIMES AND SEASONS on September 14 and October 1, 1842, and first appeared in the Doctrine and Covenants in 1844 as numbers 105 and 106.

These documents clarified and formalized the LDS doctrine and practice of BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD, a practice attested to in the first century at Corinth (1 Cor. 15:29). Two years earlier, while speaking at a funeral on August 15, 1840, Joseph Smith first publicly announced the privilege and the responsibility of Church members to perform baptisms for the dead (TPJS, p. 179). “It presents the Gospel of Christ in probably a more enlarged scale than some have imagined it” (TPJS, p. 180). Immediately thereafter, Church members began performing proxy baptisms in the Mississippi River. A year later, Joseph Smith declared, “There shall be no more baptism for the dead, until the ordinance can be attended to in the Lord’s House” (IHC 4:426). When the baptismal font in the Nauvoo Temple was completed November 21, 1841, baptisms for the dead were performed there (IHC 4:454).

Sections 127 and 128 stress the requirement for eyewitnesses and a recorder at all such baptisms.

mal services. Without authenticated records on earth and in heaven, a baptism is not deemed valid (D&C 127:6–9; 128:3–10).

In Section 128, the Prophet expounded on Malachi 4:5–6 and explained that baptism for the dead is “a welding link” between parents and children (D&C 128:18). He further explained that unless children are sealed by temple ordinances to their deceased forebears, who are in turn sealed to each other in God’s family, neither can be fully saved and exalted (verses 14, 15, 18). “They without us cannot be made perfect—neither can we without our dead be made perfect” (verse 15; cf. Hebrews 11:40).

Baptisms and other temple ordinances for the dead continue as a vital part of Church doctrine and practice.

GEORGE D. DURRANT

SECTIONS 131–132

These sections discuss the principle of eternal marriage as a requirement for obtaining the highest degree of glory in the celestial kingdom (D&C 131:1–4; cf. 76:50–70). In that exalted state, men and women become gods (see GODHOOD), continue to have children (see ETERNAL INCREASE), and come to know God fully (D&C 132:23–24).

Section 131 contains selected statements made by Joseph SMITH on May 16–17, 1843, during a visit to members of the Church in Ramus, Illinois, 22 miles east of Nauvoo (HC 5:391–93). They were recorded by William Clayton in his diary. In addition to its teachings on eternal marriage, section 131 also defines the phrase “more sure word of prophecy,” declares that no one can be saved in ignorance (cf. TPJS, p. 217), and explains that spirit is purified matter.

Section 132 contains the doctrinal basis of the practice of PLURAL MARRIAGE. Although some were distressed by it, others found plural marriage “the most holy and important doctrine ever revealed” (W. Clayton, in A. Jenson, Historical Record 6:226). This revelation was recorded on July 12, 1843, in the brick store in Nauvoo. At the urging of Hyrum SMITH so that Emma Smith might be convinced of its truth, the Prophet Joseph Smith dictated it sentence by sentence. Clayton reported that “after the whole was written Joseph asked me to read it through, slowly and carefully, which I did, and he pronounced it correct” (CHC 2:106– 107). That evening, Bishop Newel K. Whitney received permission to copy the revelation. The next day, his clerk, Joseph C. Kingsbury, copied the document, which Whitney and Kingsbury proofread against the original. This copy was given to Brigham YOUNG in March 1847; it was officially adopted as revelation at a general conference in Salt Lake City in August 1852, and was first published for public review in a Deseret News Extra of September 14, 1852.

The doctrines in this revelation were probably received sometime in 1831 while the Prophet was translating the Bible. In response to questions about the legitimacy of the ancient prophets’ plural marriages, the Lord revealed to Joseph Smith the conditions and requirements under which plural marriage was to be observed. Lyman Johnson told Orson Pratt that “Joseph had made known to him [Johnson] as early as 1831, that plural marriage was a correct principle,” but had said it was not yet time to teach and practice it (MS 40 [1878]:788). That date was later confirmed in various statements and affidavits collected by Joseph F. SMITH and others from those who had been close to Joseph Smith in Nauvoo.

Section 132 states that all covenants must be made in the proper manner, by proper authority, and be sealed by the Holy Spirit of Promise in order to be valid eternally (verses 7–19), and that through faithfulness eternal blessings are guaranteed to those who marry by this new and everlasting covenant: “Then shall they be gods, because they have no end; therefore shall they be from everlasting to everlasting, because they continue” (verse 20). This law was ordained before the world was, and through it Abraham received the promise of eternal lives through his seed (verses 28–37). Strict prohibitions against adultery accompany the law of eternal marriage (verses 38–44, 61–63). In concluding verses, Joseph Smith received divine affirmation of his eternal standing with God and acceptance of his labors (verses 45–50); and admonitions were given to Emma and others to observe this law and to multiply and replenish the earth so that God may be glorified (verses 51–66).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Daniel W. Bachman. “New Light on an Old Hypothesis: The Ohio Origins of the Revelation on Eternal Marriage.” Journal of Mormon History 5 (1978):19–32.

PAUL G. GRANT

SECTIONS 137–138

Section 137 reports a vision of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM recorded in the diary of Joseph SMITH. On January 21, 1836, he and several other Church leaders gathered in the Kirtland Temple for the ordinances of washing and anointing. Joseph blessed and anointed his aged father, Joseph SMITH, Sr., who in turn anointed the members of the Church presidency and sealed blessings upon the Prophet. Joseph recorded that as the presidency laid their hands on his head and prophesied, “the heavens were opened upon us and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof” (verse 1). He saw its streets as if paved with gold. The Father and the Son sat on a blazing throne. ADAM and ABRAHAM were there; so were Joseph’s parents, who were still alive at the time of the vision, and his brother Alvin, who had died before the priesthood was restored and hence had not been baptized for the remission of sins. The vision continued beyond that which is included in section 137 (HC 2:380–81; PWJS, pp. 145–46). Many present received visions and witnessed the glory of God fill the room.

Joseph’s vision was the first doctrinal revelation to the Church disclosing that the Lord will provide all who die without hearing the gospel an opportunity to hear and accept it in the SPIRIT WORLD so they can enter the celestial kingdom (D&C 137:8–9; clarifying 76:72) and that children who die before the age of accountability (eight years) will be heirs of the celestial kingdom (D&C 137:10).

Section 138 is the record of a vision received by President Joseph F. SMITH on October 3, 1918, as he was pondering the universal nature of the atonement of Jesus Christ and wondering how the Savior taught the spirits in prison in the brief time between his death and resurrection (D&C 138:1–11; cf. 1 Pet. 3:19; 4:6). He saw the visit of the Savior to the righteous spirits in PARADISE. He also observed that Jesus did not go in person among the wicked and disobedient but organized representatives from among the righteous spirits to carry the gospel to “all the spirits of men” (D&C 138:30). Those who were not taught the gospel on earth will be given the opportunity to hear it and accept its exalting fulness when taught by Christ’s authorized representatives in the spirit world; those spirits who are “in darkness and under the bondage of sin . . . who repent will be redeemed” (verses 138:57–58; cf. 76:74).

The accounts of these two visions were canonized in the general conference of April 1976 as additions to the Pearl of Great Price. They became sections in the Doctrine and Covenants in 1981.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Millet, Robert L. “Salvation Beyond the Grave (D&C 137 and 138).” In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 1, pp. 549–63, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson. Sandy, Utah, 1984.

LEON R. HARTSHORN

OFFICIAL DECLARATION—2

Declaration—2 revealed that the “long-promised day has come when every faithful, worthy man in the Church may receive the holy priesthood.” This “priesthood revelation” made it possible for all worthy males to be ordained to all levels of the PRIESTHOOD. Previously black members of the Church had been denied the priesthood, which precluded their holding priesthood CALLINGS and participation in most TEMPLE ORDINANCES.

The revelation was received by President Spencer W. KIMBALL “after extended meditation and prayer” in the SALT LAKE TEMPLE. That same revelation came to his counselors and to the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES in the temple, and then it was presented to all of the other GENERAL AUTHORITIES, who approved it unanimously. It was announced by letter to all priesthood officers of the Church and to the press on June 8, 1978. Declaration—2 contains the text of that letter and records its presentation and acceptance on September 30, 1978, in general conference by the COMMON CONSENT of the members of the Church. The revelation resolved problems for many members who had agonized over the prior practice (Bush and Mauss), the historical origins and ramifications of which had become the subject of considerable debate and reflection.

Since the announcement, missionaries have actively proselytized in many nations with large black populations, where thousands have become members of the Church. Dallin H. Oaks, an apostle, noted this growth in the LDS Afro-American Symposium held at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the revelation (Oaks). In particular, he pointed to the rapid growth in black converts in the Caribbean islands, West Africa, and Brazil.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bush, Lester E., and Armand L. Mauss, eds. Neither White nor Black: Mormon Scholars Confront the Race Issue in a Universal Church. Midvale, Utah, 1984.
- Grover, Mark L. "The Mormon Priesthood Revelation and the São Paulo Brazil Temple." Dialogue 23 (Spring 1990):39–53.
- McConkie, Bruce R. "All Are Alike unto God." In Second Annual CES Symposium, pp. 3–5. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Oaks, Dallin H. "For the Blessing of All His Children." Address, LDS Afro-American Symposium. Provo, June 8, 1988.

CARDELL JACOBSON

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS COMMENTARIES

Commentaries on the Doctrine and Covenants follow the pattern of many biblical commentaries, supplying the historical context, that is, the time, circumstances, and situation of the REVELATIONS. In the most recent (1981) edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, headnotes for each section have been added or enlarged, with a brief synopsis of the historical setting. Additional notes and explanations are provided by the various separately published commentaries discussed here. Commentaries written by members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles are given special consideration. Others are recommended as helps to the membership of the Church to provide historical insight to their study of the scriptures.

An early (1916) and still useful one-volume commentary was written by Hyrum M. Smith, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and Janne M. Sjodahl. Doctrine and Covenants Commentary contains the text of the Doctrine and Covenants and gives historical background and commentary for each section. It is extensively footnoted with exegetical notes. The volume was later supplemented and expanded under the direction of Joseph Fielding SMITH, Harold B. LEE, and Marion G. Romney of the Quorum of the Twelve.

The Message of the Doctrine and Covenants (1969, edited by G. Homer Durham) is a published version of a series of lectures delivered at the University of Southern California by John A. Widtsoe, also of the Quorum of the Twelve. The author's scientific background is apparent in his references to nineteenth- and twentieth-century scientific theory.

T. Edgar Lyon, former director of the INSTITUTE OF RELIGION adjacent to the University of Utah in Salt Lake City, published his Introduction to the Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price in 1948. He treats the work as a "connected message" and emphasizes the functional aspects of many topics, including priesthood, missionary work, Zion, gathering, ordinances, Christian teachings, economics, millennium, unique revelations, and literary value.

From 1947 through 1949 the Church published a series of manuals titled Church History and Modern Revelation, written by Joseph Fielding SMITH of the Quorum of the Twelve. It was a study course for the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD quorums of the Church. These volumes integrated each section of the Doctrine and Covenants with the life and times of the Prophet Joseph Smith. A more concise attempt at this approach was that of E. Cecil McGavin in a volume titled The Historical Background of the Doctrine and Covenants, published in 1949.

Sidney B. Sperry, longtime professor of Hebrew and ancient scripture at Brigham Young University, published A Doctrine and Covenants Compendium in 1960, which considered linguistic and doctrinal issues in detail.

A four-volume work titled The Latter-day Prophets and the Doctrine and Covenants (1963), by Roy W. Doxey, former dean of the College of Religious Instruction at Brigham Young University, includes statements of General Authorities on each section of the Doctrine and Covenants. It demonstrates applications of Doctrine and Covenants texts in homiletic settings.

A historical account is The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith by Lyndon W. Cook (1981), providing a compilation of background facts relevant to each section. Documented biographical profiles of the personalities mentioned in the text are included.

A commentary titled The Edwards Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants was written by F. Henry Edwards of the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS and published in 1946. This book provides a brief historical overview for each section and commentary on the major themes of the sections, as these relate and apply to the problems of that church.

A critical analysis of the earliest texts and publication of the Doctrine and Covenants is Robert J. Woodford's The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants, a Ph.D. dissertation, Brigham Young University, 1974. Other studies

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bush, Lester E., and Armand L. Mauss, eds. Neither White nor Black: Mormon Scholars Confront the Race Issue in a Universal Church. Midvale, Utah, 1984.
- Grover, Mark L. "The Mormon Priesthood Revelation and the São Paulo Brazil Temple." Dialogue 23 (Spring 1990):39–53.
- McConkie, Bruce R. "All Are Alike unto God." In Second Annual CES Symposium, pp. 3–5. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Oaks, Dallin H. "For the Blessing of All His Children." Address, LDS Afro-American Symposium. Provo, June 8, 1988.

CARDELL JACOBSON

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS COMMENTARIES

Commentaries on the Doctrine and Covenants follow the pattern of many biblical commentaries, supplying the historical context, that is, the time, circumstances, and situation of the REVELATIONS. In the most recent (1981) edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, headnotes for each section have been added or enlarged, with a brief synopsis of the historical setting. Additional notes and explanations are provided by the various separately published commentaries discussed here. Commentaries written by members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles are given special consideration. Others are recommended as helps to the membership of the Church to provide historical insight to their study of the scriptures.

An early (1916) and still useful one-volume commentary was written by Hyrum M. Smith, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and Janne M. Sjodahl. Doctrine and Covenants Commentary contains the text of the Doctrine and Covenants and gives historical background and commentary for each section. It is extensively footnoted with exegetical notes. The volume was later supplemented and expanded under the direction of Joseph Fielding SMITH, Harold B. LEE, and Marion G. Romney of the Quorum of the Twelve.

The Message of the Doctrine and Covenants (1969, edited by G. Homer Durham) is a published version of a series of lectures delivered at the University of Southern California by John A. Widtsoe, also of the Quorum of the Twelve. The author's scientific background is apparent in his references to nineteenth- and twentieth-century scientific theory.

T. Edgar Lyon, former director of the INSTITUTE OF RELIGION adjacent to the University of Utah in Salt Lake City, published his Introduction to the Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price in 1948. He treats the work as a "connected message" and emphasizes the functional aspects of many topics, including priesthood, missionary work, Zion, gathering, ordinances, Christian teachings, economics, millennium, unique revelations, and literary value.

From 1947 through 1949 the Church published a series of manuals titled Church History and Modern Revelation, written by Joseph Fielding SMITH of the Quorum of the Twelve. It was a study course for the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD quorums of the Church. These volumes integrated each section of the Doctrine and Covenants with the life and times of the Prophet Joseph Smith. A more concise attempt at this approach was that of E. Cecil McGavin in a volume titled The Historical Background of the Doctrine and Covenants, published in 1949.

Sidney B. Sperry, longtime professor of Hebrew and ancient scripture at Brigham Young University, published A Doctrine and Covenants Compendium in 1960, which considered linguistic and doctrinal issues in detail.

A four-volume work titled The Latter-day Prophets and the Doctrine and Covenants (1963), by Roy W. Doxey, former dean of the College of Religious Instruction at Brigham Young University, includes statements of General Authorities on each section of the Doctrine and Covenants. It demonstrates applications of Doctrine and Covenants texts in homiletic settings.

A historical account is The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith by Lyndon W. Cook (1981), providing a compilation of background facts relevant to each section. Documented biographical profiles of the personalities mentioned in the text are included.

A commentary titled The Edwards Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants was written by F. Henry Edwards of the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS and published in 1946. This book provides a brief historical overview for each section and commentary on the major themes of the sections, as these relate and apply to the problems of that church.

A critical analysis of the earliest texts and publication of the Doctrine and Covenants is Robert J. Woodford's The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants, a Ph.D. dissertation, Brigham Young University, 1974. Other studies are those by William E. Berrett, Teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants, 1961; Roy W. Doxey, Doctrine and Covenants Speaks, 2 vols., 1970; Richard O. Cowan, The Doctrine and Covenants, Our Modern Scripture, 1978; Daniel H. Ludlow, A Companion to Your Study of the Doctrine and Covenants, 1978; Leann G. Otten and C. Max Caldwell, Sacred Truths of the Doctrine and Covenants, 2 vols., 1982; and Robert L. Millet and Kent P. Jackson, eds., Studies in Scripture, the Doctrine and Covenants, 1985.

II. DEAN GARRETT

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS EDITIONS

The Doctrine and Covenants contains revelations from God as given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and later Presidents of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and includes other inspired writings and doctrinal declarations accepted as scripture by the Latter-day Saints. The first edition appeared in 1835. Later editions incorporated additional revelations and reference aids. The Doctrine and Covenants has been translated into many languages, though the English edition is the official version.

By the fall of 1831, Joseph Smith had recorded seventy or more revelations, most of which contained instructions to Church members. In a special conference held November 1, 1831, in Hiram, Ohio, the Church decided to publish a selection of these revelations, or “commandments.” A new revelation was received on that occasion as “my preface unto the book of my commandments,” from which the title of the 1833 compilation, the Book of Commandments, may have been taken (D&C 1:6). This publication was never completed; a mob destroyed the Independence, Missouri, press and all but about a hundred unfinished copies in July 1833. These few copies of the Book of Commandments were circulated within the Church and were often called the “Book of Covenants,” in reference to the lead section, which had circulated widely in handwritten versions as “The Articles and Covenants of the Church.” Received the day the Church was organized, this revelation is now section 20 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

THE 1835 EDITION. Shortly after the unsuccessful 1833 effort to print the Book of Commandments was stopped, plans were made to publish the revelations in Kirtland, Ohio. Renamed the Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, the book was presented to, and accepted by, the members of the Church in an August 1835 conference as the word of God. The change in name to Doctrine and Covenants reflected a change in content. Unlike the Book of Commandments, which contained revelations only, the Doctrine and Covenants was divided into two parts. The new first part consisted of seven theological presentations now known as the LECTURES ON FAITH but then titled “On the Doctrine of the Church of the Latter Day Saints.” The part including the revelations published previously, the original preface, and a number of new revelations not in the 1833 compilation, were titled “Part Second, Covenants and Commandments.” The title of the Doctrine and Covenants reflects the subtitles of these two parts.

In preparing the 1835 edition, Joseph Smith and a committee appointed to the task on September 24, 1834 (HC 2:165, 243–44) edited the revelations that had formerly appeared in the Book of Commandments. They corrected scribal and printing errors and occasionally clarified the text. They added explanations of the duties of officers that were new in the Church organization since the earlier revelations were received. They also combined some of the revelations to simplify publication and corrected grammatical problems.

The 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants contained 103 sections, though two sections were inadvertently numbered 66, so that the last one’s number was printed 102. Sections 1–100 were revelations to Joseph Smith. Section 101 prescribed practices for MARRIAGE. Section 102 stated the appropriate relationship of the Church to governments (see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS). These two sections were not revelations but were included as expressions of belief of the Church at that time. Oliver COWDERY (and possibly W. W. Phelps) wrote them, probably in response to critics of the doctrines and activities of the Church. Although Joseph Smith subsequently endorsed the statement on government, there is evidence that he opposed including the statement on marriage from the beginning, and it was eventually removed (see Cook, pp. 348–49, n. 11).

THE 1844 NAUVOO EDITION. By 1840 the Church needed a new edition of the Doctrine and are those by William E. Berrett, Teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants, 1961; Roy W. Doxey, Doctrine and Covenants Speaks, 2 vols., 1970; Richard O. Cowan, The Doctrine and Covenants, Our Modern Scripture, 1978; Daniel H. Ludlow, A Companion to Your Study of the Doctrine and Covenants, 1978; Leann G. Otten and C. Max Caldwell, Sacred Truths of the Doctrine and Covenants, 2 vols., 1982; and Robert L. Millet and Kent P. Jackson, eds., Studies in Scripture, the Doctrine and Covenants, 1985.

II. DEAN GARRETT

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS EDITIONS

The Doctrine and Covenants contains revelations from God as given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and later Presidents of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and includes other inspired writings and doctrinal declarations accepted as scripture by the Latter-day Saints. The first edition appeared in 1835. Later editions incorporated additional revelations and reference aids. The Doctrine and Covenants has been translated into many languages, though the English edition is the official version.

By the fall of 1831, Joseph Smith had recorded seventy or more revelations, most of which contained instructions to Church members. In a special conference held November 1, 1831, in Hiram, Ohio, the Church decided to publish a selection of these revelations, or “commandments.” A new revelation was received on that occasion as “my preface unto the book of my commandments,” from which the title of the 1833 compilation, the Book of Commandments, may have been taken (D&C 1:6). This publication was never completed; a mob destroyed the Independence, Missouri, press and all but about a hundred unfinished copies in July 1833. These few copies of the Book of Commandments were circulated within the Church and were often called the “Book of Covenants,” in reference to the lead section, which had circulated widely in handwritten versions as “The Articles and Covenants of the Church.” Received the day the Church was organized, this revelation is now section 20 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

THE 1835 EDITION. Shortly after the unsuccessful 1833 effort to print the Book of Commandments

was stopped, plans were made to publish the revelations in Kirtland, Ohio. Renamed the Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, the book was presented to, and accepted by, the members of the Church in an August 1835 conference as the word of God. The change in name to Doctrine and Covenants reflected a change in content. Unlike the Book of Commandments, which contained revelations only, the Doctrine and Covenants was divided into two parts. The new first part consisted of seven theological presentations now known as the LECTURES ON FAITH but then titled “On the Doctrine of the Church of the Latter Day Saints.” The part including the revelations published previously, the original preface, and a number of new revelations not in the 1833 compilation, were titled “Part Second, Covenants and Commandments.” The title of the Doctrine and Covenants reflects the subtitles of these two parts.

In preparing the 1835 edition, Joseph Smith and a committee appointed to the task on September 24, 1834 (HC 2:165, 243–44) edited the revelations that had formerly appeared in the Book of Commandments. They corrected scribal and printing errors and occasionally clarified the text. They added explanations of the duties of officers that were new in the Church organization since the earlier revelations were received. They also combined some of the revelations to simplify publication and corrected grammatical problems.

The 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants contained 103 sections, though two sections were inadvertently numbered 66, so that the last one’s number was printed 102. Sections 1–100 were revelations to Joseph Smith. Section 101 prescribed practices for MARRIAGE. Section 102 stated the appropriate relationship of the Church to governments (see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS). These two sections were not revelations but were included as expressions of belief of the Church at that time. Oliver COWDERY (and possibly W. W. Phelps) wrote them, probably in response to critics of the doctrines and activities of the Church. Although Joseph Smith subsequently endorsed the statement on government, there is evidence that he opposed including the statement on marriage from the beginning, and it was eventually removed (see Cook, pp. 348–49, n. 11).

THE 1844 NAUVOO EDITION. By 1840 the Church needed a new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. The 1835 edition had sold out, and Joseph Smith had received additional revelations. The new edition appeared in Nauvoo shortly after the death of Joseph Smith in 1844. The eight newly added revelations are numbered sections 103, 105, 112, 119, 124, 127, 128, and 135 in the 1981 edition. The metal printing plates from the 1844 edition were used in the 1845 and 1846 reprintings.

THE 1845 LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND, EDITION. In 1847, Brigham YOUNG led the members of the Church to the Salt Lake Valley, where they had no facilities to print books. In 1845 Wilford Woodruff printed 3,000 copies of the Doctrine and Covenants in England for the growing LDS population in the British Isles. This edition included the new revelations published in the 1844 Nauvoo edition. Other Church representatives arranged reprintings in England in 1849, 1852, 1854, 1866, and 1869 and shipped most of the 1854 printing to Salt Lake City because of very limited facilities for printing there.

THE 1876 EDITION. In 1876 Orson Pratt, a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES and Church historian, acting under the direction of President Brigham Young, prepared a new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants in Salt Lake City. He divided each revelation into verses and added twenty-six revelations not previously included. They are now sections 2, 13, 77, 85, 87, 108–11, 113–18, 120–23, 125, 126, 129–32, and 136. Since section 132 contained information about PLURAL MARRIAGE inconsistent with the 1835 article on marriage, the latter was eliminated.

THE 1879 EDITION. Three years later, Pratt published another edition in England in which he added footnotes to the text. He also requested permission from President John Taylor to drop the “Lectures on Faith,” but was instructed that, though the time might come to do this, it was not yet. This edition was published in 1879 in England and in 1880 in Salt Lake City from duplicate plates. President George Q. Cannon, a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY, presented this edition to the members of the Church in a fiftieth jubilee conference held in October 1880; they accepted the book as scripture.

From 1880 to 1920 the Church published at least twenty-eight printings from this edition. Beginning in 1908, each printing included a concordance and excerpts from President of the Church

Wilford Woodruff’s “Manifesto,” an official declaration ending plural marriage.

THE 1921 EDITION. In 1920, President Heber J. GRANT assigned a committee of six members of the Council of the Twelve to prepare a new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. The major change in the 1921 edition was the removal of the “Lectures on Faith,” which were not considered to be revelations. The committee also revised the footnotes and divided the pages into double columns. Even though the name of the collection had been changed in the 1835 edition to signal the addition of the “Lectures on Faith,” it was not changed back when the lectures were deleted. The 1921 edition was the standard until 1981.

THE 1981 EDITION. A committee appointed by the First Presidency of the Church directed the publication of a new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants in 1981. New features included completely revised footnotes and rewritten introductory headings for each section. Two additional sections and a second official declaration were also incorporated. Section 137 is a portion of a vision of the celestial kingdom given to Joseph Smith in the Kirtland Temple on January 21, 1836. Section 138 is a vision about the redemption of the dead given to Joseph F. SMITH, sixth President of the Church, in 1918. OFFICIAL DECLARATION—2 is the 1978 announcement by the First Presidency that all worthy male members of the Church can be ordained to the priesthood.

FOREIGN-LANGUAGE EDITIONS. The Church has also published the Doctrine and Covenants in many languages other than English. Beginning in 1851 with the Welsh edition, the Doctrine and Covenants has been translated and published in its entirety in a score or more languages and selections from it in many others.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cook, Lyndon W. The Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith: A Historical and Bibliographical Commentary of the Doctrine and Covenants. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Gentry, Leland H. “What of the Lectures on Faith?” BYU Studies 19 (Fall 1978):5–19.
- Lambert, A. C. The Published Editions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in All Languages, 1833–1950. Provo, Utah, 1950.
- Woodford, Robert J. “The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants.” 3 vols. Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1974.

———. “The Doctrine and Covenants: A Historical Overview.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 3–22. Sandy, Utah, 1984.

ROBERT J. WOODFORD

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS AS LITERATURE

The literary quality of the Doctrine and Covenants can best be seen in its similarities to a near literary relation—that “noblest monument of English prose,” the King James Version of the BIBLE. Although a truly unique religious text, the Doctrine and Covenants contains more than 2,000 close parallels to biblical passages, and the literary manner of the book is similar to the Bible in subject matter. Like earlier scripture, the Doctrine and Covenants offers a rainbow of literary genres. The collection of revelations ranges from forms as transcendent as VISIONS (sections 3, 76, 110), angelic annunciations (sections 2, 13, 27), and PROPHECIES (sections 87, 121); through such ecclesiastical proclamations as PRAYERS (sections 109, 121), epistles (sections 127, 128), scriptural explanations (sections 74, 77, 86), COMMANDMENTS (section 19), and official declarations; to down-to-earth instructions (sections 130, 131) and minutes of meetings (section 102).

The literary kinship of the Doctrine and Covenants with the Bible is more apparent in tone than in style. The Doctrine and Covenants, for instance, is impressive for a simple, condensed straightforwardness that lends itself to statements remarkably rich in implication. The following two examples are from a single section: “Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come” (D&C 93:24). “The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth” (93:36). These lines are not set in contexts that illuminate them so much as they are parts of a sorites—conclusions without the use of thesis and antithesis.

Tonal richness sometimes expresses itself in vivid metaphor. A single section of the Doctrine and Covenants, for example, displays a sensitive sequence of images of water—progress like “rolling waters” that cannot “remain impure” (D&C 121:33), evil prospects that shall “melt away as the hoar frost melteth before the burning rays of the rising sun” (121:11), and DOCTRINE that will “distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven” (121:45).

As the most recent compilation of divine prophecy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Doctrine and Covenants provides the invaluable literary benefit of immediacy; divinity can be approached by modern readers through this book naturally and directly. It locates the reader not in the distant past of Ophir or Tarsus but in the recent history of such familiar landscapes as New York and Boston, where God reveals himself in close proximity. That closeness is apparent in his manner of address; he refers to recipients of his revelations a half dozen times in the book as “friends” (D&C 84:63; 84:77; 94:1; 98:1; 100:1; 104:1).

That is how the voice of the God of ABRAHAM and Isaac and of PETER and PAUL addresses readers in the Doctrine and Covenants—as friends. The most striking literary characteristic of the book is the directness of its access to God. When Joseph Smith cries out in a long and painful prayer of reproach, “O God, where art thou?” the Father’s response is as immediately comforting to present readers as it was to the Prophet: “My son, peace be unto thy soul” (D&C 121:1, 7). The Doctrine and Covenants speaks with biblical power to the immediate conditions of modern life. In the most difficult moments of current circumstance, the Doctrine and Covenants lifts readers’ eyes above mortal disappointments toward eternal hopes: “All these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good” (122:7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Sperry, Sidney B. Doctrine and Covenants Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Walker, Steven C. “The Voice of the Prophet.” BYU Studies 10 (Autumn 1969):95–106.

STEVEN C. WALKER

DOVE, SIGN OF THE

All four Gospel writers indicate that at the baptism of Jesus, JOHN THE BAPTIST saw the Spirit descend upon Jesus like a dove (Matt. 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32). The JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE, John 1:31–33, reads: “And John bare record, saying: When he was baptized of me, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I

———. “The Doctrine and Covenants: A Historical Overview.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 3–22. Sandy, Utah, 1984.

ROBERT J. WOODFORD

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS AS LITERATURE

The literary quality of the Doctrine and Covenants can best be seen in its similarities to a near literary relation—that “noblest monument of English prose,” the King James Version of the BIBLE. Although a truly unique religious text, the Doctrine and Covenants contains more than 2,000 close parallels to biblical passages, and the literary manner of the book is similar to the Bible in subject matter. Like earlier scripture, the Doctrine and Covenants offers a rainbow of literary genres. The collection of revelations ranges from forms as transcendent as VISIONS (sections 3, 76, 110), angelic annunciations (sections 2, 13, 27), and PROPHECIES (sections 87, 121); through such ecclesiastical proclamations as PRAYERS (sections 109, 121), epistles (sections 127, 128), scriptural explanations (sections 74, 77, 86), COMMANDMENTS (section 19), and official declarations; to down-to-earth instructions (sections 130, 131) and minutes of meetings (section 102).

The literary kinship of the Doctrine and Covenants with the Bible is more apparent in tone than in style. The Doctrine and Covenants, for instance, is impressive for a simple, condensed straightforwardness that lends itself to statements remarkably rich in implication. The following two examples are from a single section: “Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come” (D&C 93:24). “The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth” (93:36). These lines are not set in contexts that illuminate them so much as they are parts of a sorites—conclusions without the use of thesis and antithesis.

Tonal richness sometimes expresses itself in vivid metaphor. A single section of the Doctrine and Covenants, for example, displays a sensitive sequence of images of water—progress like “rolling waters” that cannot “remain impure” (D&C 121:33), evil prospects that shall “melt away as the hoar frost melteth before the burning rays of the rising sun” (121:11), and DOCTRINE that will “distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven” (121:45).

As the most recent compilation of divine prophecy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Doctrine and Covenants provides the invaluable literary benefit of immediacy; divinity can be approached by modern readers through this book naturally and directly. It locates the reader not in the distant past of Ophir or Tarsus but in the recent history of such familiar landscapes as New York and Boston, where God reveals himself in close proximity. That closeness is apparent in his manner of address; he refers to recipients of his revelations a half dozen times in the book as “friends” (D&C 84:63; 84:77; 94:1; 98:1; 100:1; 104:1).

That is how the voice of the God of ABRAHAM and Isaac and of PETER and PAUL addresses readers in the Doctrine and Covenants—as friends. The most striking literary characteristic of the book is the directness of its access to God. When Joseph Smith cries out in a long and painful prayer of reproach, “O God, where art thou?” the Father’s response is as immediately comforting to present readers as it was to the Prophet: “My son, peace be unto thy soul” (D&C 121:1, 7). The Doctrine and Covenants speaks with biblical power to the immediate conditions of modern life. In the most difficult moments of current circumstance, the Doctrine and Covenants lifts readers’ eyes above mortal disappointments toward eternal hopes: “All these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good” (122:7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Sperry, Sidney B. Doctrine and Covenants Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Walker, Steven C. “The Voice of the Prophet.” BYU Studies 10 (Autumn 1969):95–106.

STEVEN C. WALKER

DOVE, SIGN OF THE

All four Gospel writers indicate that at the baptism of Jesus, JOHN THE BAPTIST saw the Spirit descend upon Jesus like a dove (Matt. 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32). The JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE, John 1:31–33, reads: “And John bare record, saying: When he was baptized of me, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I

———. “The Doctrine and Covenants: A Historical Overview.” In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 1, pp. 3–22. Sandy, Utah, 1984.

ROBERT J. WOODFORD

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS AS LITERATURE

The literary quality of the Doctrine and Covenants can best be seen in its similarities to a near literary relation—that “noblest monument of English prose,” the King James Version of the BIBLE. Although a truly unique religious text, the Doctrine and Covenants contains more than 2,000 close parallels to biblical passages, and the literary manner of the book is similar to the Bible in subject matter. Like earlier scripture, the Doctrine and Covenants offers a rainbow of literary genres. The collection of revelations ranges from forms as transcendent as VISIONS (sections 3, 76, 110), angelic annunciations (sections 2, 13, 27), and PROPHECIES (sections 87, 121); through such ecclesiastical proclamations as PRAYERS (sections 109, 121), epistles (sections 127, 128), scriptural explanations (sections 74, 77, 86), COMMANDMENTS (section 19), and official declarations; to down-to-earth instructions (sections 130, 131) and minutes of meetings (section 102).

The literary kinship of the Doctrine and Covenants with the Bible is more apparent in tone than in style. The Doctrine and Covenants, for instance, is impressive for a simple, condensed straightforwardness that lends itself to statements remarkably rich in implication. The following two examples are from a single section: “Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come” (D&C 93:24). “The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth” (93:36). These lines are not set in contexts that illuminate them so much as they are parts of a sorites—conclusions without the use of thesis and antithesis.

Tonal richness sometimes expresses itself in vivid metaphor. A single section of the Doctrine and Covenants, for example, displays a sensitive sequence of images of water—progress like “rolling waters” that cannot “remain impure” (D&C 121:33), evil prospects that shall “melt away as the hoar frost melteth before the burning rays of the rising sun” (121:11), and DOCTRINE that will “distil upon thy soul as the dews from heaven” (121:45).

As the most recent compilation of divine prophecy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Doctrine and Covenants provides the invaluable literary benefit of immediacy; divinity can be approached by modern readers through this book naturally and directly. It locates the reader not in the distant past of Ophir or Tarsus but in the recent history of such familiar landscapes as New York and Boston, where God reveals himself in close proximity. That closeness is apparent in his manner of address; he refers to recipients of his revelations a half dozen times in the book as “friends” (D&C 84:63; 84:77; 94:1; 98:1; 100:1; 104:1).

That is how the voice of the God of ABRAHAM and Isaac and of PETER and PAUL addresses readers in the Doctrine and Covenants—as friends. The most striking literary characteristic of the book is the directness of its access to God. When Joseph Smith cries out in a long and painful prayer of reproach, “O God, where art thou?” the Father’s response is as immediately comforting to present readers as it was to the Prophet: “My son, peace be unto thy soul” (D&C 121:1, 7). The Doctrine and Covenants speaks with biblical power to the immediate conditions of modern life. In the most difficult moments of current circumstance, the Doctrine and Covenants lifts readers’ eyes above mortal disappointments toward eternal hopes: “All these things shall give thee experience, and shall be for thy good” (122:7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Sperry, Sidney B. Doctrine and Covenants Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1960.
- Walker, Steven C. “The Voice of the Prophet.” BYU Studies 10 (Autumn 1969):95–106.

STEVEN C. WALKER

DOVE, SIGN OF THE

All four Gospel writers indicate that at the baptism of Jesus, JOHN THE BAPTIST saw the Spirit descend upon Jesus like a dove (Matt. 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32). The JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE, John 1:31–33, reads: “And John bare record, saying: When he was baptized of me, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him. And I knew him; for he who sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me: Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God” (see also JST Matt. 3:45–46).

The HOLY GHOST is a spirit person in the form of man (D&C 130:22) and does not transform himself into a dove or any other form. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained: “The sign of the dove was instituted before the creation of the world, a witness for the Holy Ghost, and the devil cannot come in the sign of a dove. The Holy Ghost is a personage [a man], and is in the form of a personage [a man]. It does not confine itself to the form of the dove, but in sign [symbol or representation] of the dove. The Holy Ghost cannot be transformed into a dove; but the sign of a dove was given to John to signify the truth of the deed, as the dove is an emblem or token of truth and innocence” (TPJS, p. 276). The dove was a supernatural sign given to John to witness the identity of the MESSIAH. Some non-LDS scholars have entertained differing opinions as to whether or not a real dove was present. Joseph Smith’s explanation leads toward a conclusion that the dove was not literally present (see JESUS CHRIST: BAPTISM).

Other references to the sign of the dove are 1 Nephi 11:27; 2 Nephi 31:8 and Doctrine and Covenants 93:15. The BOOK OF ABRAHAM states that to Abraham also was revealed “the sign of the Holy Ghost in the form of a dove” (Facsimile 2, Fig. 7).

ROBERT L. MARROTT

DRAMA

Latter-day Saints have supported and participated in theatrical activities throughout their history. Members of the Church established one of the first community theaters in America at Nauvoo, Illinois, in the 1840s. The Prophet Joseph SMITH directed that a home dramatic company be established. He taught the Saints to seek after all things “virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy” (A of F 13). These included theater, drama, and the related arts—music, dance, painting, singing, acting, and writing. Theatrical activity in Nauvoo did not cease until 1846, when the city was besieged and the Saints were driven out.

Soon after arriving in Salt Lake Valley in 1847, the Latter-day Saints erected what they call a bowery (a temporary shelter made from placing tree boughs on a frame structure) on the southeast cor-knew him; for he who sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me: Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God” (see also JST Matt. 3:45–46).

LDS wards use drama or “roadshows” for entertainment, celebration, and instruction. This pioneer pageant was presented in the Logan, Utah, Fourth Ward in 1979. Courtesy Craig Law.

The HOLY GHOST is a spirit person in the form of man (D&C 130:22) and does not transform himself into a dove or any other form. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained: “The sign of the dove was instituted before the creation of the world, a witness for the Holy Ghost, and the devil cannot come in the sign of a dove. The Holy Ghost is a personage [a man], and is in the form of a personage [a man]. It does not confine itself to the form of the dove, but in sign [symbol or representation] of the dove. The Holy Ghost cannot be transformed into a dove; but the sign of a dove was given to John to signify the truth of the deed, as the dove is an emblem or token of truth and innocence” (TPJS, p. 276). The dove was a supernatural sign given to John to witness the identity of the MESSIAH. Some non-LDS scholars have entertained differing opinions as to whether or not a real dove was present. Joseph Smith’s explanation leads toward a conclusion that the dove was not literally present (see JESUS CHRIST: BAPTISM).

Other references to the sign of the dove are 1 Nephi 11:27; 2 Nephi 31:8 and Doctrine and Covenants 93:15. The BOOK OF ABRAHAM states that to Abraham also was revealed “the sign of the Holy Ghost in the form of a dove” (Facsimile 2, Fig. 7).

ROBERT L. MARROTT

DRAMA

Latter-day Saints have supported and participated in theatrical activities throughout their history. Members of the Church established one of the first community theaters in America at Nauvoo, Illinois, in the 1840s. The Prophet Joseph SMITH directed that a home dramatic company be established. He taught the Saints to seek after all things “virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy” (A of F 13). These included theater, drama, and the related arts—music, dance, painting, singing, acting, and writing. Theatrical activity in Nauvoo did not cease until 1846, when the city was besieged and the Saints were driven out.

Soon after arriving in Salt Lake Valley in 1847, the Latter-day Saints erected what they call a bowery (a temporary shelter made from placing tree boughs on a frame structure) on the southeast corner of what became TEMPLE SQUARE. Three successively larger boweries replaced the first. Concerts, plays, and dances were performed there. President Brigham Young observed, "If I were placed on a cannibal island and given a task of civilizing its people, I should straightway build a theatre" (Skidmore, p. 47).

LDS wards use drama or “roadshows” for entertainment, celebration, and instruction. This pioneer pageant was presented in the Logan, Utah, Fourth Ward in 1979. Courtesy Craig Law.

Social Hall in Salt Lake City was formally dedicated in 1853, scarcely more than five years after the arrival of the Mormon pioneers in the valley. In Utah and the Mormons, Benjamin G. Ferris described the presentations held there: "During the winter they keep up theatrical exhibitions in Social Hall, and generally the performances are better sustained in all their parts than in theatres of Atlantic cities" (quoted in Maughan, p. 5).

The SALT LAKE THEATRE, one of the finest theater buildings of its time, was dedicated in 1862. Brigham Young believed that it had been created for an ennobling purpose. During the dedicatory service, he said, "On the stage of a theatre can be represented in character evil and its consequences, good and its happy results and rewards, the weaknesses and follies of man and the magnanimity of the virtuous life" (quoted in Maughan, p. 84).

The tradition of theater continues in the Church today. Latter-day Saints write and produce plays, musicals, and roadshows. Roadshows are original mini-musicals, locally created and produced under the sponsorship of WARD and STAKE activities committees. The Church also sponsors religious pageants, including those presented annually in Palmyra-Manchester, New York; Nauvoo, Illinois; Independence, MISSOURI; Temple View, New Zealand; Calgary, Canada; Oakland, California; Mesa, Arizona; and Manti and Clarkston, Utah (see PAGEANTS).

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY in Utah and RICKS COLLEGE in Idaho have theater departments that train playwrights, actors, directors, and designers. The Promised Valley Playhouse in Salt Lake City is owned and operated by the Church. It stages its own productions, and its facilities are also available for stake and ward performances.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clinger, Morris M. "A History of Theatre in Mormon Colleges and Universities." Ph.D. diss., University of Minnesota, 1963.
- Gledhill, Preston R. "Mormon Dramatic Activities." Ph.D. diss., University of Wisconsin, 1950.
- Maughan, Ila Fisher. Pioneer Theatre in the Desert. Salt Lake City, 1961.

Skidmore, Rex A. "Mormon Recreation in Theory and Practice: A Study of Social Change." Ph.D. diss., University of Pennsylvania, 1941.

CHARLES L. METTEN

---

DRUGS, ABUSE OF

The abuse of drugs is contrary to the teachings of the Church. Leaders have frequently cautioned members against using narcotics such as marijuana, heroin, LSD, and crack-cocaine, as well as misusing prescription medication or over-the-counter drugs. In the October 1974 General Conference, President Spencer W. KIMBALL stated, "We hope our people will eliminate from their lives all kinds of drugs so far as possible. Too many depend upon drugs as tranquilizers and sleep helps, which is not always necessary. Certainly numerous young people have been damaged or destroyed by the use of marijuana and other deadly drugs. We deplore such" (Ensign 4 [Nov. 1974]:6).

Latter-day Saints view drug abuse as harmful to both the physical and spiritual health of the individual. Drug abuse frequently results in substance addiction, which severely limits personal freedom. That AGENCY is vital and has eternal consequences is reason enough to avoid abuse and addiction. Furthermore, the impact on one's health and general well-being is often severe. Though not explicitly mentioned in the WORD OF WISDOM, the Church's health code revealed in 1833 (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89), drug abuse is nonetheless viewed as contrary to its precepts. President Joseph Fielding SMITH explained that additional revelation in regard to drugs was unnecessary because if members "sincerely follow what is written with the aid of the Spirit of the Lord, [they] need no further counsel" (IE 59 [Feb. 1956]:78).

Bishops counsel drug addicts to seek professional treatment to help them overcome their addiction, and offer assistance as appropriate through LDS SOCIAL SERVICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Swinyard, Ewart A. "Wisdom in All Things." New Era 4 (Sept. 1974):44-49.

RAY G. SCHWARTZ

ner of what became TEMPLE SQUARE. Three successively larger boweries replaced the first. Concerts, plays, and dances were performed there. President Brigham Young observed, "If I were placed on a cannibal island and given a task of civilizing its people, I should straightway build a theatre" (Skidmore, p. 47).

Social Hall in Salt Lake City was formally dedicated in 1853, scarcely more than five years after the arrival of the Mormon pioneers in the valley. In Utah and the Mormons, Benjamin G. Ferris described the presentations held there: "During the winter they keep up theatrical exhibitions in Social Hall, and generally the performances are better sustained in all their parts than in theatres of Atlantic cities" (quoted in Maughan, p. 5).

The SALT LAKE THEATRE, one of the finest theater buildings of its time, was dedicated in 1862. Brigham Young believed that it had been created for an ennobling purpose. During the dedicatory service, he said, "On the stage of a theatre can be represented in character evil and its consequences, good and its happy results and rewards, the weaknesses and follies of man and the magnanimity of the virtuous life" (quoted in Maughan, p. 84).

The tradition of theater continues in the Church today. Latter-day Saints write and produce plays, musicals, and roadshows. Roadshows are original mini-musicals, locally created and produced under the sponsorship of WARD and STAKE activities committees. The Church also sponsors religious pageants, including those presented annually in Palmyra-Manchester, New York; Nauvoo, Illinois; Independence, MISSOURI; Temple View, New Zealand; Calgary, Canada; Oakland, California; Mesa, Arizona; and Manti and Clarkston, Utah (see PAGEANTS).

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY in Utah and RICKS COLLEGE in Idaho have theater departments that train playwrights, actors, directors, and designers. The Promised Valley Playhouse in Salt Lake City is owned and operated by the Church. It stages its own productions, and its facilities are also available for stake and ward performances.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clinger, Morris M. "A History of Theatre in Mormon Colleges and Universities." Ph.D. diss., University of Minnesota, 1963.
- Gledhill, Preston R. "Mormon Dramatic Activities." Ph.D. diss., University of Wisconsin, 1950.
- Maughan, Ila Fisher. Pioneer Theatre in the Desert. Salt Lake City, 1961.

Skidmore, Rex A. "Mormon Recreation in Theory and Practice: A Study of Social Change." Ph.D. diss., University of Pennsylvania, 1941.

CHARLES L. METTEN

---

DRUGS, ABUSE OF

The abuse of drugs is contrary to the teachings of the Church. Leaders have frequently cautioned members against using narcotics such as marijuana, heroin, LSD, and crack-cocaine, as well as misusing prescription medication or over-the-counter drugs. In the October 1974 General Conference, President Spencer W. KIMBALL stated, "We hope our people will eliminate from their lives all kinds of drugs so far as possible. Too many depend upon drugs as tranquilizers and sleep helps, which is not always necessary. Certainly numerous young people have been damaged or destroyed by the use of marijuana and other deadly drugs. We deplore such" (Ensign 4 [Nov. 1974]:6).

Latter-day Saints view drug abuse as harmful to both the physical and spiritual health of the individual. Drug abuse frequently results in substance addiction, which severely limits personal freedom. That AGENCY is vital and has eternal consequences is reason enough to avoid abuse and addiction. Furthermore, the impact on one's health and general well-being is often severe. Though not explicitly mentioned in the WORD OF WISDOM, the Church's health code revealed in 1833 (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89), drug abuse is nonetheless viewed as contrary to its precepts. President Joseph Fielding SMITH explained that additional revelation in regard to drugs was unnecessary because if members "sincerely follow what is written with the aid of the Spirit of the Lord, [they] need no further counsel" (IE 59 [Feb. 1956]:78).

Bishops counsel drug addicts to seek professional treatment to help them overcome their addiction, and offer assistance as appropriate through LDS SOCIAL SERVICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Swinyard, Ewart A. "Wisdom in All Things." New Era 4 (Sept. 1974):44-49.

RAY G. SCHWARTZ

---

E

---

---

EARTH

Latter-day Saints believe that God created this earth to provide his children, the human race, with the opportunity to receive physical bodies and to hear and accept his gospel that they might be prepared for life with him on a celestialized earth hereafter. They also believe that this earth eventually will become a celestial, glorified world. Jesus Christ, under direction of God the Father, was the creator of the earth and all things in it (John 1:1–3). Creation was first a spirit creation followed by a physical creation of the planet and life on it. One LDS scholar observed, “The Latter-day Saints are the only Bible-oriented people who have always been taught that things were happening long, long before Adam appeared on the scene” (CWHN 1:49). Because God created the earth for these eternal purposes, Latter-day Saints view its natural resources and life forms as a sacred STEWARDSHIP to be used in ways that will ensure their availability for all succeeding generations. Latter-day scriptures also teach of a plurality of WORLDS. In itself this is not a unique concept among the religions of the world, but the LDS doctrine is distinctive (Crowe, pp. 241–46).

THE AGE OF THE EARTH. The scriptures do not say how old the earth is, and the Church has taken no official stand on this question (Old Testament, pp. 28–29). Nor does the Church consider it to be a central issue for salvation.

Discussions of the age of the earth feature three separate and distinct interpretations of the word “day” in the CREATION ACCOUNTS. Very few Latter-day Saints hold to the theory that the days of creation were twenty-four hours long. Some have attempted to accommodate scientific theories to scriptural accounts of creation by extending creation day lengths to one thousand years each. Support for this view has been found in scriptures suggesting “one day is with the Lord as a thousand years” (2 Pet. 3:8; cf. Abr. 3:2–4; 5:13; Facsimile No. 2).

But because even seven thousand years fails to approximate the billions of years suggested by contemporary scientific accounts, many Latter-day Saints have emphasized the possibility that the scriptural days of creation may have been vastly greater time periods. They point to the fact that “the Hebrew word for day . . . can also be used in the sense of an indeterminate length of time,” and to Abraham’s account of creation in which he “says that the Gods called the creation periods days” (Old Testament, pp. 28–29; see Eyring; Abr. 4:5, 8).

THE ORIGIN AND DESTINY OF THE EARTH. Joseph SMITH wrote, “We believe . . . that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory" (A of F 10). LDS revelation declares that the earth is destined to become a celestial body fit for the abode of the most exalted or celestial beings (D&C 88:18–20, 25–26). This is a unique departure from the traditional Christian beliefs that HEAVEN is the dwelling place for all saved beings, and that after fulfilling its useful role the earth will become uninhabited, or be destroyed. Doctrine and Covenants 130:9 teaches that finally the earth will become sanctified and immortalized, and be made crystal-like. The "sea of glass" spoken of in Revelation 4:6 "is the earth, in its sanctified, immortal, and eternal state" (D&C 77:1). Elder James E. Talmage wrote of this earthly regeneration: "In regard to the revealed word concerning the regeneration of earth, and the acquirement of a celestial glory by our planet, science has nothing to offer either by way of support or contradiction" (AF, p. 381).

Latter-day Saints understand the entire history of the earth to be directly linked to its role in God's plan of salvation for his children, his work and glory, "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man" (Moses 1:39). The earth was created as a paradise. Because of the FALL OF ADAM and EVE, it was transformed to a telestial state, or the present mortal earth. This interval will end with the return of the Savior, after which the earth will be changed to a terrestrial state and prepared during the Millennium for its final transformation into a celestial sphere after the Millennium (D&C 88:18–19). The ancient Nephite concept derived from Christ's teachings to them includes the idea that before the final judgment the earth will be "rolled together as a scroll, and the elements [will] melt with fervent heat" (Morm. 9:2), "and the heavens and the earth [shall] pass away" (3 Ne. 26:3). This historical account is linear, marked by unique, important events that link the theological and physical history of the earth, that is, creation, fall, renewal at the second coming of Christ, and final glory.

Against the backdrop of this progressive history is the constancy of spiritual and physical law immanently affecting succeeding generations of God's children on earth. In this context President John TAYLOR said, "Change succeeds change in human affairs, but the laws of God in everything are correct and true; in every stage and phase of nature, everything on the earth, in the waters and in the atmosphere is governed by unchangeable, eternal laws" (Gospel Kingdom, p. 70, Salt Lake City, 1987; see LAW).

THE GREAT FLOOD. The Old Testament records a flood that was just over fifteen cubits (sometimes assumed to be about twenty-six feet) deep and covered the entire landscape: "And all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven, were covered" (Gen. 7:19). Scientifically this account leaves many questions unanswered, especially how a measurable depth could cover mountains. Elder John A. Widtsoe, writing in 1943, offered this perspective:

The fact remains that the exact nature of the flood is not known. We set up assumptions, based upon our best knowledge, but can go no further. We should remember that when inspired writers deal with historical incidents they relate that which they have seen or that which may have been told them, unless indeed the past is opened to them by revelation.

The details in the story of the flood are undoubtedly drawn from the experiences of the writer. Under a downpour of rain, likened to the opening of the heavens, a destructive torrent twenty-six feet deep or deeper would easily be formed. The writer of Genesis made a faithful report of the facts known to him concerning the flood. In other localities the depth of the water might have been more or less. In fact, the details of the flood are not known to us [Widtsoe, p. 127].

SPECIAL CONCERNS OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS. President Brigham YOUNG taught: "The whole object of the creation of this world is to exalt the intelligences that are placed upon it, that they may live, endure, and increase for ever and ever. We are not here to quarrel and contend about the things of this world, but we are here to subdue and beautify it" (JD 7:290). Viewing themselves as tenants upon the earth, Latter-day Saints regard its resources as a sacred trust from God for the use of all while upon the earth: "I, the Lord . . . make every man accountable, as a steward over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures" (D&C 104:13). The earth was created by Christ for specific purposes: "We will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell; and we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them" (Abr. 3:24–25). President Brigham Young taught that the dominion God gives human beings is designed to test them, enabling them to show to themselves, to their fellow beings, and to God just how they would act if entrusted with God's power (Nibley, 1978, p. 90; see PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE).

Brigham Young supervised the relocation of the Church to the American West, which in the late 1840s was sparsely inhabited. His strong commitment to preservation of the environment and wise use of all natural resources influenced early Church colonizing efforts. Such prudence and wisdom in the use of land, water, air, and living things are still encouraged throughout the Church. In modern days of widespread concern for preserving the fragile relationships between the earth and its biosphere, Brigham Young's counsel remains vital:

There is a great work for the Saints to do. Progress, and improve upon, and make beautiful everything around you. Cultivate the earth and cultivate your minds. Build cities, adorn your habitations, make gardens, orchards, and vineyards, and render the earth so pleasant that when you look upon your labours you may do so with pleasure, and that angels may delight to come and visit your beautiful locations [JD 8:83].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cracroft, Paul. "How Old Is the Earth?" IE 67 (Oct. 1964):827–30, 852.
- Crowe, M. J. Extraterrestrial Life Debate 1750–1900. Cambridge, U.K., 1986.
- Eyring, Henry. "The Gospel and the Age of the Earth." IE 68 (July 1965):608–609, 626, 628.
- Jeffery, Duane E. "Seers, Savants and Evolution: The Uncomfortable Interface." Dialogue 8, nos. 3/4 (1973):41–75.
- Jones, Albert. "Is Mother Earth Growing Old?" IE 13 (May 1910):639–43.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Before Adam." In CWIIN 1:49–85.
- . "Brigham Young on the Environment." In To the Glory of God, ed. T. Madsen and C. Tate, pp. 3–29. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- . "Man's Dominion." New Era 2 (Oct. 1972):24–31.
- . "Subduing the Earth." In Nibley on the Timely and the Timeless, ed. T. Madsen, pp. 85–99. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- . "Treasures in the Heavens." In CWIIN 1:171–214.
- Old Testament: Genesis–2 Samuel [Religion 301] Student Manual*, 2nd ed., rev. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Pratt, Orson. JD 16:324–25.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man: His Origin and Destiny. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Talmage, James E. "Prophecy as the Forerunner of Science—An Instance." IE 7 (May 1904):481–88.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations. Salt Lake City, 1987.

MORRIS S. PETERSEN

EASTER

Easter is the Christian holiday celebrating the resurrection of Jesus Christ. After Christ died on the cross, his body was placed in a sepulcher, where it remained, separated from his SPIRIT, until his resurrection, when his spirit and his body were reunited. Latter-day Saints affirm and testify that Jesus Christ was resurrected and lives today with a glorified and perfected body of flesh and bone. Following his resurrection, Jesus appeared first to Mary Magdalene and then to other disciples. Some were not convinced of his resurrection, believing that his appearances were those of an unembodied spirit. Jesus assured them, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39). He then ate fish and honey in their presence, further dispelling their doubt.

Easter is a celebration not only of the resurrection of Christ but also of the universal resurrection. Because of the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ, all people will be resurrected. Their bodies and spirits will be reunited, never to be separated again. Latter-day Saints know the truth of Paul's statement, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. . . . For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:20; cf. Alma 11:42–45).

Latter-day Saints conduct Easter Sunday services but do not follow the religious observances of Ash Wednesday, Lent, or Holy Week. LDS Easter services traditionally review New Testament and Book of Mormon accounts of Christ's crucifixion, his resurrection, and surrounding events. For these services, chapels are often decorated with white lilies and other symbols of life. Ward choirs frequently present Easter cantatas, and congregations sing Easter hymns. As at services on other Sundays, the emblems of the sacrament (see COMMUNION) are passed to the congregation.

Some LDS families include Easter bunnies and eggs in their family festivities for the delight of children. Such traditions are not officially discouraged, though they have no religious significance to Latter-day Saints. The focus of the holiday is religious. For Latter-day Saints, Easter is a celebration of the promise of eternal life through Christ. They share the conviction of Job, "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God" (Job 19:25–26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. "The Real Meaning of Easter." Instructor 93 (Apr. 1958):100–101.

MARY ELLEN STEWART JAMISON

late 1840s was sparsely inhabited. His strong commitment to preservation of the environment and wise use of all natural resources influenced early Church colonizing efforts. Such prudence and wisdom in the use of land, water, air, and living things are still encouraged throughout the Church. In modern days of widespread concern for preserving the fragile relationships between the earth and its biosphere, Brigham Young's counsel remains vital:

There is a great work for the Saints to do. Progress, and improve upon, and make beautiful everything around you. Cultivate the earth and cultivate your minds. Build cities, adorn your habitations, make gardens, orchards, and vineyards, and render the earth so pleasant that when you look upon your labours you may do so with pleasure, and that angels may delight to come and visit your beautiful locations [JD 8:83].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cracroft, Paul. "How Old Is the Earth?" IE 67 (Oct. 1964):827–30, 852.
- Crowe, M. J. Extraterrestrial Life Debate 1750–1900. Cambridge, U.K., 1986.
- Eyring, Henry. "The Gospel and the Age of the Earth." IE 68 (July 1965):608–609, 626, 628.
- Jeffery, Duane E. "Seers, Savants and Evolution: The Uncomfortable Interface." Dialogue 8, nos. 3/4 (1973):41–75.
- Jones, Albert. "Is Mother Earth Growing Old?" IE 13 (May 1910):639–43.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Before Adam." In CWIIN 1:49–85.
- . "Brigham Young on the Environment." In To the Glory of God, ed. T. Madsen and C. Tate, pp. 3–29. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- . "Man's Dominion." New Era 2 (Oct. 1972):24–31.
- . "Subduing the Earth." In Nibley on the Timely and the Timeless, ed. T. Madsen, pp. 85–99. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- . "Treasures in the Heavens." In CWIIN 1:171–214.
- Old Testament: Genesis–2 Samuel [Religion 301] Student Manual*, 2nd ed., rev. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Pratt, Orson. JD 16:324–25.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man: His Origin and Destiny. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- Talmage, James E. "Prophecy as the Forerunner of Science—An Instance." IE 7 (May 1904):481–88.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations. Salt Lake City, 1987.

MORRIS S. PETERSEN

EASTER

Easter is the Christian holiday celebrating the resurrection of Jesus Christ. After Christ died on the cross, his body was placed in a sepulcher, where it remained, separated from his SPIRIT, until his resurrection, when his spirit and his body were reunited. Latter-day Saints affirm and testify that Jesus Christ was resurrected and lives today with a glorified and perfected body of flesh and bone. Following his resurrection, Jesus appeared first to Mary Magdalene and then to other disciples. Some were not convinced of his resurrection, believing that his appearances were those of an unembodied spirit. Jesus assured them, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39). He then ate fish and honey in their presence, further dispelling their doubt.

Easter is a celebration not only of the resurrection of Christ but also of the universal resurrection. Because of the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ, all people will be resurrected. Their bodies and spirits will be reunited, never to be separated again. Latter-day Saints know the truth of Paul's statement, "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. . . . For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:20; cf. Alma 11:42–45).

Latter-day Saints conduct Easter Sunday services but do not follow the religious observances of Ash Wednesday, Lent, or Holy Week. LDS Easter services traditionally review New Testament and Book of Mormon accounts of Christ's crucifixion, his resurrection, and surrounding events. For these services, chapels are often decorated with white lilies and other symbols of life. Ward choirs frequently present Easter cantatas, and congregations sing Easter hymns. As at services on other Sundays, the emblems of the sacrament (see COMMUNION) are passed to the congregation.

Some LDS families include Easter bunnies and eggs in their family festivities for the delight of children. Such traditions are not officially discouraged, though they have no religious significance to Latter-day Saints. The focus of the holiday is religious. For Latter-day Saints, Easter is a celebration of the promise of eternal life through Christ. They share the conviction of Job, "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God" (Job 19:25–26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. "The Real Meaning of Easter." Instructor 93 (Apr. 1958):100–101.

MARY ELLEN STEWART JAMISON

ECONOMIC AID

Economic aid offered by the Church to needy people in various countries is intended to promote the well-being of individuals and families. In addition to temporary welfare assistance given by the Church to its members and to a variety of emergency and HUMANITARIAN SERVICES, the Church has rendered longer-term economic aid to many groups in a variety of nations. Church members are taught that family well-being depends upon, among other things, the means to provide food, clothing, and shelter. Just as individual members are taught to acquire skills necessary for this economic well-being (see EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS; SELF-SUFFICIENCY), the Church encourages nations to provide economic opportunity for their citizens and to establish an economic atmosphere wherein individual skills can be used for the benefit of families and the nation.

The Church has not established political criteria for selecting recipients of its economic aid. Joseph SMITH echoed the counsel of the Savior to feed the hungry and clothe the naked (Matt. 25:35–40; T&S 3 [Mar. 1842]:732).

Many of the humanitarian projects supported by the Church have had a monetary component to them. In addition to the food and blankets sent to many peoples in Europe after World War II, money was sent to purchase land and buildings to be used for longer-term relief. In 1983, the Church sent emergency food and clothing to both Colombia (earthquake) and Tahiti (hurricane), and Church funds also were used to provide building materials for those whose homes had been devastated (“News of the Church,” Ensign 13 [June 1983]:77). Similarly, aid to both Armenia and Africa included funds for economic development in addition to monies used for more immediate relief. As part of the 1989 aid to Armenia following earthquakes in the region, materials and tools were donated by the Church to allow craftsmen to rebuild homes and businesses (The Daily Universe, Dec. 6, 1989, Provo, Utah, p. 2). And in the $10 million aid to Africa in 1985 and 1986, approximately one-third of the funds were used to support long-term economic development projects (Ferguson, pp. 10–15). For example, in concert with Africare, some of the funds were used to construct dams, develop irrigation and other water projects, and train farmers in Ethiopia. Economic aid from the Church also supported vocational school development and marketing cooperatives in the Sudan, and agricultural rehabilitation in Chad, Niger, and Cameroon (“News of the Church,” Ensign 15 [Nov. 1985]:109). Special funds also have been used to support local self-sufficiency enterprises, literacy and health services, and agricultural development in Kenya, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, Zaire, Ghana, Mali, Nigeria, Chad, and in Central and South America.

One of the more extensive and systematic resources to provide Church economic aid has been the Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute located at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. This institute, founded in 1975, was commissioned to raise the quality of life through improved nutrition and introduction of more effective agricultural practices. The institute conducts research, teaches, and carries out agricultural projects in countries around the world. It is well known for its development and promotion of small-scale food-growing projects that have been effective particularly in Bolivia, Ecuador, Guatemala, and Mexico. The Benson Institute conducts nutrition assessments and training; has developed, for small-scale farms, appropriate technology in developing countries (tractors, solar-powered water pumps and grain grinders, and wind-driven water pumps); trains students from developing countries; and has entered into several agreements with governments of developing countries to assist them in their agricultural development efforts. The institute collects and sends abroad medical and agricultural equipment and coordinates volunteers who wish to live in a country for varying periods of time to help with health, nutrition, and agricultural development (see various issues of the semi-annual Benson Institute Review).

In 1977, E. W. Thrasher donated $14 million as an endowment to the Church to be used to benefit the health of children throughout the world. A member of the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC of the Church is chairman of the executive committee of the Thrasher Research Fund. The fund has expended millions of dollars since 1977 to support research in nutrition and infectious diseases and to promote the health of children, primarily in developing countries. In one instance, the fund ran a project in a small village in Nigeria to demonstrate that low-cost appropriate health care technology and knowledge can be transferred to local residents (see Annual Reports of the Thrasher Research Fund, Salt Lake City, Utah).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson Institute. Benson Institute Review. Provo, Utah, 1984.
 Ferguson, Isaac C. "Freely Given." Ensign 18 (Aug. 1988): 10-15.
 "News of the Church." Ensign 13 (June 1983):77.
 "News of the Church." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):109.

STANLEY A. TAYLOR

ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

From their beginnings Latter-day Saints have regarded economic welfare as an indispensable part of religion. An 1830 revelation received by Joseph Smith stated, "Verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal" (D&C 29:34-35). Accepted as part of the revealed word of God, this principle implied that every aspect of life had to do with spirituality and things eternal. For President Brigham YOUNG, who led the Church in the West for thirty years, this revelation meant that "in the mind of God there is no such a thing as dividing spiritual from temporal, or temporal from spiritual; for they are one in the Lord" (JD 11:18).

We cannot talk about spiritual things without connecting with them temporal things, neither can we talk about temporal things without connecting spiritual things with them. . . . We, as Latter-day Saints, really expect, look for and we will not be satisfied with anything short of being governed and controlled by the word of the Lord in all of our acts, both spiritual and temporal. If we do not live for this, we do not live to be one with Christ [JD 10:329].

Emphasis on economies was strengthened and supported by the social and economic experiences of the early Saints. Two early decisions were extremely important. The first was to move the headquarters and body of the Church from New York to Kirtland, Ohio, and to Missouri. This meant that leaders had to devise ways of helping poor members move westward. The move also involved Church leaders in buying land and formulating plans for community development (see CITY PLANNING), and in initiating financial enterprises and industries to provide employment. As the germ of the KINGDOM OF GOD, the Church was to gather and organize its members, settle them, and assist them in creating an advanced society. Ultimately, according to LDS belief, the Church must establish ZION, the literal and earthly kingdom of God over which Christ will one day rule in person.

The first Utah gold coins were minted in September 1849. Designed by Brigham Young, John Taylor, and John Kay, the obverse reads, "Holiness to the Lord," with a crown emblem of the priesthood over an All-Seeing Eye of Jehovah. On the reverse is "G.S.L.C.P.G." (Great Salt Lake City Pure Gold) and two clasped hands. Reprinted by permission from Alvin Rust, Mormon and Utah Coin and Currency (Salt Lake City, 1984).

The second decision came as a reaction to PERSECUTION. Church leaders assumed responsibility for coping with persecution and looking after the welfare of its persecuted members. Persecutions thus created cohesiveness and community identity. They also necessitated frequent remov-

From 1857 to 1860, paper currency backed by livestock was printed over the signature of Brigham Young. These notes provided a medium of exchange for domestic growth and to finance the defense against the Utah Expedition. Brigham Young won a lawsuit in 1859 when the U.S. marshal confiscated the printing plates. Nearly all of these notes were redeemed by 1860. Reprinted by permission from Alvin Rust, Mormon and Utah Coin and Currency (Salt Lake City, 1984).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson Institute. Benson Institute Review. Provo, Utah, 1984.
 Ferguson, Isaac C. "Freely Given." Ensign 18 (Aug. 1988): 10-15.
 "News of the Church." Ensign 13 (June 1983):77.
 "News of the Church." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):109.

STANLEY A. TAYLOR

ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH

From their beginnings Latter-day Saints have regarded economic welfare as an indispensable part of religion. An 1830 revelation received by Joseph Smith stated, "Verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal" (D&C 29:34-35). Accepted as part of the revealed word of God, this principle implied that every aspect of life had to do with spirituality and things eternal. For President Brigham YOUNG, who led the Church in the West for thirty years, this revelation meant that "in the mind of God there is no such a thing as dividing spiritual from temporal, or temporal from spiritual; for they are one in the Lord" (JD 11:18).

We cannot talk about spiritual things without connecting with them temporal things, neither can we talk about temporal things without connecting spiritual things with them. . . . We, as Latter-day Saints, really expect, look for and we will not be satisfied with anything short of being governed and controlled by the word of the Lord in all of our acts, both spiritual and temporal. If we do not live for this, we do not live to be one with Christ [JD 10:329].

Emphasis on economies was strengthened and supported by the social and economic experiences of the early Saints. Two early decisions were extremely important. The first was to move the headquarters and body of the Church from New York to Kirtland, Ohio, and to Missouri. This meant that leaders had to devise ways of helping poor members move westward. The move also involved Church leaders in buying land and formulating plans for community development (see CITY PLANNING), and in initiating financial enterprises and industries to provide employment. As the germ of the KINGDOM OF GOD, the Church was to gather and organize its members, settle them, and assist them in creating an advanced society. Ultimately, according to LDS belief, the Church must establish ZION, the literal and earthly kingdom of God over which Christ will one day rule in person.

The first Utah gold coins were minted in September 1849. Designed by Brigham Young, John Taylor, and John Kay, the obverse reads, "Holiness to the Lord," with a crown emblem of the priesthood over an All-Seeing Eye of Jehovah. On the reverse is "G.S.L.C.P.G." (Great Salt Lake City Pure Gold) and two clasped hands. Reprinted by permission from Alvin Rust, Mormon and Utah Coin and Currency (Salt Lake City, 1984).

The second decision came as a reaction to PERSECUTION. Church leaders assumed responsibility for coping with persecution and looking after the welfare of its persecuted members. Persecutions thus created cohesiveness and community identity. They also necessitated frequent remov-

From 1857 to 1860, paper currency backed by livestock was printed over the signature of Brigham Young. These notes provided a medium of exchange for domestic growth and to finance the defense against the Utah Expedition. Brigham Young won a lawsuit in 1859 when the U.S. marshal confiscated the printing plates. Nearly all of these notes were redeemed by 1860. Reprinted by permission from Alvin Rust, Mormon and Utah Coin and Currency (Salt Lake City, 1984).

Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI) in Salt Lake City, c. 1880, was the parent outlet of what eventually became a territory-wide cooperative system. The east-iron storefront has recently been restored. Photographer: Charles R. Savage.

als, forcing the Church to organize for the migrations and, in a new home, again purchase land and initiate industries. Above all, persecution prevented the rise of individualism and class distinction and diminished the surplus wealth that would have created a barrier between the rich and the less fortunate.

These experiences, and the social, intellectual, and religious origins of the Church, led to the development of a set of economic ideals and institutions that became a more or less permanent aspect of Latter-day Saint belief and practice, and made the LDS community a unique group in frontier America. The intimate association of religion with economic activity produced a planning and community concern that made possible a more just and permanent society than existed elsewhere in the West. These early LDS economic goals can be summarized under four headings: (1) ecclesiastical promotion of economic growth and development, often called "building the Kingdom of God"; (2) ecclesiastical sponsorship of group economic independence and self-sufficiency; (3) cooperation and organized group activity for attaining these goals; and (4) achievement and maintenance of economic equality.

PROMOTION OF ECONOMIC GROWTH. An early revelation called for the gathering "of mine elect" and declared that "the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land" (D&C 29:7-8). Thus gathered, they could build the kingdom of God and prepare for the Millennium to come.

This policy of "accumulating people" as a prerequisite to building the kingdom was implemented, beginning in the 1830s, by the development of a large and effective missionary system and an overseas emigration service (see IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION), and by the establishment of a series of Zions or gathering places. This emigration system assisted 5,000 European converts in migrating to NAUVOO, ILLINOIS, and, beginning in 1846, organized 16,000 persons in and around Nauvoo to make the great trek to WINTER QUARTERS, Nebraska, and later to the SALT LAKE VALLEY. The PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND company alone assisted in transporting some 26,000 immigrants to the West between 1852 and 1887, when Congress dissolved it (see ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION). By 1890 Church agents had directed the migration of 83,000 European members to the Salt Lake Valley. The system efficiently converted donations of cattle, grain, and other produce into passenger fares, covered wagons, and oxen. Scholars have regarded the Church's arrangements as perhaps the best system of regulated immigration in U.S. history.

Often immigrants newly arrived in Salt Lake City were first put to work building the kingdom by means of a public works system. Centered on TEMPLE SQUARE in Salt Lake City, the Church Department of Public Works provided employment for immigrants during their first winter in the Salt Lake Valley. They added such useful structures to the commonwealth as roads, walls, meetinghouses, railroads, telegraph lines, canals, the SALT LAKE THEATRE, and the famous SALT LAKE TEMPLE and TABERNACLE.

New arrivals were soon dispatched in organized companies to settle in outlying agricultural villages (see COLONIZATION). Rights and property in these villages were allocated and regulated to ensure the highest possible development of resources. The governing principle, one of STEWARDSHIP, was consistent with the heavenly instruction of 1830 that declared: "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property" (D&C 42:32). Each was to have property sufficient to support his family, while any surplus belonged to the Lord's storehouse. Property rights were granted conditionally and were not protected if the owner refused to utilize or develop the property. Indeed, the first pronouncement of President Brigham Young regarding government of the infant pioneer colony in the Salt Lake Valley included the following stipulation:

No man will be suffered to cut up his lot and sell a part to speculate out of his brethren. Each man must keep his lot whole, for the Lord has given it to us without price. . . . Every man should have his land measured off to him for city and farming purposes, what he could till. He might till as he pleased, but he should be industrious and take care of it [Arrington, 1958, p. 46].

This policy seems to have been adhered to. The speculative withholding of land from use was prohibited, and the purchase or appropriation of town lots simply for the sake of the increase in value was prevented. Hoarding money was also against Church rules.

After the settlement of villages and the determination of property rights, the Saints were to proceed with the orderly development of local resources. Making the waste places blossom as the rose and the earth yield abundantly was more than an economic necessity: It was a form of religious activity. One early leader noted that the LDS religion consisted of digging water ditches as well as undergoing water baptism; religious duty encompassed both the redemption of man's home (the earth) and of his soul. The earth, as the future abiding place of God's people, was to be made productive and fruitful, transformed into a virtual Garden of Eden. "The Lord has done his share of the work," Brigham Young told them. "He has surrounded us with the elements containing wheat, meat, flax, wool, silk, fruit, and everything with which to build up, beautify and glorify the Zion of the last days." "It is now our business," he concluded, "to mould these elements to our wants and necessities, according to the knowledge we now have and the wisdom we can obtain from the heavens through our faithfulness." Only in this way "will the Lord bring again Zion upon the earth, and in no other" (JD 9:283-84).

The acceptance of this stewardship principle of resource development explains the passionate and devoted efforts of Latter-day Saints to develop the resources of the Great Basin to their fullest extent.

ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE. The goal of LDS colonization and resource development, and of the Mormon village, was economic independence: The LDS commonwealth was to be financially and economically self-sufficient. A revealed "law" of the Church established this principle in 1831: "Let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands" (D&C 42:40). An-

The first cooperative in Utah was founded by Lorenzo Snow in Brigham City in 1864. Using the Rochdale system of cooperation from England, the idea soon spread throughout Utah Territory. Scrip, such as this Logan Fourth Ward note, was issued by these co-ops to facilitate trade. Reprinted by permission from Alvin Rust, Mormon and Utah Coin and Currency (Salt Lake City, 1984).

Brigham Young's Cotton and Woolen Factory, located at the mouth of Parley's Canyon, east of Salt Lake City. This mill, one of several opened along the Wasatch front, began operation in 1863 and closed two years later in order to relocate the machinery in southern Utah. Photograph: A. J. Russell.

other revelation directed that they were to "contract no debts with the world" (D&C 64:27).

The principles of this revelation were applied often and broadly. In the Great Basin, the Latter-day Saints were asked to manufacture their own iron, produce their own cotton, spin their own silk, and grind their own grain—all without borrowing from "outsiders." It was reasoned that self-sufficiency was a practical policy because God had blessed each region with the resources necessary for the use of the people and the development of that region. As a result of the application of this principle, the Great Basin was the only major region of the United States whose early development was largely accomplished without outside capital.

Officially sponsored projects for self-sufficiency included an iron mission, consisting of about 200 families called by the Church who devoted strenuous efforts to develop the iron and coal resources near Cedar City; a sugar mission, in which several hundred people were united in the 1850s in an effort to establish the sugar-beet industry in Utah; a lead mission, in which some fifty men were called to work lead mines near Las Vegas, Nevada, to provide lead for paint and bullets; a cotton mission, which sent more than a thousand families to southern Utah to raise cotton, olives, grapes, indigo, grain sorghum, and figs; silk missions, which involved the growing of mulberry trees and establishment of a silk industry in every suitable community; and a flax mission, a wool mission, and even a winery to provide wine for the holy SACRAMENT.

UNITY AND COOPERATION. Qualities required to execute successfully the economic program of the Church were unity of its members and the ability to organize for the pursuit of economic goals. This meant Churchwide cooperation. The seminal revelation enjoining unity was received in January 1831: "I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine" (D&C 38:27). This group spirit was induced both by the belief that unity was a Christian virtue and by the trying times that LDS pioneers experienced in their efforts to establish an independent commonwealth. Group solidarity and a strong central organization symbolized this effort. Whether they were migrating, building forts, digging ditches, or constructing mills, participants in the sublime task of building the kingdom were to submit themselves to the direction of God's leaders and display a spirit of willing cooperation.

As is well known, Brigham Young developed unified action and combined endeavor. He instituted cooperative arrangements for migration, colonization, construction, agriculture, mining, manufacturing, merchandising and, in fact, for every realm of economic activity.

EQUALITY. In "working out the temporal salvation of Zion," to use a common expression of the day, the formulators of Church policy focused primary attention on production and on the better management of available human and natural resources. Nevertheless, influenced by Christian principles, by its own necessities, and by the democratic concepts of Jacksonian America, early Mormonism was distinctly egalitarian in theology and economics. This had significant influences on Church policies and practices in the Great Basin.

The LDS doctrine of equality was formulated early. "If ye are not equal in earthly things, ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things," read one March 1832 revelation (D&C 78:6), and, from the beginning, there was an earnest attempt to conduct business in this spirit of equality. When New York converts to the young Church began to arrive at the newly established gathering place of Kirtland, Ohio, in May 1831, the governing principle for the allotment of land and other properties was that every man receive "equal according to his family, according to their circumstances," and that all "receive alike, that ye may be one" (D&C 51:3, 9). Similarly, a revelation in Ohio instructed the Saints that "in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld" (D&C 70:14). Similar instructions accompanied the stewardship system tried in Jackson County, Missouri: "And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing . . . your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just" (D&C 82:17).

The core of the policy was reflected in the system of immigration (the more well-to-do were encouraged to donate means to assist in the immigration of poorer converts), the construction of public works (those with a surplus were expected to contribute), the allotment of land and water (parceled out equally to all by means of community drawings), and the initiation of many cooperative village stores and industries. But the influence of the ideal of equality was still wider. It led to several attempts to completely reorganize society and put economic affairs on a more egalitarian basis. Communities holding to these ideals were attempted by the Latter-day Saints in Ohio and Missouri (see CONSECRATION) and in more than 150 communities in the Far West, from Paris, Idaho, on the north, to Bunkerville, Nevada, and Joseph City, Arizona, on the south (see UNITED ORDERS). These cooperative communities were characterized by a high degree of economic equality and, although most of them lasted only a short time, their influence on LDS thought and self-conception is evident still.

The Maxwell automobile was manufactured in Salt Lake City in the early twentieth century by independent entrepreneurs. Photographer: Charles Ellis Johnson. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

It is fair to say that the Church could have gone much further in achieving its economic goals if the federal government had not intervened to prevent it. The UTAH EXPEDITION of 1857–1858, the Anti-Bigamy Act of 1862, the antipolygamy legislation of the late 1860s and the 1870s, and, even more, the hostile Edmunds Act, passed in 1882, and the Edmunds-Tucker Act of 1887—all of these undercut new Church economic activity, and forced the Church to withdraw from many existing activities.

By a strange coincidence of history, however, the Panic of 1891, ushering in the more severe Panic of 1893 and depression of the 1890s, helped reverse this trend. Utah, whose agriculture and mining industries were marginal, suffered more severely than many states; unemployment and low farm incomes were disturbing realities. In this crisis, Church leaders used all the resources at their command—including assets confiscated earlier by the federal government but now returned—to expand and improve the Great Basin economy. Their concerted efforts helped launch many new and successful industries. With an investment of about $500,000, the manufacture of sugar was re-initiated; another $500,000 financed the beginnings of the hydroelectric power industry in the West; some $250,000 was expended on the development of a salt industry on the shores of Great Salt Lake. To provide employment, the Saltair recreation resort was constructed. Railroads were projected, canals built, new colonies started—in short, Church leaders did everything possible to expand the economic base of the Great Basin and surrounding regions.

This expansion of economic activity was disturbing to national political and business leaders, who used the SMOOT HEARINGS of 1903–1907 to force the Church to sell most of its business interests. Holdings in the sugar and salt industries, in railroad and hydroelectric power, in coal and iron lands, in the telegraph system—these and others were sold to eastern capitalists. For the next decade and more, Utah's economy came to resemble that of other states in the Rocky Mountain region.

By mid-twentieth century, national sentiment was more sympathetic to Church-sponsored endeavors. Since the Great Depression of the 1930s, and especially since World War II, through the welfare services plan and other enterprises, the economic ideals of the founding generation have again been more actively pursued. Nonetheless, growing needs, especially outside North America, have required refocusing on areas central to the mission of the Church. As in the past, TITHING and other donations remain the key to the Church's active economic involvement. In the last half of the twentieth century, increasing emphasis has been placed on extending the full program of the Church, including temples, to members throughout the world. As "building the kingdom" has become increasingly international, the construction and maintenance of meetinghouses and temples in many lands have dominated Church finances. While the Church has invested in media facilities, including a SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM, and expanded international microfilming of genealogical records (and a network of FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARIES to make the records available throughout the world), it has divested itself of many holdings that primarily benefited only Latter-day Saints in America's Mountain West.

At the end of the 1980s, the Church began implementing new budgeting arrangements that move toward greater equality. Divorcing funding levels from levels of contributions, these arrangements guarantee the funding of facilities and activities at a modest level for all Church members while limiting the amount the more affluent local units may spend. Also, with a growing worldwide membership, efforts at economic independence have increasingly focused on individual (family) self-sufficiency, and on aiding members everywhere to improve their economic situation and prepare for emergencies. Nonetheless, efforts to expand the reach and impact of the Church's welfare services and disaster relief programs also continue.

Though the present-day Church plays a direct role in economic development less often than it did in the pioneer economy, the fundamental ideals of self-sufficiency, unity and cooperation, and equal-

The Church owned and financed the development of an extensive sugar beet industry in Utah and Idaho. U and I Sugar Company resulted in 1907 from a merger, and various railroad companies, some wholly or partially owned by the Church or its leaders, served the intermountain area in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The Utah Railroad Company and the Salt Lake and Utah Railroad, shown here loaded with sugar beets, ran the Orem Line in the 1920s. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

ity still characterize LDS economic goals. Latter-day Saints look forward to a more prosperous and just world even as they continue their efforts to establish institutions capable of blessing the lives of men and women as one essential preparation for the second coming of Christ.

[See also Kirtland Economy; Nauvoo Economy; Pioneer Economy.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom: An Economic History of the Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.

———. "Religion and Economics in Mormon History." BYU Studies 3 (Spring-Summer 1961):15–33.

Arrington, Leonard J.; Feramorz Y. Fox; and Dean L. May. Building the City of God: Community and Cooperation Among the Mormons. Salt Lake City, 1976.

LEONARD J. ARRINGTON

---

EDMUNDS ACT OF 1882

See: Antipolygamy Legislation

---

EDMUNDS-TUCKER ACT OF 1887

See: Antipolygamy Legislation

---

EDUCATION

[This entry discusses:

Attitudes Toward Education
Educational Attainment

See also Academies; Brigham Young University; Church Educational System; Intellectual History; Schools; Social and Cultural History.]

ATTITUDES TOWARD EDUCATION

The ARTICLES OF FAITH underscore the deep and fundamental role that knowledge plays in the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things" (A of F 13). Speaking of the LDS commitment to learning and education, M. Lynn Bennion wrote: "It is doubtful if there is an organization in existence that more completely directs the educational development of its people than does the Mormon Church. The educational program of the Church today is a consistent expansion of the theories promulgated by its founders" (Bennion, p. 2).

The educational ideas and practices of the Church grew directly out of certain revelations received by Joseph SMITH that emphasize the eternal nature of knowledge and the vital role learning plays in the spiritual, moral, and intellectual development of mankind. For example: "It is impossible for a man to be saved in ignorance" (D&C 131:6) of his eternal nature and role. "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth" (D&C 93:36). "Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection. And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come" (D&C 130:18–19). "Knowledge saves a man, and in the world of spirits a man cannot be exalted but by knowledge" (TPJS, p. 357). An often-quoted statement from the Book of Mormon reads: "To be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God" (2 Ne. 9:29). In June 1831 Joseph Smith received a revelation concerning "selecting and writing books for schools in this church" (D&C 55:4), and another on December 27, 1832, establishing the broad missions of education in the Church:

And I give unto you a commandment that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom. Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home, things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms—that ye may be prepared in all things [D&C 88:77–80].

The Church has been built on the conviction that eternal progress depends upon righteous living and growth in knowledge, religious and secular. "Indeed, the necessity of learning is probably the most frequently-repeated theme of modern-day revelations" (L. Arrington, "The Founding of the L.D.S. Institutes of Religion," Dialogue 2 [Summer 1967]:137).

ity still characterize LDS economic goals. Latter-day Saints look forward to a more prosperous and just world even as they continue their efforts to establish institutions capable of blessing the lives of men and women as one essential preparation for the second coming of Christ.

[See also Kirtland Economy; Nauvoo Economy; Pioneer Economy.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom: An Economic History of the Latter-day Saints, 1830–1900. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.

———. "Religion and Economics in Mormon History." BYU Studies 3 (Spring-Summer 1961):15–33.

Arrington, Leonard J.; Feramorz Y. Fox; and Dean L. May. Building the City of God: Community and Cooperation Among the Mormons. Salt Lake City, 1976.

LEONARD J. ARRINGTON

---

EDMUNDS ACT OF 1882

See: Antipolygamy Legislation

---

EDMUNDS-TUCKER ACT OF 1887

See: Antipolygamy Legislation

---

EDUCATION

[This entry discusses:

Attitudes Toward Education
Educational Attainment

See also Academies; Brigham Young University; Church Educational System; Intellectual History; Schools; Social and Cultural History.]

ATTITUDES TOWARD EDUCATION

The ARTICLES OF FAITH underscore the deep and fundamental role that knowledge plays in the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints: "If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things" (A of F 13). Speaking of the LDS commitment to learning and education, M. Lynn Bennion wrote: "It is doubtful if there is an organization in existence that more completely directs the educational development of its people than does the Mormon Church. The educational program of the Church today is a consistent expansion of the theories promulgated by its founders" (Bennion, p. 2).

The educational ideas and practices of the Church grew directly out of certain revelations received by Joseph SMITH that emphasize the eternal nature of knowledge and the vital role learning plays in the spiritual, moral, and intellectual development of mankind. For example: "It is impossible for a man to be saved in ignorance" (D&C 131:6) of his eternal nature and role. "The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth" (D&C 93:36). "Whatever principle of intelligence we attain unto in this life, it will rise with us in the resurrection. And if a person gains more knowledge and intelligence in this life through his diligence and obedience than another, he will have so much the advantage in the world to come" (D&C 130:18–19). "Knowledge saves a man, and in the world of spirits a man cannot be exalted but by knowledge" (TPJS, p. 357). An often-quoted statement from the Book of Mormon reads: "To be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God" (2 Ne. 9:29). In June 1831 Joseph Smith received a revelation concerning "selecting and writing books for schools in this church" (D&C 55:4), and another on December 27, 1832, establishing the broad missions of education in the Church:

And I give unto you a commandment that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom. Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that are expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home, things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms—that ye may be prepared in all things [D&C 88:77–80].

The Church has been built on the conviction that eternal progress depends upon righteous living and growth in knowledge, religious and secular. "Indeed, the necessity of learning is probably the most frequently-repeated theme of modern-day revelations" (L. Arrington, "The Founding of the L.D.S. Institutes of Religion," Dialogue 2 [Summer 1967]:137).

Dedication of the Brigham Young Academy Building, Provo, Utah, January 1892. Led by outgoing Principal Karl G. Maeser, the faculty and student body marched up J street (University Avenue) to dedicate the new building, to honor Maeser, and to install Professor Benjamin Cluff, Jr., as the new principal. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Joseph Smith and many of the early Mormon pioneers came from a New England Puritan background, with its reverence for knowledge and learning (Salisbury, p. 258). The LDS outlook assumes the perfectibility of man and his ability to progress to ever-higher moral, spiritual, and intellectual levels. In this philosophy, moreover, knowledge of every kind is useful in man's attempt to realize himself in this world and the next. "It is the application of knowledge for the spiritual welfare of man that constitutes the Mormon ideal of education" (Bennion, p. 125). The early leaders of the Church, therefore, saw little ultimate division between correct secular and religious learning. Broad in scope and spiritual in intent, LDS educational philosophy tends to fuse the secular with the religious because, in the LDS context, the two are part of one seamless web (Bennion, pp. 120–23).

In 1833, Joseph Smith founded the Church's first educational effort, the SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS, in Kirtland, Ohio. That school was devoted to the study of history, political science, languages (including Hebrew), literature, and theology. Its main purpose was to prepare Church leaders to magnify their callings as missionaries to warn all people and testify of the gospel (D&C 88:80–81). It also set an example of adult learning that was followed "in Missouri, Illinois, and Utah, where parents joined their children in the pursuit of knowledge" (Bennion, p. 10).

In 1840, Joseph Smith sought the incorporation of the City of Nauvoo, Illinois, and along with it authority to establish a university. The NAUVOO CHARTER included authority to "establish and organize an institution of learning within the limits of the city, for the teaching of the arts, sciences and learned professions, to be called the 'University of the City of Nauvoo'" (quoted in Salisbury, p. 269).

The first academic year in Nauvoo was that of 1841–42. The university probably was among the first municipal universities in the United States (Rich, p. 10); it was certainly an optimistic and ambitious undertaking. The curriculum included languages (German, French, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew), mathematics, chemistry and geology, literature, and history; but "the data are too scant to reveal the scholastic rating of the instruction given. It was probably superior to the average secondary work of the time. The faculty represented considerable scholarship and indeed was a rather remarkable group to be found in a frontier city" (Bennion, p. 25).

The murder of Joseph Smith in 1844 abruptly ended the dream of the University of the City of Nauvoo and set in motion the difficult journey to the Great Basin. Despite the hardships, education was not forgotten. Brigham YOUNG instructed the migrating Saints to bring with them at least a copy of every valuable treatise on education—every book, map, chart, or diagram that may contain interesting, useful, and attractive matter, to gain the attention of children, and cause them to love to learn to read; and, also every historical, mathematical, philosophical, geographical, geological, astronomical, scientific, practical, and all other variety of useful and interesting writings, maps, etc., to present to the General Church Recorder, when they shall arrive at their destination, from which important and interesting matter may be gleaned to compile the most valuable works, on every science and subject, for the benefit of the rising generation [MS 10 (1848):85].

The charter of the University of the City of Nauvoo served as the foundation for the UNIVERSITY OF DESERET (now the University of Utah), established by Brigham Young in Salt Lake City in 1850. "Education," he once told this school's Board of Regents, "is the power to think clearly, the power to act well in the world's work, and the power to appreciate life" (Bennion, p. 115). He advised: "A good school teacher is one of the most essential members in society" (JD 10:225).

In 1851 the territorial legislature granted a charter providing for "establishment and regulation of schools" (Bennion, p. 40), but for some years the struggle for survival eclipsed the effort to establish a formal system of education. Utah's first schools were private, paid for by parents or by adult students, and classes took place during either the day or the evening, depending on local needs, interests, and resources (Rich, pp. 13, 17–18). Attendance rose and fell with the seasons and the demands of an agricultural society in which human labor was scarce and precious. Curricula varied as well, often depending on the academic strengths or interests of the teacher; some schools offered traditional subjects, others more practical pursuits such as carpentry or masonry. The existence of these frontier schools was always precarious and their operation intermittent (Rich, p. 18), but they were an eloquent and often moving testimony to the commitment of early Mormon pioneers to education, demanding as they did considerable sacrifice of scarce time and resources.

Brigham Young's philosophy of education was practical and pragmatic, but he was not opposed, as has sometimes been assumed, to liberal education; he simply felt it was overstressed in the educational environment of his day (Bennion, p. 107). "Will education feed and clothe you, keep you warm on a cold day, or enable you to build a house? Not at all. Should we cry down education on this account? No. What is it for? The improvement of the mind; to instruct us in all arts and sciences, in the history of the world, in the laws of nations; to enable us to understand the laws and principles of life, and how to be useful while we live" (JD 14:83). He believed that "every art and science known and studied by the children of men is comprised within the Gospel" (JD 12:257).

President Young's educational philosophy was further enhanced by Karl G. Maeser, a German educator who joined the Church and immigrated Beginning with Joseph Smith, all Church leaders have encouraged education. This Pioneer Day float in the 1950s celebrates the first school in Utah, which opened with nine pupils on October 17, 1847, three months after the pioneers arrived in Salt Lake Valley. Photographer: Albert Wilkes. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

Karl G. Maeser (1828–1901), a German educator who joined the LDS Church and moved to Utah in 1860, was appointed the second principal of Brigham Young Academy, later Brigham Young University, in 1876.

to Salt Lake City in 1860. In 1876 Brigham Young appointed Maeser the principal of the Brigham Young Academy in Provo (see ACADEMIES). "The development of the Academy movement and the direction of Church policies in education were largely determined by this German educator" (Bennion, p. 117). His approach to education included a belief that "knowledge should be supported by corresponding moral qualities. The formation of character depends upon the nature of the moral training which accompanies intellectual advancement" (Maeser, p. 43). He maintained that religion was "the fundamental principle of education" and was its "most effective motive power" (Maeser, p. 56). His influential and widely circulated syllabus, School and Fireside (1898), clearly identified the critical functions of education as preparing people for practical life in the family and in the nation and inculcating fundamental principles of spiritual development.

In the early pioneer days, most schools in Utah Territory were LDS Church schools, and religion was an integral part of the curriculum. With the increasing diversification of Utah's population and the passage of the Edmunds-Tucker Act in 1887, which had the effect of prohibiting the teaching of religion in public schools, the Church looked for other means of assuring spiritual instruction for its young people. Between 1890 and 1929, the Church sponsored special religion classes conducted in ward meetinghouses for children in the first to the ninth grades in a movement that was "the first effort of the Mormons to supplement (but not to replace) secular education"; it was "America's first experiment in providing separate weekday religious training for public school children" (Quinn, p. 379).

This endeavor grew into the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM, which consists of several levels. First is SEMINARY, a daily religious education program held in a seminary building near the school for grades nine through twelve that provides for the study of the Book of Mormon, Old Testament, New Testament, and Doctrine and Covenants/Church History. Second, INSTITUTES of religion adjacent to campuses serve students enrolled in postsecondary programs by offering religion classes, usually scheduled twice a week to fit in with college schedules. Third, the Church sponsors four institutions of higher education: BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY in Provo, Utah; BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY—HAWAII in Laie, Hawaii; RICKS COLLEGE in Rexburg, Idaho; and LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE in Salt Lake City. In addition, in Mexico and the Pacific, the Church sponsors seven elementary schools, thirteen middle schools, and nine secondary schools that provide both secular and religious training.

In 1988–1989, the Church's educational system extended to 90 countries or territories and served about 250,000 seminary students, 124,500 institute students, 37,600 students in Church colleges and universities, and 9,300 students in other Church schools. The system employs over 4,100 full- and part-time employees, in addition to 15,000 members who are called to teach in the seminary and institute programs.

In sum, the attitude of the Church toward education is unusual in several respects. First, the Church is distinctive in the degree to which its members, child and adult alike, participate in the many educational activities of the Church: "As a people we believe in education—the gathering of knowledge and the training of the mind. The Church itself is really an educational institution. Traditionally, we are an education-loving people" (Widtsoe, 1944, p. 666). Second, its commitment is to education as an essential component of religious life: "Every life coheres around certain fundamental core ideas. . . . The fact that [God] has promised further revelation is to me a challenge to keep an open mind and be prepared to follow wherever my search for truth may lead" (Brown, 1969, p. 11). Third, it holds a deep conviction that knowledge has an eternal dimension because it advances man's agency and progress here and in the world to come: "Both creative science and revealed religion find their fullest and truest expression in the climate of freedom. . . . Be unafraid of new ideas for they are as steppingstones to progress. You will, of course, respect the opinions of others but be unafraid to dissent—if you are informed" (Brown, 1958, p. 2–3). Fourth, it is insistent that secular and spiritual learning are not at odds but in harmony with each other: Latter-day Saints do not emphasize "the spiritual education of man to the neglect of his intellectual and physical education. . . . It is not a case of esteeming intellectual and physical education less, but of esteeming spiritual education more" (Roberts, pp. 122–23). "Secular knowledge is to be desired" as a tool in the hands of the righteous, but "spiritual knowledge is a necessity" (S. Kimball, Faith Precedes the Miracle, p. 280).

A Church-sponsored school, the Mapusaga High School, American Samoa, 10th and 11th grades, 1961–1962.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bennion, Milton Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Brown, Hugh B. "An Eternal Quest—Freedom of the Mind." BYU Speeches of the Year, May 13, 1969.
- . "What Is Man and What He May Become." BYU Speeches of the Year, March 25, 1958.
- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. "The Charted Course of the Church in Education." Provo, Utah, 1936.
- Clark, Marden J. "On the Mormon Commitment to Education." Dialogue 7 (Winter 1972):11–19.
- Gardner, David P., and Jeffrey R. Holland. "Education in Zion: Intellectual Inquiry and Revealed Truth." Sanstone 6 (Jan.–Feb. 1981):59–61.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Second Century Address." BYU Studies 16 (Summer 1976):445–57.
- Maeser, Karl G. School and Fireside. Utah, 1898.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Educating the Saints," and "Zeal without Knowledge." In Nibley on the Timely and the Timeless, ed. T. Madsen, pp. 229–77. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Quinn, D. Michael. "Utah's Educational Innovation: LDS Religion Classes, 1890–1929." Utah Historical Quarterly 43 (1975):379–89.
- Rich, Wendell O. Distinctive Teachings of the Restoration, pp. 7–34, 161–88. Salt Lake City, 1962.
- Roberts, B. H. "The Mormon Point of View in Education." IE 2 (Dec. 1898):119–26.
- Salisbury, H. S. "History of Education in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Journal of History 15 (July 1922):257–81.

Widtsoe, John A. "The Returning Soldier." IE 47 (Nov. 1944):666, 701-702.

Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, comp. John A. Widtsoe, pp. 245-63. Salt Lake City, 1978.

DAVID P. GARDNER

EDUCATIONAL ATTAINMENT

Latter-day Saints have a significantly higher level of educational attainment than does the population of the United States as a whole. Contrary to the norm for other religious denominations, members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints who have earned advanced academic degrees are more likely to be deeply involved in religious practices and activity in the Church, both from a personal standpoint and in rendering service in their Church.

These phenomena may be the result of the doctrinal emphasis on learning and education that is so prevalent in the Church. Latter-day Saints are taught from early childhood that they must read and ponder the scriptures (see SCRIPTURE STUDY). The high priority given education in the lives of most Latter-day Saints has its roots in specific scriptures in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price, which assure the Saints that "to be learned is good if they hearken unto the counsels of God" (2 Ne. 9:29).

Latter-day Saints are taught that what they learn in this life will go with them into eternity (D&C 130:18-19), that all truth and knowledge are available to each individual to acquire. They are gifts from God, but each individual must be worthy of them through diligent effort to learn. From birth to death, Church members hear from the pulpit, learn in Church meetings, and read in the scriptures that each individual must learn and grow in talent and ability. A quick rejoinder to a Mormon youth who might complain of finding nothing interesting or challenging to do is to read the scriptures, study from the great books, and follow the commandment to better oneself. This should be done not only for today and tomorrow but for eternity, since what one learns is a possession that never leaves. Latter-day Saints are taught that, although they cannot take their wealth or earthly goods with them into the next life, all of what they learn will be an everlasting possession.

The establishment of schools and colleges has been a priority since the founding of the Church.

Only three years after the organization of the Church in 1830, the Prophet Joseph Smith established the SCHOOL OF THE PROPHETS in Kirtland, Ohio. Only seven months after the arrival of the pioneers in the Great Salt Lake Valley, a university was established (see UNIVERSITY OF DESERET). Throughout the history of the Church, schools were established in Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and Utah and in virtually every other location where the Saints have settled.

In Utah, where a large majority of the population are members of the Church, youth respond to scriptural precepts that stress the importance of learning by enrolling in high numbers in high school advanced placement courses that offer college-level credit. According to the annual report published in 1989 by the U.S. Department of Education, Utah ranked first among all the fifty states in the percentage of its high school seniors who took advanced placement courses (U.S. Department of Education State Education Performance Chart, 1989), in spite of the fact that Utah ranks among the lowest states in average expenditure per pupil.

Another factor motivating LDS youth to qualify for college credit while still in high school is the strong expectation in most of their families that they will serve as missionaries for the Church. With college being interrupted for missionary service, some of the time lost from pursuing a college degree can be recovered through heavy participation in advanced placement programs offered in high school.

Motivation to reach higher levels of education extends beyond the family and the scriptures. Outstanding accomplishments and milestone events in educational attainment are recognized from the pulpit in Church meetings where local leaders highlight distinguished academic accomplishments. The Deseret News, the daily newspaper published by the Church, adds to this momentum by sponsoring an annual "Sterling Scholars" program, which highlights outstanding student accomplishments in public high schools. This program features the best scholars in various fields of study at the high school level, culminating with photographs and biographical stories on semi-finalists and finalists.

Because of their commitment to education, Latter-day Saints complete more schooling than the United States population as a whole (Albrecht and Heaton, p. 49). While 53.5 percent of Mormon males and 44.3 percent of Mormon females have at least some education beyond high school, only 36.5 percent of the males and 27.7 percent of the females in the U.S. population as a whole have any college-level education after high school.

Albrecht and Heaton also found that this traditionally high level of educational attainment among Latter-day Saints has not resulted in a decrease in their religious commitment. National survey data published by the Princeton Religious Research Center (1982) indicate the opposite result concerning the impact of higher education for the nation as a whole: the higher the level of educational attainment, the lower the level of religious zeal. The Princeton Center data suggest that it is generally quite difficult for academically preoccupied individuals to hold a view of the world that is at the same time both religious and scholarly. But, according to the research of Albrecht and Heaton (1984, pp. 43–57), LDS intellectuals have less often been caught in this dilemma. In these studies religiosity was measured in terms of making financial contributions, rendering services, and attending Church meetings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Albrecht, Stan L., and Tim B. Heaton. "Secularization, Higher Education, and Religiosity." Review of Religious Research 26 (Sept. 1984):43–58.
- Princeton Religious Research Center. Religion in America. Princeton, N.J., 1982.
- United States Department of Education. State Education Statistics: Student Performance Chart. Washington, D.C., 1989.

TERRELL H. BELL

ELDER, MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD

"Elder" is an office in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to which worthy male members may be ordained at the age of eighteen or older. The name elder is also used as a general title for all bearers of that priesthood, regardless of the specific PRIESTHOOD OFFICE they hold (D&C 20:38; cf. 1 Pet. 5:1; 2 Jn. 1:1; 3 Jn. 1:1).

In May 1829 Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY were promised by John the Baptist, who had conferred the Aaronic Priesthood on them, that they would "in due time" become the first and second elders of the Church (JS—H 1:72; HC 1:40–41). Soon thereafter, they prayed for further information:

We had not long been engaged in solemn and fervent prayer, when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ; and that he also should ordain me to the same office; and then to ordain others, as it should be made known unto us from time to time. We were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such time as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together [HC 1:60–61; cf. JS—H 1:72].

These particular ordinations were performed at the ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH, April 6, 1830 (D&C 20:1–4).

The duties of elders are to be "standing ministers" (D&C 124:137) to watch over the Church, help administer its affairs, teach, and counsel. They have the AUTHORITY to confer the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST by the LAYING ON OF HANDS and to give BLESSINGS, including HEALING THE SICK. Elders may perform all functions of the Aaronic Priesthood, including baptizing and administering the sacrament. They have authority under the direction of ward BISHOPS or STAKE PRESIDENTS to confer either the Aaronic or the Melchizedek Priesthood upon worthy recipients, and to ordain them to be deacons, teachers, PRIESTS, and other elders. Elders may serve as MISSIONARIES (see D&C 20:38–50, 70; 42:12, 44) and may be called to various other positions of leadership or service. In the October 1904 general conference, President Joseph F. Smith said that the elders are to be "standing ministers at home; to be ready at the call of the presiding officers of the Church and the stakes, to labor in the ministry at home, and to officiate in any calling that may be required of them, whether it be to work in the temples, or to labor in the ministry at home, or whether it be to go out into the world, along with the Seventies, to preach the Gospel" (CR [Oct. 1904]:4). In areas where the Church is not fully organized, members meet together in BRANCHES under the jurisdiction of a presiding elder, called a branch president (see ORGANIZATION: CONTEMPORARY).

All elders residing in any ward are organized into a quorum of up to ninety-six members (D&C 107:89). They are led by a president, two counselors, and a secretary, called from the quorum mem-males and 44.3 percent of Mormon females have at least some education beyond high school, only 36.5 percent of the males and 27.7 percent of the females in the U.S. population as a whole have any college-level education after high school.

Albrecht and Heaton also found that this traditionally high level of educational attainment among Latter-day Saints has not resulted in a decrease in their religious commitment. National survey data published by the Princeton Religious Research Center (1982) indicate the opposite result concerning the impact of higher education for the nation as a whole: the higher the level of educational attainment, the lower the level of religious zeal. The Princeton Center data suggest that it is generally quite difficult for academically preoccupied individuals to hold a view of the world that is at the same time both religious and scholarly. But, according to the research of Albrecht and Heaton (1984, pp. 43–57), LDS intellectuals have less often been caught in this dilemma. In these studies religiosity was measured in terms of making financial contributions, rendering services, and attending Church meetings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Albrecht, Stan L., and Tim B. Heaton. "Secularization, Higher Education, and Religiosity." Review of Religious Research 26 (Sept. 1984):43–58.
- Princeton Religious Research Center. Religion in America. Princeton, N.J., 1982.
- United States Department of Education. State Education Statistics: Student Performance Chart. Washington, D.C., 1989.

TERRELL H. BELL

ELDER, MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD

"Elder" is an office in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to which worthy male members may be ordained at the age of eighteen or older. The name elder is also used as a general title for all bearers of that priesthood, regardless of the specific PRIESTHOOD OFFICE they hold (D&C 20:38; cf. 1 Pet. 5:1; 2 Jn. 1:1; 3 Jn. 1:1).

In May 1829 Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY were promised by John the Baptist, who had conferred the Aaronic Priesthood on them, that they would "in due time" become the first and second elders of the Church (JS—H 1:72; HC 1:40–41). Soon thereafter, they prayed for further information:

We had not long been engaged in solemn and fervent prayer, when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ; and that he also should ordain me to the same office; and then to ordain others, as it should be made known unto us from time to time. We were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such time as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together [HC 1:60–61; cf. JS—H 1:72].

These particular ordinations were performed at the ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH, April 6, 1830 (D&C 20:1–4).

The duties of elders are to be "standing ministers" (D&C 124:137) to watch over the Church, help administer its affairs, teach, and counsel. They have the AUTHORITY to confer the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST by the LAYING ON OF HANDS and to give BLESSINGS, including HEALING THE SICK. Elders may perform all functions of the Aaronic Priesthood, including baptizing and administering the sacrament. They have authority under the direction of ward BISHOPS or STAKE PRESIDENTS to confer either the Aaronic or the Melchizedek Priesthood upon worthy recipients, and to ordain them to be deacons, teachers, PRIESTS, and other elders. Elders may serve as MISSIONARIES (see D&C 20:38–50, 70; 42:12, 44) and may be called to various other positions of leadership or service. In the October 1904 general conference, President Joseph F. Smith said that the elders are to be "standing ministers at home; to be ready at the call of the presiding officers of the Church and the stakes, to labor in the ministry at home, and to officiate in any calling that may be required of them, whether it be to work in the temples, or to labor in the ministry at home, or whether it be to go out into the world, along with the Seventies, to preach the Gospel" (CR [Oct. 1904]:4). In areas where the Church is not fully organized, members meet together in BRANCHES under the jurisdiction of a presiding elder, called a branch president (see ORGANIZATION: CONTEMPORARY).

All elders residing in any ward are organized into a quorum of up to ninety-six members (D&C 107:89). They are led by a president, two counselors, and a secretary, called from the quorum members by the stake president. The elders' quorum presidency reports to the stake president, but for all, local activity and service remain under the operating jurisdiction of the bishop of the ward. The elders meet as a quorum at least each Sunday. They are responsible to fellowship one another and to assist in administering the programs and activities of the quorum, ward, and stake, with the intent to lift and improve the condition of humankind (see WELFARE SERVICES). Elders are directed by revelation to function in a spirit of love, gentleness, patient persuasion, and righteousness (D&C 121:41–46).

The LDS use of "elder" differs from the use of the term in those societies where it refers to the older people who exert influence and authority in the community because of their age, status, wisdom, experience, and character, or by appointment of the group. The term was common to ancient societies such as those in Egypt, Midian, and Moab (Gen. 50:7; Num. 22:7). Elders (i.e., the zeqenim, the "old ones") were prominent leaders of the Israelite tribes during the Exodus (Ex. 4:29). They apparently assisted Moses in administering justice (Lev. 4:13–21; 9:1; Num. 16:25), and some were evidently authorized to participate in sacred religious ceremonies (Ex. 24:9–11; Num. 11:16–26). After the conquest of Canaan, the civic authority of elders increased, and they assisted in the government of the tribal communities. They served in accepting a king (2 Sam. 3:17–21; 5:3) and in other community and religious functions (1 Kgs. 8:1–3; 20:7–8). Scores of such functions are mentioned throughout the historical books of the Old Testament. With the prophet Ezekiel, these elders provided the primary leadership during the captivity in Babylon (605 B.C.; e.g., Ezek. 8:1; 14:1–5). Many years after the return from exile, the chief priests, scribes, and elders composed the Sanhedrin, the governing council of Judah. A local council of twenty-three elders governed each community. In New Testament times, elders were appointed as ecclesiastical leaders for each of the local Christian congregations (Acts 14:23; 15:6; 20:17–28; Titus 1:5; James 5:14; 1 Pet. 5:1–4). They associated with the apostles in the councils and governance of the Church, and functioned among their Christian brethren in ways similar to the Jewish Sanhedrin (Acts 11:30; 15:2; 16:4; 21:18). From among the elders of good repute, "overseers" or "bishops" may have been chosen (Acts 20:17–28; Titus 1:5–9; cf. 1 Tim. 3:1–7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Davies, G. Henton. "Elder in the Old Testament." Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 72–73. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Only an Elder. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Shepherd, M. H., Jr. "Elder in the New Testament." Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 73–75. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1954.

R. RICHARD VETTERLI

---

ELECT OF GOD

The elect of God are those who are heirs to all that the Father has. Although the faithful have always been the elect of God, even before Abraham, the present concept that God elects or chooses individuals or groups to whom he makes promises of eternal SALVATION, and in turn requires of them certain obligations, has its roots in the COVENANT God made with ABRAHAM. In ancient times Abraham's descendants were considered the elect, especially through Isaac and Jacob (Israel). For disobedience, the Israelites were eventually scattered throughout the world. However, God has not forgotten his covenant with their fathers. Biblical, Book of Mormon, and latter-day prophets have declared that ultimately the Israelite people will be gathered from their dispersion and restored to favor with God (cf. Amos 9:13–15). All persons who are not literally of Israel can be brought into the elect lineage of Abraham by the LAW OF ADOPTION when they accept the gospel (Abr. 2:10; D&C 84:33–34; Gal. 3:26–29; 4:5–7).

The GOSPEL of Jesus Christ, restored to the earth through the Prophet Joseph SMITH, inaugurated the RESTORATION and the gathering of the elect from the four quarters of the earth (D&C 33:6; 110:11). When scattered children of Israel hear the gospel message of SALVATION, they are invited to come into the fold of Christ, his Church, by REPENTANCE, BAPTISM, and receiving the HOLY GHOST by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS (MD, p. 201).

To enjoy the fulness of the covenant BLESSINGS and the eternal felicity of God in the presence of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the elect must be faithful in keeping all the covenants required of them by the Lord. Some may choose not to be so devoted, whereas others pursue such ex-

bers by the stake president. The elders' quorum presidency reports to the stake president, but for all, local activity and service remain under the operating jurisdiction of the bishop of the ward. The elders meet as a quorum at least each Sunday. They are responsible to fellowship one another and to assist in administering the programs and activities of the quorum, ward, and stake, with the intent to lift and improve the condition of humankind (see WELFARE SERVICES). Elders are directed by revelation to function in a spirit of love, gentleness, patient persuasion, and righteousness (D&C 121:41–46).

The LDS use of "elder" differs from the use of the term in those societies where it refers to the older people who exert influence and authority in the community because of their age, status, wisdom, experience, and character, or by appointment of the group. The term was common to ancient societies such as those in Egypt, Midian, and Moab (Gen. 50:7; Num. 22:7). Elders (i.e., the zeqenim, the "old ones") were prominent leaders of the Israelite tribes during the Exodus (Ex. 4:29). They apparently assisted Moses in administering justice (Lev. 4:13–21; 9:1; Num. 16:25), and some were evidently authorized to participate in sacred religious ceremonies (Ex. 24:9–11; Num. 11:16–26). After the conquest of Canaan, the civic authority of elders increased, and they assisted in the government of the tribal communities. They served in accepting a king (2 Sam. 3:17–21; 5:3) and in other community and religious functions (1 Kgs. 8:1–3; 20:7–8). Scores of such functions are mentioned throughout the historical books of the Old Testament. With the prophet Ezekiel, these elders provided the primary leadership during the captivity in Babylon (605 B.C.; e.g., Ezek. 8:1; 14:1–5). Many years after the return from exile, the chief priests, scribes, and elders composed the Sanhedrin, the governing council of Judah. A local council of twenty-three elders governed each community. In New Testament times, elders were appointed as ecclesiastical leaders for each of the local Christian congregations (Acts 14:23; 15:6; 20:17–28; Titus 1:5; James 5:14; 1 Pet. 5:1–4). They associated with the apostles in the councils and governance of the Church, and functioned among their Christian brethren in ways similar to the Jewish Sanhedrin (Acts 11:30; 15:2; 16:4; 21:18). From among the elders of good repute, "overseers" or "bishops" may have been chosen (Acts 20:17–28; Titus 1:5–9; cf. 1 Tim. 3:1–7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Davies, G. Henton. "Elder in the Old Testament." Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 72–73. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Only an Elder. Salt Lake City, 1978.
- Shepherd, M. H., Jr. "Elder in the New Testament." Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Vol. 2, pp. 73–75. Nashville, Tenn., 1962.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1954.

R. RICHARD VETTERLI

---

ELECT OF GOD

The elect of God are those who are heirs to all that the Father has. Although the faithful have always been the elect of God, even before Abraham, the present concept that God elects or chooses individuals or groups to whom he makes promises of eternal SALVATION, and in turn requires of them certain obligations, has its roots in the COVENANT God made with ABRAHAM. In ancient times Abraham's descendants were considered the elect, especially through Isaac and Jacob (Israel). For disobedience, the Israelites were eventually scattered throughout the world. However, God has not forgotten his covenant with their fathers. Biblical, Book of Mormon, and latter-day prophets have declared that ultimately the Israelite people will be gathered from their dispersion and restored to favor with God (cf. Amos 9:13–15). All persons who are not literally of Israel can be brought into the elect lineage of Abraham by the LAW OF ADOPTION when they accept the gospel (Abr. 2:10; D&C 84:33–34; Gal. 3:26–29; 4:5–7).

The GOSPEL of Jesus Christ, restored to the earth through the Prophet Joseph SMITH, inaugurated the RESTORATION and the gathering of the elect from the four quarters of the earth (D&C 33:6; 110:11). When scattered children of Israel hear the gospel message of SALVATION, they are invited to come into the fold of Christ, his Church, by REPENTANCE, BAPTISM, and receiving the HOLY GHOST by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS (MD, p. 201).

To enjoy the fulness of the covenant BLESSINGS and the eternal felicity of God in the presence of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the elect must be faithful in keeping all the covenants required of them by the Lord. Some may choose not to be so devoted, whereas others pursue such excellence in faithfulness that their CALLING AND ELECTION are made sure (cf. 2 Pet. 1:10). These become “the elect according to the covenant” (JS—M 1:22) and are made partakers of the same eternal reward that was extended to Abraham. That is, they are assured of EXALTATION in God’s presence with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Luke 13:28; D&C 132:29–32, 37).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Richards, LeGrand. Israel, Do You Know! Salt Lake City, 1954.

ARTHUR A. BAILEY

ELIAS

Elias is both a name and a title and has four meanings: (1) Elias was a man, presumably of Abraham’s time, who “committed the dispensation of Abraham”—which included the blessings of God’s covenant with Abraham—to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY on April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE (D&C 110:12); nothing more is known about this man. (2) “Elias” appears in the New Testament as the Greek transliteration of the Hebrew name ELIJAH (e.g., Matt. 17:3; James 5:17–18). (3) A forerunner in building God’s kingdom is called “an Elias” (TPJS, pp. 335–36). (4) A prophet who helps restore something of particular importance is also referred to as an “Elias” (cf. JST Matt. 17:13–14). In scripture, therefore, the name Elias may refer to a preparer, a forerunner, a restorer, to Elias himself, or to Elijah.

Individuals who have acted as forerunners or restorers include Jesus Christ (JST John 1:21–28); Noah as Gabriel (D&C 27:6–7; TPJS, p. 157); John the Baptist (Luke 1:17); John the Revelator (D&C 77:9, 14); Adam as Michael, Moroni<sup>2</sup>, and Peter, James, and John (D&C 27:5–13; 128:20–21); and Joseph Smith (D&C 1:17–18; TPJS, p. 335). Each of these may be considered an Elias.

Preparatory work in the Church is primarily associated with the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD; but when performed by the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, it is done under the spirit and power of Elijah (TPJS, pp. 336–37). In this connection, the keys given by Elias in the Kirtland Temple (D&C 110:12) were specifically for the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT.

GEORGE A. HORTON, JR.

ELIAS, SPIRIT OF

The “spirit of Elias” is a LDS concept that refers to the preparatory power that initiates gospel RESTORATION following periods of APOSTASY. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “The spirit of Elias is to prepare the way for a greater revelation of God, which is the Priesthood of Elias, or the Priesthood into which Aaron was ordained. And when God sends a man into the world to prepare for a greater work, holding the keys of the power of Elias, it was called the doctrine of Elias, even from the early ages of the world. . . . We find the Apostles endowed with greater power than John [the Baptist]: their office was more under the spirit and power of Elijah than Elias” (TPJS, pp. 335–36).

JOHN THE BAPTIST was the forerunner of Jesus Christ in the MERIDIAN OF TIME (Matt. 11:12–14; 17:12; JST John 1:21–24). He “was ordained by the angel of God . . . to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people, to prepare them for the coming of the Lord” (D&C 84:28). By authority of the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, John preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, in preparation for the coming of one mightier who would baptize with the HOLY GHOST.

On May 15, 1829, John the Baptist, as a resurrected being, ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY to the Aaronic Priesthood preparatory to Christ’s SECOND COMING. Describing this ordination, Joseph Smith stated:

An angel . . . laid his hands upon my head, and ordained me to a Priest after the order of Aaron, and to hold the keys of this Priesthood, which office was to preach repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and also to baptize. But I was informed that this office did not extend to the laying on of hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost; that office was a greater work, and was to be given afterward; but that my ordination was a preparatory work, or a going before, which was the spirit of Elias [TPJS, p. 335].

Later, PETER, JAMES, and JOHN conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (D&C 27:12), and still later (April 3, 1836) ELIJAH conferred additional keys upon them (D&C 110:13–16).

Joseph Smith further explained:

The spirit of Elias is first, Elijah second, and Messiah last. Elias is a forerunner to prepare the way, cellence in faithfulness that their CALLING AND ELECTION are made sure (cf. 2 Pet. 1:10). These become “the elect according to the covenant” (JS—M 1:22) and are made partakers of the same eternal reward that was extended to Abraham. That is, they are assured of EXALTATION in God’s presence with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Luke 13:28; D&C 132:29–32, 37).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Richards, LeGrand. Israel, Do You Know! Salt Lake City, 1954.

ARTHUR A. BAILEY

ELIAS

Elias is both a name and a title and has four meanings: (1) Elias was a man, presumably of Abraham’s time, who “committed the dispensation of Abraham”—which included the blessings of God’s covenant with Abraham—to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY on April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE (D&C 110:12); nothing more is known about this man. (2) “Elias” appears in the New Testament as the Greek transliteration of the Hebrew name ELIJAH (e.g., Matt. 17:3; James 5:17–18). (3) A forerunner in building God’s kingdom is called “an Elias” (TPJS, pp. 335–36). (4) A prophet who helps restore something of particular importance is also referred to as an “Elias” (cf. JST Matt. 17:13–14). In scripture, therefore, the name Elias may refer to a preparer, a forerunner, a restorer, to Elias himself, or to Elijah.

Individuals who have acted as forerunners or restorers include Jesus Christ (JST John 1:21–28); Noah as Gabriel (D&C 27:6–7; TPJS, p. 157); John the Baptist (Luke 1:17); John the Revelator (D&C 77:9, 14); Adam as Michael, Moroni<sup>2</sup>, and Peter, James, and John (D&C 27:5–13; 128:20–21); and Joseph Smith (D&C 1:17–18; TPJS, p. 335). Each of these may be considered an Elias.

Preparatory work in the Church is primarily associated with the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD; but when performed by the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, it is done under the spirit and power of Elijah (TPJS, pp. 336–37). In this connection, the keys given by Elias in the Kirtland Temple (D&C 110:12) were specifically for the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT.

GEORGE A. HORTON, JR.

ELIAS, SPIRIT OF

The “spirit of Elias” is a LDS concept that refers to the preparatory power that initiates gospel RESTORATION following periods of APOSTASY. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “The spirit of Elias is to prepare the way for a greater revelation of God, which is the Priesthood of Elias, or the Priesthood into which Aaron was ordained. And when God sends a man into the world to prepare for a greater work, holding the keys of the power of Elias, it was called the doctrine of Elias, even from the early ages of the world. . . . We find the Apostles endowed with greater power than John [the Baptist]: their office was more under the spirit and power of Elijah than Elias” (TPJS, pp. 335–36).

JOHN THE BAPTIST was the forerunner of Jesus Christ in the MERIDIAN OF TIME (Matt. 11:12–14; 17:12; JST John 1:21–24). He “was ordained by the angel of God . . . to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people, to prepare them for the coming of the Lord” (D&C 84:28). By authority of the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, John preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, in preparation for the coming of one mightier who would baptize with the HOLY GHOST.

On May 15, 1829, John the Baptist, as a resurrected being, ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY to the Aaronic Priesthood preparatory to Christ’s SECOND COMING. Describing this ordination, Joseph Smith stated:

An angel . . . laid his hands upon my head, and ordained me to a Priest after the order of Aaron, and to hold the keys of this Priesthood, which office was to preach repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and also to baptize. But I was informed that this office did not extend to the laying on of hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost; that office was a greater work, and was to be given afterward; but that my ordination was a preparatory work, or a going before, which was the spirit of Elias [TPJS, p. 335].

Later, PETER, JAMES, and JOHN conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (D&C 27:12), and still later (April 3, 1836) ELIJAH conferred additional keys upon them (D&C 110:13–16).

Joseph Smith further explained:

The spirit of Elias is first, Elijah second, and Messiah last. Elias is a forerunner to prepare the way, cellence in faithfulness that their CALLING AND ELECTION are made sure (cf. 2 Pet. 1:10). These become “the elect according to the covenant” (JS—M 1:22) and are made partakers of the same eternal reward that was extended to Abraham. That is, they are assured of EXALTATION in God’s presence with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Luke 13:28; D&C 132:29–32, 37).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Richards, LeGrand. Israel, Do You Know! Salt Lake City, 1954.

ARTHUR A. BAILEY

ELIAS

Elias is both a name and a title and has four meanings: (1) Elias was a man, presumably of Abraham’s time, who “committed the dispensation of Abraham”—which included the blessings of God’s covenant with Abraham—to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY on April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE (D&C 110:12); nothing more is known about this man. (2) “Elias” appears in the New Testament as the Greek transliteration of the Hebrew name ELIJAH (e.g., Matt. 17:3; James 5:17–18). (3) A forerunner in building God’s kingdom is called “an Elias” (TPJS, pp. 335–36). (4) A prophet who helps restore something of particular importance is also referred to as an “Elias” (cf. JST Matt. 17:13–14). In scripture, therefore, the name Elias may refer to a preparer, a forerunner, a restorer, to Elias himself, or to Elijah.

Individuals who have acted as forerunners or restorers include Jesus Christ (JST John 1:21–28); Noah as Gabriel (D&C 27:6–7; TPJS, p. 157); John the Baptist (Luke 1:17); John the Revelator (D&C 77:9, 14); Adam as Michael, Moroni<sup>2</sup>, and Peter, James, and John (D&C 27:5–13; 128:20–21); and Joseph Smith (D&C 1:17–18; TPJS, p. 335). Each of these may be considered an Elias.

Preparatory work in the Church is primarily associated with the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD; but when performed by the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, it is done under the spirit and power of Elijah (TPJS, pp. 336–37). In this connection, the keys given by Elias in the Kirtland Temple (D&C 110:12) were specifically for the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT.

GEORGE A. HORTON, JR.

ELIAS, SPIRIT OF

The “spirit of Elias” is a LDS concept that refers to the preparatory power that initiates gospel RESTORATION following periods of APOSTASY. The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, “The spirit of Elias is to prepare the way for a greater revelation of God, which is the Priesthood of Elias, or the Priesthood into which Aaron was ordained. And when God sends a man into the world to prepare for a greater work, holding the keys of the power of Elias, it was called the doctrine of Elias, even from the early ages of the world. . . . We find the Apostles endowed with greater power than John [the Baptist]: their office was more under the spirit and power of Elijah than Elias” (TPJS, pp. 335–36).

JOHN THE BAPTIST was the forerunner of Jesus Christ in the MERIDIAN OF TIME (Matt. 11:12–14; 17:12; JST John 1:21–24). He “was ordained by the angel of God . . . to make straight the way of the Lord before the face of his people, to prepare them for the coming of the Lord” (D&C 84:28). By authority of the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, John preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, in preparation for the coming of one mightier who would baptize with the HOLY GHOST.

On May 15, 1829, John the Baptist, as a resurrected being, ordained Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY to the Aaronic Priesthood preparatory to Christ’s SECOND COMING. Describing this ordination, Joseph Smith stated:

An angel . . . laid his hands upon my head, and ordained me to a Priest after the order of Aaron, and to hold the keys of this Priesthood, which office was to preach repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and also to baptize. But I was informed that this office did not extend to the laying on of hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost; that office was a greater work, and was to be given afterward; but that my ordination was a preparatory work, or a going before, which was the spirit of Elias [TPJS, p. 335].

Later, PETER, JAMES, and JOHN conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (D&C 27:12), and still later (April 3, 1836) ELIJAH conferred additional keys upon them (D&C 110:13–16).

Joseph Smith further explained:

The spirit of Elias is first, Elijah second, and Messiah last. Elias is a forerunner to prepare the way, and the spirit and power of Elijah is to come after, holding the keys of power, building the Temple to the capstone, placing the seals of the Melchizedek Priesthood upon the house of Israel, and making all things ready; then Messiah comes to His Temple, which is last of all. . . . Elijah was to come and prepare the way and build up the kingdom before the coming of the great day of the Lord, although the spirit of Elias might begin it [TPJS, pp. 335, 340].

A. JAMES HUDSON

ELIJAH

[Because of Elijah's prophesied role (Mal. 4:5–6), he has become the subject of tradition and legend, as the article Ancient Sources explains. Moreover, as expressed in the companion essay, LDS Sources, Latter-day Saint teaching illuminates Elijah's latter-day roles as well as the fulfillment of prophetic expectations associated with him.]

LDS SOURCES

During a divine manifestation to the youthful Joseph SMITH on the evening of September 21, 1823, the angel MORONI quoted Malachi 4:5–6, a prophecy that concerns Elijah's activities in the latter days. Moroni's rendering, which differs from the current biblical text, outlines and clarifies Elijah's prophesied role:

Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers. If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming [JS—H 1:38–39; D&C 2].

Malachi's prophecy anticipates that Elijah would play an important role "before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4:5). Elijah was endowed with the priesthood power of God. With this power, he declared to King Ahab that no rain would fall upon the land (1 Kgs. 17:1). Accordingly, the heavens were sealed and ancient Israel experienced a disastrous drought for three and a half years. When Elijah was carried up into heaven in a fiery chariot, his earthly mission appeared to have ended. But the sealing power that he exercised marked only the beginning of his responsibility regarding this eternal priesthood power.

At the conclusion of his mortal life, Elijah was translated; that is, he experienced some type of change from mortality without experiencing mortal death (see TRANSLATED BEINGS). Latter-day Saints conclude that a major reason for Elijah's translation was to enable him to return to the earth to confer KEYS of authority on the three chief apostles before Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection (see MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION). Since spirits cannot lay hands on mortal beings (D&C 129), and since Moses and Elijah could not return as resurrected beings because Jesus was the first to be resurrected (Packer, p. 109; cf. TPJS, p. 191), the need for the translation of Elijah and Moses is evident. On the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–9), Elijah specifically restored the priesthood keys of sealing, the power that binds and validates in the heavens all ordinances performed on the earth (cf. TPJS, p. 338).

On April 3, 1836, in a vision to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY in the newly completed KIRTLAND TEMPLE, Elijah appeared and announced that the time had come when Malachi's prophecy was to be fulfilled. He committed the sealing keys of the priesthood to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery (D&C 110:13–16). This restoration was necessary so that the sealing ordinances and covenants of God could be administered in righteousness upon the earth (DS 2:117). Joseph Smith explained:

The spirit, power, and calling of Elijah is, that ye have power to hold the key of the revelations, ordinances, oracles, powers and endowments of the fulness of the Melchizedek Priesthood and of the kingdom of God on the earth; and to receive, obtain, and perform all the ordinances belonging to the kingdom of God. . . . What you seal on earth, by the keys of Elijah, is sealed in heaven; and this is the power of Elijah [TPJS, pp. 337–38].

Through the sealing power of the priesthood, men and women may be sealed to each other in marriage for all eternity in one of the temples of God. In addition, children may be sealed to their parents forever. Thus the family organization continues eternally (Sperry, p. 139).

Because many have died without either a knowledge of saving gospel principles or the opportunity to receive priesthood ordinances, the latter-day mission of Elijah made it possible to have these sealing ordinances performed vicariously on the earth for those who have died, thus and the spirit and power of Elijah is to come after, holding the keys of power, building the Temple to the capstone, placing the seals of the Melchizedek Priesthood upon the house of Israel, and making all things ready; then Messiah comes to His Temple, which is last of all. . . . Elijah was to come and prepare the way and build up the kingdom before the coming of the great day of the Lord, although the spirit of Elias might begin it [TPJS, pp. 335, 340].

A. JAMES HUDSON

ELIJAH

[Because of Elijah's prophesied role (Mal. 4:5–6), he has become the subject of tradition and legend, as the article Ancient Sources explains. Moreover, as expressed in the companion essay, LDS Sources, Latter-day Saint teaching illuminates Elijah's latter-day roles as well as the fulfillment of prophetic expectations associated with him.]

LDS SOURCES

During a divine manifestation to the youthful Joseph SMITH on the evening of September 21, 1823, the angel MORONI quoted Malachi 4:5–6, a prophecy that concerns Elijah's activities in the latter days. Moroni's rendering, which differs from the current biblical text, outlines and clarifies Elijah's prophesied role:

Behold, I will reveal unto you the Priesthood, by the hand of Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to their fathers. If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming [JS—H 1:38–39; D&C 2].

Malachi's prophecy anticipates that Elijah would play an important role "before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4:5). Elijah was endowed with the priesthood power of God. With this power, he declared to King Ahab that no rain would fall upon the land (1 Kgs. 17:1). Accordingly, the heavens were sealed and ancient Israel experienced a disastrous drought for three and a half years. When Elijah was carried up into heaven in a fiery chariot, his earthly mission appeared to have ended. But the sealing power that he exercised marked only the beginning of his responsibility regarding this eternal priesthood power.

At the conclusion of his mortal life, Elijah was translated; that is, he experienced some type of change from mortality without experiencing mortal death (see TRANSLATED BEINGS). Latter-day Saints conclude that a major reason for Elijah's translation was to enable him to return to the earth to confer KEYS of authority on the three chief apostles before Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection (see MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION). Since spirits cannot lay hands on mortal beings (D&C 129), and since Moses and Elijah could not return as resurrected beings because Jesus was the first to be resurrected (Packer, p. 109; cf. TPJS, p. 191), the need for the translation of Elijah and Moses is evident. On the Mount of Transfiguration (Matt. 17:1–9), Elijah specifically restored the priesthood keys of sealing, the power that binds and validates in the heavens all ordinances performed on the earth (cf. TPJS, p. 338).

On April 3, 1836, in a vision to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY in the newly completed KIRTLAND TEMPLE, Elijah appeared and announced that the time had come when Malachi's prophecy was to be fulfilled. He committed the sealing keys of the priesthood to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery (D&C 110:13–16). This restoration was necessary so that the sealing ordinances and covenants of God could be administered in righteousness upon the earth (DS 2:117). Joseph Smith explained:

The spirit, power, and calling of Elijah is, that ye have power to hold the key of the revelations, ordinances, oracles, powers and endowments of the fulness of the Melchizedek Priesthood and of the kingdom of God on the earth; and to receive, obtain, and perform all the ordinances belonging to the kingdom of God. . . . What you seal on earth, by the keys of Elijah, is sealed in heaven; and this is the power of Elijah [TPJS, pp. 337–38].

Through the sealing power of the priesthood, men and women may be sealed to each other in marriage for all eternity in one of the temples of God. In addition, children may be sealed to their parents forever. Thus the family organization continues eternally (Sperry, p. 139).

Because many have died without either a knowledge of saving gospel principles or the opportunity to receive priesthood ordinances, the latter-day mission of Elijah made it possible to have these sealing ordinances performed vicariously on the earth for those who have died, thus giving all an opportunity for salvation (cf. DS 2:118–19). The Prophet Joseph Smith offered the following explanation:

The spirit of Elijah is to come, the Gospel to be established, . . . and the Saints to come up as saviors on Mount Zion. But how are they to become saviors on Mount Zion? By building their temples, erecting their baptismal fonts, and going forth and receiving all the ordinances, baptisms, confirmations, washings, anointings, ordinations and sealing powers upon their heads, in behalf of all their progenitors who are dead, and redeem them; . . . and herein is the chain that binds the hearts of the fathers to the children and the children to the fathers, which fulfills the mission of Elijah [TPJS, p. 330].

When Latter-day Saints speak of the spirit of Elijah (see ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF), they mean at least two things. First, the promise of salvation made to the fathers has been renewed to the modern Church (JS—H 1:38–39; D&C 27:9–10). Second, the hearts of men and women have extensively turned to their fathers, as is evident in the dramatic growth in the number of genealogical societies, libraries, and individual genealogical or family history research organizations throughout much of the world. The spirit of Elijah has motivated thousands to make considerable investment in both money and time to search out the records of family ancestors and bring these records together to form a family history (DS 2:123–27; see GENEALOGY). In addition to numerous family history centers, the Church has built many temples where sacred priesthood saving ordinances may be performed for both the living and the dead (see SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.
 Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS 2:100–128. Salt Lake City, 1955.
 Sperry, Sidney B. The Spirit of the Old Testament. Salt Lake City, 1970.
 Widtsoe, John A. "Elijah, The Tishbite." Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine 27 (Apr. 1936):53–60.

FRANKLIN D. DAY

ANCIENT SOURCES

Elijah in Jewish tradition was an Israelite prophet who was active in the northern kingdom during the reigns of King Ahab (and his consort Jezebel) and King Ahaziah (9th cent. B.C.). His name may be a cognomen: Eli-yahu (YHWH, or Jehovah, is God), expressing the main emphasis of his prophetic ministry: the exclusive and pure worship of YHWH, and uncompromising opposition to the Canaanite pagan cult of Baal. His activities are described in 1 Kings 17–2 Kings 2, and account for his becoming in Jewish tradition the symbol of uncompromising religious zeal. The latter came to a dramatic climax in his confrontation with the priests of Baal, after a long period of drought which Elijah had prophesied would come as punishment for the idolatrous Baal-worship, on Mount Carmel. (The Catholic monastic order of Carmelites, taking Elijah's ascetic life in the desert as a model, considers him as its spiritual father.) Unlike the later "literary" prophets, Elijah is also described as a worker of miracles, but he shares with them the strong emphasis on social justice, as evidenced by his other great clash with the king and queen in the matter of Naboth's vineyard (1 Kgs. 21), which the royal couple desired for themselves.

According to the biblical account, Elijah did not die an ordinary death but was taken up into heaven in a whirlwind by a chariot of fire drawn by horses of fire. Hence, unlike other prophets, a large number of legends and beliefs concerning him developed. He is said to return frequently to earth, usually in the guise of a poor peasant, beggar, or even Gentile and—unrecognized—to help those in distress or danger, disappearing as suddenly as he appeared. A chair is set and a cup of wine poured for Elijah at every Passover celebration. He is also believed to be present at every circumcision ceremony, and a special chair ("Elijah's chair") for his invisible presence is placed next to that of the godfather holding the male baby. This particular belief may be due to two factors: Elijah's angelic status (having ascended to heaven) and the prophet Malachi's reference to him (Mal. 3:1) as the "angel of the covenant." In Jewish usage the term berith ("covenant") signifies more specifically the "covenant of circumcision" (cf. Gen. 17:9–10). Elijah also plays an important role in Jewish mysticism, where he appears as a celestial messenger revealing divine mysteries.

More important, however, than all the other aspects is Elijah's eschatological role in Jewish tradition. How and why this role developed is difficult to reconstruct, but by the time of Malachi, one of the last Old Testament prophets, some such beliefs seem to have already been in existence: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord"

(Mal. 4:5). Elijah gradually assumed the role of precursor of the Messiah and the messenger announcing his advent. Some of the contemporaries of Jesus (cf. Matt. 16:13–14) seem to have thought that he might be Elijah (Matt. 11:14; 17:10–13) in a manner that suggests that John the Baptist, as the forerunner and announcer of the Messiah, was Elijah (namely, fulfilled his eschatological function). Later apocryphal writings (e.g., The Apocalypse of Elijah) connect the “revelations” concerning the last things they report with Elijah. Elements from the Jewish Elijah traditions and legends were also adopted and developed in different ways by Islam.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

“Elijah.” Encyclopaedia Judaica, Vol. 6. Jerusalem, 1972.

Postbiblical Jewish sources are conveniently collected in Louis Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews, Vol. 6, 3rd reprint. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1967, pp. 133–35 (under “Elijah”). A very good summary can be found in M. J. Stiasny, “Le Prophète Élie dans le Judaïsme,” in Élie le Prophète, Études Carmélitaines, Vol. 2 (1956):199–255.

For Islamic traditions, see “Ilyas” and “al-Khadir” in Encyclopaedia of Islam.

R. J. ZVI WERBLOWSKY

ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF

For members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the spirit of Elijah is the spirit of family kinship and unity. It is the spirit that motivates the concern to search out ancestral family members through FAMILY HISTORY; and, on their behalf, to perform proxy baptisms, temple ENDOWMENTS, AND SEALING ordinances (HC 6:252). This is seen as fulfillment of the prophecy of Malachi that in the last days Elijah “will turn the heart [in Hebrew, the innermost part, as the soul, the affections] of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers” (Mal. 4:5–6).

The appearance of Elijah to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE in 1836 inaugurated anew this spirit (D&C 110:13). The spirit of Elijah is active in the impetus anyone feels toward finding and cherishing family members and family ties past and present. In the global sense, the spirit of Elijah is the spirit of love that may eventually overcome all human family estrangements. Then the priesthood power can bind generations together in eternal family relationships and “seal the children to the fathers and fathers to the children” within the gospel of Jesus Christ (WJS, p. 329).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. “Elijah the Prophet and His Mission.” Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine 12 (Jan. 1921): 1–20.

MARY FINLAYSON

ELOHIM

Elohim (God; gods; Heavenly Father) is the plural form of the singular noun 'eloah (compare Arabic Allah) in the Hebrew Bible, where it is used 2,570 times as compared to 57 times for its singular. But as one commentator has noted, why this “plural form for ‘God’ is used has not yet been explained satisfactorily” (Botterweck, Vol. 1, p. 272).

SINGULAR USAGE. Elohim appears in the Hebrew Bible as a common noun identifying Israel’s God: “In the beginning God ['elohim] created [singular verb] the heaven and the earth” (Gen. 1:1). It was also frequently used interchangeably with Jehovah, the proper name for Israel’s God: “And Jacob said, O God ['elohim] of my father Abraham, . . . the LORD [Jehovah] which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country” (Gen. 32:9; see also JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST).

Latter-day Saints use the name Elohim in a more restrictive sense as a proper name-title identifying the Father in Heaven (see GOD THE FATHER). The First Presidency of the Church has written, “God the Eternal Father, whom we designate by the exalted name-title ‘Elohim,’ is the literal Parent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and of the spirits of the human race” (MFP 5:26; see also Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency, “The Father and the Son,” appendices, Vol. 4).

PLURAL USAGE. Ancient Israelites used 'elohim also as a proper plural form to refer to gods of nations other than Israel. At such times, the accompanying verbs and adjectives used were also plural. “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” (Ex. 20:3; here “other” is a plural adjective).

Occasionally, Latter-day Saints use Elohim in its plural sense as a common noun to refer to the plurality of gods known to exist (TPJS, pp. 371–74). However, despite their belief that many lords (Mal. 4:5). Elijah gradually assumed the role of precursor of the Messiah and the messenger announcing his advent. Some of the contemporaries of Jesus (cf. Matt. 16:13–14) seem to have thought that he might be Elijah (Matt. 11:14; 17:10–13) in a manner that suggests that John the Baptist, as the forerunner and announcer of the Messiah, was Elijah (namely, fulfilled his eschatological function). Later apocryphal writings (e.g., The Apocalypse of Elijah) connect the “revelations” concerning the last things they report with Elijah. Elements from the Jewish Elijah traditions and legends were also adopted and developed in different ways by Islam.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

“Elijah.” Encyclopaedia Judaica, Vol. 6. Jerusalem, 1972.

Postbiblical Jewish sources are conveniently collected in Louis Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews, Vol. 6, 3rd reprint. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1967, pp. 133–35 (under “Elijah”). A very good summary can be found in M. J. Stiasny, “Le Prophète Élie dans le Judaïsme,” in Élie le Prophète, Études Carmélitaines, Vol. 2 (1956):199–255.

For Islamic traditions, see “Ilyas” and “al-Khadir” in Encyclopaedia of Islam.

R. J. ZVI WERBLOWSKY

ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF

For members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the spirit of Elijah is the spirit of family kinship and unity. It is the spirit that motivates the concern to search out ancestral family members through FAMILY HISTORY; and, on their behalf, to perform proxy baptisms, temple ENDOWMENTS, AND SEALING ordinances (HC 6:252). This is seen as fulfillment of the prophecy of Malachi that in the last days Elijah “will turn the heart [in Hebrew, the innermost part, as the soul, the affections] of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers” (Mal. 4:5–6).

The appearance of Elijah to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE in 1836 inaugurated anew this spirit (D&C 110:13). The spirit of Elijah is active in the impetus anyone feels toward finding and cherishing family members and family ties past and present. In the global sense, the spirit of Elijah is the spirit of love that may eventually overcome all human family estrangements. Then the priesthood power can bind generations together in eternal family relationships and “seal the children to the fathers and fathers to the children” within the gospel of Jesus Christ (WJS, p. 329).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. “Elijah the Prophet and His Mission.” Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine 12 (Jan. 1921): 1–20.

MARY FINLAYSON

ELOHIM

Elohim (God; gods; Heavenly Father) is the plural form of the singular noun 'eloah (compare Arabic Allah) in the Hebrew Bible, where it is used 2,570 times as compared to 57 times for its singular. But as one commentator has noted, why this “plural form for ‘God’ is used has not yet been explained satisfactorily” (Botterweck, Vol. 1, p. 272).

SINGULAR USAGE. Elohim appears in the Hebrew Bible as a common noun identifying Israel’s God: “In the beginning God ['elohim] created [singular verb] the heaven and the earth” (Gen. 1:1). It was also frequently used interchangeably with Jehovah, the proper name for Israel’s God: “And Jacob said, O God ['elohim] of my father Abraham, . . . the LORD [Jehovah] which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country” (Gen. 32:9; see also JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST).

Latter-day Saints use the name Elohim in a more restrictive sense as a proper name-title identifying the Father in Heaven (see GOD THE FATHER). The First Presidency of the Church has written, “God the Eternal Father, whom we designate by the exalted name-title ‘Elohim,’ is the literal Parent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and of the spirits of the human race” (MFP 5:26; see also Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency, “The Father and the Son,” appendices, Vol. 4).

PLURAL USAGE. Ancient Israelites used 'elohim also as a proper plural form to refer to gods of nations other than Israel. At such times, the accompanying verbs and adjectives used were also plural. “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” (Ex. 20:3; here “other” is a plural adjective).

Occasionally, Latter-day Saints use Elohim in its plural sense as a common noun to refer to the plurality of gods known to exist (TPJS, pp. 371–74). However, despite their belief that many lords (Mal. 4:5). Elijah gradually assumed the role of precursor of the Messiah and the messenger announcing his advent. Some of the contemporaries of Jesus (cf. Matt. 16:13–14) seem to have thought that he might be Elijah (Matt. 11:14; 17:10–13) in a manner that suggests that John the Baptist, as the forerunner and announcer of the Messiah, was Elijah (namely, fulfilled his eschatological function). Later apocryphal writings (e.g., The Apocalypse of Elijah) connect the “revelations” concerning the last things they report with Elijah. Elements from the Jewish Elijah traditions and legends were also adopted and developed in different ways by Islam.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

“Elijah.” Encyclopaedia Judaica, Vol. 6. Jerusalem, 1972.

Postbiblical Jewish sources are conveniently collected in Louis Ginzberg, Legends of the Jews, Vol. 6, 3rd reprint. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1967, pp. 133–35 (under “Elijah”). A very good summary can be found in M. J. Stiasny, “Le Prophète Élie dans le Judaïsme,” in Élie le Prophète, Études Carmélitaines, Vol. 2 (1956):199–255.

For Islamic traditions, see “Ilyas” and “al-Khadir” in Encyclopaedia of Islam.

R. J. ZVI WERBLOWSKY

ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF

For members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the spirit of Elijah is the spirit of family kinship and unity. It is the spirit that motivates the concern to search out ancestral family members through FAMILY HISTORY; and, on their behalf, to perform proxy baptisms, temple ENDOWMENTS, AND SEALING ordinances (HC 6:252). This is seen as fulfillment of the prophecy of Malachi that in the last days Elijah “will turn the heart [in Hebrew, the innermost part, as the soul, the affections] of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers” (Mal. 4:5–6).

The appearance of Elijah to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE in 1836 inaugurated anew this spirit (D&C 110:13). The spirit of Elijah is active in the impetus anyone feels toward finding and cherishing family members and family ties past and present. In the global sense, the spirit of Elijah is the spirit of love that may eventually overcome all human family estrangements. Then the priesthood power can bind generations together in eternal family relationships and “seal the children to the fathers and fathers to the children” within the gospel of Jesus Christ (WJS, p. 329).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Smith, Joseph Fielding. “Elijah the Prophet and His Mission.” Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine 12 (Jan. 1921): 1–20.

MARY FINLAYSON

ELOHIM

Elohim (God; gods; Heavenly Father) is the plural form of the singular noun 'eloah (compare Arabic Allah) in the Hebrew Bible, where it is used 2,570 times as compared to 57 times for its singular. But as one commentator has noted, why this “plural form for ‘God’ is used has not yet been explained satisfactorily” (Botterweck, Vol. 1, p. 272).

SINGULAR USAGE. Elohim appears in the Hebrew Bible as a common noun identifying Israel’s God: “In the beginning God ['elohim] created [singular verb] the heaven and the earth” (Gen. 1:1). It was also frequently used interchangeably with Jehovah, the proper name for Israel’s God: “And Jacob said, O God ['elohim] of my father Abraham, . . . the LORD [Jehovah] which saidst unto me, Return unto thy country” (Gen. 32:9; see also JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST).

Latter-day Saints use the name Elohim in a more restrictive sense as a proper name-title identifying the Father in Heaven (see GOD THE FATHER). The First Presidency of the Church has written, “God the Eternal Father, whom we designate by the exalted name-title ‘Elohim,’ is the literal Parent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and of the spirits of the human race” (MFP 5:26; see also Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency, “The Father and the Son,” appendices, Vol. 4).

PLURAL USAGE. Ancient Israelites used 'elohim also as a proper plural form to refer to gods of nations other than Israel. At such times, the accompanying verbs and adjectives used were also plural. “Thou shalt have no other gods before me” (Ex. 20:3; here “other” is a plural adjective).

Occasionally, Latter-day Saints use Elohim in its plural sense as a common noun to refer to the plurality of gods known to exist (TPJS, pp. 371–74). However, despite their belief that many lords and gods exist in addition to Elohim, Jehovah, and the HOLY GHOST (D&C 121:28–32), they follow the example of Jesus and Paul, who worshiped the Father in Heaven (Matt. 19:17; 1 Cor. 8:4–6).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Botterweck, G. Johannes, and Helmer Ringgren, eds. "Elohim." In Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament, rev. ed., Vol. 1, pp. 267–84. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1977.

KEITH H. MESERVY

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS

Latter-day Saints are taught to prepare for potential problems. Since the gospel is concerned with mankind's temporal as well as spiritual welfare, the Church considers any potential emergency that would adversely affect the quality of life or produce suffering to be a cause for advance preparation. This includes natural disasters, unemployment, disease, injuries, and other circumstances that could threaten life or personal well-being. The Church teaches its members to prepare for such emergencies.

The rationale for emergency preparedness is that by living providently and by acquiring in advance the skills and resources necessary to cope effectively with difficulties, Latter-day Saints can minimize or avoid the suffering that accompanies the unexpected. They can also have the sense of security and peace of mind (D&C 38:30) that are essential to spiritual development. They are also taught to work toward SELF-SUFFICIENCY—to provide adequately for themselves, to assist those in need, and to avoid unnecessary dependence upon the efforts or resources of others. They are told to put aside something when times are good so that they can care for themselves and others when times are bad. For Latter-day Saints, preparing for emergencies is more akin to saving for a "rainy day" than surviving "doomsday" (Kimball, p. 78).

For more than a hundred years, Church leaders have taught the members to store grain and other essentials that would sustain life in times of drought or famine (Essentials of Home Production and Storage, p. 17). The current guidelines for home storage are intended to apply internationally. They include having a supply of food, clothing, and, where possible, the fuel necessary to sustain life for one year (Benson, p. 33). Church guidance states, "We have never laid down an exact formula for what anybody should store. Perhaps if we think not in terms of a year's supply of what we ordinarily would use, and think more in terms of what it would take to keep us alive in case we didn't have anything else to eat, that last would be very easy to put in storage for a year" (Essentials, p. 6).

This LDS farm wife was photographed with her home-bottled produce (1940) as part of a U.S. Farm Security Administration project, which sent three photographers to rural Utah during 1936–1941. Many Latter-day Saints continue the tradition of canning home-grown food, following Church counsel to be prepared for all kinds of emergencies. Photographer: Russell Lee. Courtesy of the Library of Congress (37282-1D).

Home gardens, canning, and sewing have long been encouraged among the women by the RELIEF SOCIETY through homemaking lessons and workdays. Latter-day Saints are counseled to seek education and training opportunities that prepare them to adapt to changes in the working world, to avoid personal indebtedness, to maintain good health by eating and exercising properly, to learn first aid, and to know how to protect their lives and possessions against fire, flood, and theft. They are counseled to obtain life, medical, and property insurance where it is available. They are also urged to avoid panic buying, purchasing emergency resources on credit, pursuing fads, and giving official endorsement to specific brands, suppliers, or techniques.

Institutionally, the Church practices the principles of preparedness. Under the aegis of its

and gods exist in addition to Elohim, Jehovah, and the HOLY GHOST (D&C 121:28–32), they follow the example of Jesus and Paul, who worshiped the Father in Heaven (Matt. 19:17; 1 Cor. 8:4–6).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Botterweck, G. Johannes, and Helmer Ringgren, eds. "Elohim." In Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament, rev. ed., Vol. 1, pp. 267–84. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1977.

KEITH H. MESERVY

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS

Latter-day Saints are taught to prepare for potential problems. Since the gospel is concerned with mankind's temporal as well as spiritual welfare, the Church considers any potential emergency that would adversely affect the quality of life or produce suffering to be a cause for advance preparation. This includes natural disasters, unemployment, disease, injuries, and other circumstances that could threaten life or personal well-being. The Church teaches its members to prepare for such emergencies.

The rationale for emergency preparedness is that by living providently and by acquiring in advance the skills and resources necessary to cope effectively with difficulties, Latter-day Saints can minimize or avoid the suffering that accompanies the unexpected. They can also have the sense of security and peace of mind (D&C 38:30) that are essential to spiritual development. They are also taught to work toward SELF-SUFFICIENCY—to provide adequately for themselves, to assist those in need, and to avoid unnecessary dependence upon the efforts or resources of others. They are told to put aside something when times are good so that they can care for themselves and others when times are bad. For Latter-day Saints, preparing for emergencies is more akin to saving for a "rainy day" than surviving "doomsday" (Kimball, p. 78).

For more than a hundred years, Church leaders have taught the members to store grain and other essentials that would sustain life in times of drought or famine (Essentials of Home Production and Storage, p. 17). The current guidelines for home storage are intended to apply internationally. They include having a supply of food, clothing, and, where possible, the fuel necessary to sustain life for one year (Benson, p. 33). Church guidance states, "We have never laid down an exact formula for what anybody should store. Perhaps if we think not in terms of a year's supply of what we ordinarily would use, and think more in terms of what it would take to keep us alive in case we didn't have anything else to eat, that last would be very easy to put in storage for a year" (Essentials, p. 6).

This LDS farm wife was photographed with her home-bottled produce (1940) as part of a U.S. Farm Security Administration project, which sent three photographers to rural Utah during 1936–1941. Many Latter-day Saints continue the tradition of canning home-grown food, following Church counsel to be prepared for all kinds of emergencies. Photographer: Russell Lee. Courtesy of the Library of Congress (37282-1D).

Home gardens, canning, and sewing have long been encouraged among the women by the RELIEF SOCIETY through homemaking lessons and workdays. Latter-day Saints are counseled to seek education and training opportunities that prepare them to adapt to changes in the working world, to avoid personal indebtedness, to maintain good health by eating and exercising properly, to learn first aid, and to know how to protect their lives and possessions against fire, flood, and theft. They are counseled to obtain life, medical, and property insurance where it is available. They are also urged to avoid panic buying, purchasing emergency resources on credit, pursuing fads, and giving official endorsement to specific brands, suppliers, or techniques.

Institutionally, the Church practices the principles of preparedness. Under the aegis of its WELFARE SERVICES, the Church's WELFARE FARMS, canneries, and BISHOP'S STOREHOUSES grow, process, and distribute commodities for consumption by those in need in the Church. These facilities maintain approximately a year's supply of inventory, in both production supplies and finished goods. Church-owned grain reserves are stored to help provide needs from harvest to harvest, with a suitable margin for some who may come into need during more prolonged economic downturns. The Church does not attempt, however, to maintain emergency storage for its entire membership. Long-term security against catastrophic emergencies depends upon the faithful preparation of individual members and families throughout the world.

Consistent preparedness has enabled the Church to participate in humanitarian projects to relieve suffering resulting from such catastrophes as World War II, the rupture of the Teton Dam in Idaho in 1976, food shortages in Poland in 1982, flooding in Brazil in 1983, earthquakes in Mexico City in 1985, hurricanes in the Caribbean and South Carolina in 1989, and other natural and man-made disasters.

Ecclesiastical units of the Church (wards, stakes, regions, and areas) are directed to prepare and maintain a written emergency response plan. The scope and level of detail contained in the plans vary, depending upon the nature and severity of emergencies likely to occur in each area. Emergency response plans generally address leadership and communication issues, reporting procedures, the location and extent of resources available for emergency response efforts, guidelines for the use of Church buildings as shelters, and the names and addresses of emergency-response specialists.

The presiding officers of all Church units are encouraged to coordinate emergency planning and response efforts with appropriate community agencies. The importance of good citizenship by all Church members in times of need is axiomatic.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Prepare for the Days of Tribulation." Ensign 10 (Nov. 1980):32-34.

Essentials of Home Production and Storage. Salt Lake City, 1979.

Kimball, Spencer W. "Welfare Services: The Gospel in Action." Ensign 7 (Nov. 1977):76-79.

FRANK D. RICHARDSON

---

ENDLESS AND ETERNAL

The terms "endless" and "eternal" have at least two connotations each in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They are used both as adjectives and as nouns. The adjectival forms, fitting the more traditional viewpoint, denote a concept of time without beginning or end. In a second, less familiar usage, the phrase "endless and eternal" functions as a noun, another name for God (Moses 1:3; 7:35)—in the manner of "Alpha and Omega," or "the Beginning and the End."

In a revelation dated March 1830 (now D&C 19), the Prophet Joseph SMITH learned that phrases such as "endless punishment" and "eternal life" have qualitative as well as quantitative implications. The word "endless," for example, has sometimes been employed by God for greater impact "that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men" (D&C 19:7). Consequently, the term "endless punishment" may or may not imply a duration of time—that there will be no end to such punishment—but it clearly does imply that the punishment (or blessing) is associated with the Eternal One. "Eternal punishment is God's punishment. Endless punishment is God's punishment" (D&C 19:11-12). In like manner, the concept of eternal life referred to in scripture (e.g., John 17:3) implies more than life lasting forever; it also connotes a quality of life like that of God, as well as life with God (DS 2:8, 228).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Doxey, Roy W., comp. Latter-day Prophets and the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, pp. 204-208. Salt Lake City, 1963.

Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, p. 142. Salt Lake City, 1978.

ARTHUR R. BASSETT

---

ENDOWMENT

An endowment generally is a gift, but in a specialized sense it is a course of instruction, ORDINANCES, and COVENANTS given only in dedicated TEMPLES of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The words "to endow" (from the Greek enduein), as used in the New Testament, mean to dress, clothe, put on garments, put on attributes, or receive virtue. Christ instructed his apostles to tarry at Jerusalem "until ye be endued with power

WELFARE SERVICES, the Church's WELFARE FARMS, canneries, and BISHOP'S STOREHOUSES grow, process, and distribute commodities for consumption by those in need in the Church. These facilities maintain approximately a year's supply of inventory, in both production supplies and finished goods. Church-owned grain reserves are stored to help provide needs from harvest to harvest, with a suitable margin for some who may come into need during more prolonged economic downturns. The Church does not attempt, however, to maintain emergency storage for its entire membership. Long-term security against catastrophic emergencies depends upon the faithful preparation of individual members and families throughout the world.

Consistent preparedness has enabled the Church to participate in humanitarian projects to relieve suffering resulting from such catastrophes as World War II, the rupture of the Teton Dam in Idaho in 1976, food shortages in Poland in 1982, flooding in Brazil in 1983, earthquakes in Mexico City in 1985, hurricanes in the Caribbean and South Carolina in 1989, and other natural and man-made disasters.

Ecclesiastical units of the Church (wards, stakes, regions, and areas) are directed to prepare and maintain a written emergency response plan. The scope and level of detail contained in the plans vary, depending upon the nature and severity of emergencies likely to occur in each area. Emergency response plans generally address leadership and communication issues, reporting procedures, the location and extent of resources available for emergency response efforts, guidelines for the use of Church buildings as shelters, and the names and addresses of emergency-response specialists.

The presiding officers of all Church units are encouraged to coordinate emergency planning and response efforts with appropriate community agencies. The importance of good citizenship by all Church members in times of need is axiomatic.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Prepare for the Days of Tribulation." Ensign 10 (Nov. 1980):32-34.

Essentials of Home Production and Storage. Salt Lake City, 1979.

Kimball, Spencer W. "Welfare Services: The Gospel in Action." Ensign 7 (Nov. 1977):76-79.

FRANK D. RICHARDSON

---

ENDLESS AND ETERNAL

The terms "endless" and "eternal" have at least two connotations each in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They are used both as adjectives and as nouns. The adjectival forms, fitting the more traditional viewpoint, denote a concept of time without beginning or end. In a second, less familiar usage, the phrase "endless and eternal" functions as a noun, another name for God (Moses 1:3; 7:35)—in the manner of "Alpha and Omega," or "the Beginning and the End."

In a revelation dated March 1830 (now D&C 19), the Prophet Joseph SMITH learned that phrases such as "endless punishment" and "eternal life" have qualitative as well as quantitative implications. The word "endless," for example, has sometimes been employed by God for greater impact "that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men" (D&C 19:7). Consequently, the term "endless punishment" may or may not imply a duration of time—that there will be no end to such punishment—but it clearly does imply that the punishment (or blessing) is associated with the Eternal One. "Eternal punishment is God's punishment. Endless punishment is God's punishment" (D&C 19:11-12). In like manner, the concept of eternal life referred to in scripture (e.g., John 17:3) implies more than life lasting forever; it also connotes a quality of life like that of God, as well as life with God (DS 2:8, 228).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Doxey, Roy W., comp. Latter-day Prophets and the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, pp. 204-208. Salt Lake City, 1963.

Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, p. 142. Salt Lake City, 1978.

ARTHUR R. BASSETT

---

ENDOWMENT

An endowment generally is a gift, but in a specialized sense it is a course of instruction, ORDINANCES, and COVENANTS given only in dedicated TEMPLES of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The words "to endow" (from the Greek enduein), as used in the New Testament, mean to dress, clothe, put on garments, put on attributes, or receive virtue. Christ instructed his apostles to tarry at Jerusalem "until ye be endued with power

WELFARE SERVICES, the Church's WELFARE FARMS, canneries, and BISHOP'S STOREHOUSES grow, process, and distribute commodities for consumption by those in need in the Church. These facilities maintain approximately a year's supply of inventory, in both production supplies and finished goods. Church-owned grain reserves are stored to help provide needs from harvest to harvest, with a suitable margin for some who may come into need during more prolonged economic downturns. The Church does not attempt, however, to maintain emergency storage for its entire membership. Long-term security against catastrophic emergencies depends upon the faithful preparation of individual members and families throughout the world.

Consistent preparedness has enabled the Church to participate in humanitarian projects to relieve suffering resulting from such catastrophes as World War II, the rupture of the Teton Dam in Idaho in 1976, food shortages in Poland in 1982, flooding in Brazil in 1983, earthquakes in Mexico City in 1985, hurricanes in the Caribbean and South Carolina in 1989, and other natural and man-made disasters.

Ecclesiastical units of the Church (wards, stakes, regions, and areas) are directed to prepare and maintain a written emergency response plan. The scope and level of detail contained in the plans vary, depending upon the nature and severity of emergencies likely to occur in each area. Emergency response plans generally address leadership and communication issues, reporting procedures, the location and extent of resources available for emergency response efforts, guidelines for the use of Church buildings as shelters, and the names and addresses of emergency-response specialists.

The presiding officers of all Church units are encouraged to coordinate emergency planning and response efforts with appropriate community agencies. The importance of good citizenship by all Church members in times of need is axiomatic.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Prepare for the Days of Tribulation." Ensign 10 (Nov. 1980):32-34.

Essentials of Home Production and Storage. Salt Lake City, 1979.

Kimball, Spencer W. "Welfare Services: The Gospel in Action." Ensign 7 (Nov. 1977):76-79.

FRANK D. RICHARDSON

---

ENDLESS AND ETERNAL

The terms "endless" and "eternal" have at least two connotations each in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They are used both as adjectives and as nouns. The adjectival forms, fitting the more traditional viewpoint, denote a concept of time without beginning or end. In a second, less familiar usage, the phrase "endless and eternal" functions as a noun, another name for God (Moses 1:3; 7:35)—in the manner of "Alpha and Omega," or "the Beginning and the End."

In a revelation dated March 1830 (now D&C 19), the Prophet Joseph SMITH learned that phrases such as "endless punishment" and "eternal life" have qualitative as well as quantitative implications. The word "endless," for example, has sometimes been employed by God for greater impact "that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men" (D&C 19:7). Consequently, the term "endless punishment" may or may not imply a duration of time—that there will be no end to such punishment—but it clearly does imply that the punishment (or blessing) is associated with the Eternal One. "Eternal punishment is God's punishment. Endless punishment is God's punishment" (D&C 19:11-12). In like manner, the concept of eternal life referred to in scripture (e.g., John 17:3) implies more than life lasting forever; it also connotes a quality of life like that of God, as well as life with God (DS 2:8, 228).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Doxey, Roy W., comp. Latter-day Prophets and the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, pp. 204-208. Salt Lake City, 1963.

Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Doctrine and Covenants, Vol. 1, p. 142. Salt Lake City, 1978.

ARTHUR R. BASSETT

---

ENDOWMENT

An endowment generally is a gift, but in a specialized sense it is a course of instruction, ORDINANCES, and COVENANTS given only in dedicated TEMPLES of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The words "to endow" (from the Greek enduein), as used in the New Testament, mean to dress, clothe, put on garments, put on attributes, or receive virtue. Christ instructed his apostles to tarry at Jerusalem "until ye be endued with power from on high" (Luke 24:49), a promise fulfilled, at least in part, on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2). In modern times, a similar revelation was given: "I gave unto you a commandment that you should build a house, in the which house I design to endow those whom I have chosen with power on high; for this is the promise of the Father unto you; therefore I command you to tarry, even as mine apostles at Jerusalem" (D&C 95:8–9).

Though there had been preliminary and preparatory spiritual outpourings upon Latter-day Saints in Ohio and Missouri, the endowment in its full sense was not received until the Nauvoo Temple era. As he introduced temple ordinances in 1842 at Nauvoo, the Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that these were "of things spiritual, and to be received only by the spiritual minded" (TPJS, p. 237). The endowment was necessary, he said, to organize the Church fully, that the Saints might be organized according to the laws of God, and, as the dedicatory prayer of the Kirtland Temple petitioned, that they would "be prepared to obtain every needful thing" (D&C 109:15). The endowment was designed to give "a comprehensive view of our condition and true relation to God" (TPJS, p. 324), "to prepare the disciples for their missions in the world" (p. 274), to prevent being "overcome by . . . evils" (p. 259), to enable them to "secure the fulness of those blessings which have been prepared for the Church of the Firstborn" (p. 237).

The endowment of "power from on high" in modern temples has four main aspects. First is the preparatory ordinance, a ceremonial WASHING AND ANOINTING, after which the temple patron dons the sacred clothing of the temple.

Second is a course of instruction by lectures and representations. These include a recital of the most prominent events of the Creation, a figurative depiction of the advent of Adam and Eve and of every man and every woman, the entry of Adam and Eve into the GARDEN OF EDEN, the consequent expulsion from the garden, their condition in the world, and their receiving of the PLAN OF SALVATION leading to the return to the presence of God (Talmage, pp. 83–84). The endowment instructions utilize every human faculty so that the meaning of the gospel may be clarified through art, drama, and symbols. All participants wear white temple robes symbolizing purity and the equality of all persons before God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ. The temple becomes a house of revelation whereby one is instructed more perfectly "in theory, in principle, and in doctrine" (D&C 97:14). "This completeness of survey and expounding of the gospel plan makes temple worship one of the most effective methods of refreshing the memory concerning the entire structure of the gospel" (Widtsoe, 1986, p. 5).

Third is making covenants. The temple endowment is seen as the unfolding or culmination of the covenants made at BAPTISM. Temple covenants give "tests by which one's willingness and fitness for righteousness may be known" (Widtsoe, p. 335). They include the "covenant and promise to observe the law of strict virtue and chastity, to be charitable, benevolent, tolerant and pure; to devote both talent and material means to the spread of truth and the uplifting of the [human] race; to maintain devotion to the cause of truth; and to seek in every way to contribute to the great preparation that the earth may be made ready to receive . . . Jesus Christ" (Talmage, p. 84). One also promises to keep these covenants sacred and to "trifle not with sacred things" (D&C 6:12).

Fourth is a sense of divine presence. In the dedicatory prayer of the temple at Kirtland, Ohio, the Prophet Joseph Smith pleaded "that all people who shall enter upon the threshold of the Lord's house may feel thy power, and feel constrained to acknowledge that thou hast sanctified it, and that it is thy house, a place of thy holiness" (D&C 109:13). Of temples built by sacrifice to the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, dedicated by his authority, and revered in his Spirit, the promise is given, "My name shall be here; and I will manifest myself to my people in mercy in this holy house" (D&C 110:8). In the temples there is an "aura of deity" manifest to the worthy (Kimball, pp. 534–35). Through the temple endowment, one may seek "a fulness of the Holy Ghost" (D&C 109:15). Temple ordinances are seen as a means for receiving inspiration and instruction through the Holy Spirit, and for preparing to return to the presence of God.

In Nauvoo, the Prophet Joseph taught for the first time that it is the privilege of Latter-day Saints to act as agents in behalf of their kindred dead. After receiving their own temple endowment, Latter-day Saints return to the temple frequently to participate in the endowment ceremony as proxies for, and in behalf of, deceased persons. Consistent with the law of agency, it is believed that those so served have complete freedom in the spirit world to accept or reject the spiritual blessing thus proffered them (HC 5:350).

[See also Baptism for the Dead; Salvation of the Dead; Temple Ordinances.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- . Temple Worship. Salt Lake City, 1986.

ALMA P. BURTON

ENDOWMENT HOUSES

An endowment house is a building or place where certain temple ordinances may be administered, outside of the temple itself. MOSES erected a tabernacle in the wilderness as a “temporary temple”; by analogy, so did the Prophet Joseph SMITH. Before the NAUVOO TEMPLE was completed, the large upper room of Joseph Smith’s red-brick store building in NAUVOO, Illinois, was used to confer the first TEMPLE ORDINANCES on a few leaders of the Church on May 4, 1842, and then on their wives. These ordinances, called ENDOWMENTS, consisted of a course of instruction and rites that included prayers, washings, anointings, and the making of COVENANTS with the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Endowment House, c. 1888, in the northwest corner of Temple Square, Salt Lake City. Ordinances for the living, but not for the dead, were performed in this building until 1889 when it was torn down. Photographer: C. R. Savage.

The Latter-day Saints occasionally used a mountaintop as their temporary temple, and President Brigham YOUNG dedicated Ensign Peak, a hill just north of Salt Lake City, Utah, as a “natural temple.” Though Brigham Young designated a temple site in Salt Lake Valley on July 28, 1847, just four days after his arrival, the temple took forty years to build. In the meantime, the upper floor of the Council House, Salt Lake City’s first public building, served 2,222 members of the Church as their endowment house between February 21, 1851, and May 5, 1855.

A more permanent endowment house, designed by Truman O. Angell, Church architect, was soon built on the northwest corner of TEMPLE SQUARE. Brigham Young named it “The House of the Lord.” It was dedicated on May 5, 1855, by Heber C. Kimball. The main structure was a two-story building 34 feet by 44 feet, with small one-story extensions on both ends. The first floor had a room for WASHING AND ANOINTING, and also “garden,” “world,” and “terrestrial” rooms. The upper floor was the “celestial room,” with an adjacent SEALING room.

On the average, 25 to 30 endowments were given daily, for a total of 54,170 in the thirty-four years it was used. And an average of 2,500 marriages were also performed annually. In addition, the endowment house served as a place for special PRAYER CIRCLES and the SETTING APART and instruction of newly called MISSIONARIES.

As the SALT LAKE TEMPLE neared completion, the endowment house was torn down in November 1889. The Salt Lake Temple was dedicated April 6, 1893. A long-anticipated holy place for temple ordinances was then permanently established in Salt Lake City.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowan, Richard O. Temples to Dot the Earth. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Land, A. William. “History of the Salt Lake Endowment House.” IE 39 (Apr. 1936):213.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

ENDURING TO THE END

Enduring to the end, or remaining faithful to the laws and ORDINANCES of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST throughout life, is a fundamental require-spirit world to accept or reject the spiritual blessing thus proffered them (HC 5:350).

[See also Baptism for the Dead; Salvation of the Dead; Temple Ordinances.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- . Temple Worship. Salt Lake City, 1986.

ALMA P. BURTON

ENDOWMENT HOUSES

An endowment house is a building or place where certain temple ordinances may be administered, outside of the temple itself. MOSES erected a tabernacle in the wilderness as a “temporary temple”; by analogy, so did the Prophet Joseph SMITH. Before the NAUVOO TEMPLE was completed, the large upper room of Joseph Smith’s red-brick store building in NAUVOO, Illinois, was used to confer the first TEMPLE ORDINANCES on a few leaders of the Church on May 4, 1842, and then on their wives. These ordinances, called ENDOWMENTS, consisted of a course of instruction and rites that included prayers, washings, anointings, and the making of COVENANTS with the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Endowment House, c. 1888, in the northwest corner of Temple Square, Salt Lake City. Ordinances for the living, but not for the dead, were performed in this building until 1889 when it was torn down. Photographer: C. R. Savage.

The Latter-day Saints occasionally used a mountaintop as their temporary temple, and President Brigham YOUNG dedicated Ensign Peak, a hill just north of Salt Lake City, Utah, as a “natural temple.” Though Brigham Young designated a temple site in Salt Lake Valley on July 28, 1847, just four days after his arrival, the temple took forty years to build. In the meantime, the upper floor of the Council House, Salt Lake City’s first public building, served 2,222 members of the Church as their endowment house between February 21, 1851, and May 5, 1855.

A more permanent endowment house, designed by Truman O. Angell, Church architect, was soon built on the northwest corner of TEMPLE SQUARE. Brigham Young named it “The House of the Lord.” It was dedicated on May 5, 1855, by Heber C. Kimball. The main structure was a two-story building 34 feet by 44 feet, with small one-story extensions on both ends. The first floor had a room for WASHING AND ANOINTING, and also “garden,” “world,” and “terrestrial” rooms. The upper floor was the “celestial room,” with an adjacent SEALING room.

On the average, 25 to 30 endowments were given daily, for a total of 54,170 in the thirty-four years it was used. And an average of 2,500 marriages were also performed annually. In addition, the endowment house served as a place for special PRAYER CIRCLES and the SETTING APART and instruction of newly called MISSIONARIES.

As the SALT LAKE TEMPLE neared completion, the endowment house was torn down in November 1889. The Salt Lake Temple was dedicated April 6, 1893. A long-anticipated holy place for temple ordinances was then permanently established in Salt Lake City.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowan, Richard O. Temples to Dot the Earth. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Land, A. William. “History of the Salt Lake Endowment House.” IE 39 (Apr. 1936):213.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

ENDURING TO THE END

Enduring to the end, or remaining faithful to the laws and ORDINANCES of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST throughout life, is a fundamental require-spirit world to accept or reject the spiritual blessing thus proffered them (HC 5:350).

[See also Baptism for the Dead; Salvation of the Dead; Temple Ordinances.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Talmage, James E. House of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- . Temple Worship. Salt Lake City, 1986.

ALMA P. BURTON

ENDOWMENT HOUSES

An endowment house is a building or place where certain temple ordinances may be administered, outside of the temple itself. MOSES erected a tabernacle in the wilderness as a “temporary temple”; by analogy, so did the Prophet Joseph SMITH. Before the NAUVOO TEMPLE was completed, the large upper room of Joseph Smith’s red-brick store building in NAUVOO, Illinois, was used to confer the first TEMPLE ORDINANCES on a few leaders of the Church on May 4, 1842, and then on their wives. These ordinances, called ENDOWMENTS, consisted of a course of instruction and rites that included prayers, washings, anointings, and the making of COVENANTS with the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Endowment House, c. 1888, in the northwest corner of Temple Square, Salt Lake City. Ordinances for the living, but not for the dead, were performed in this building until 1889 when it was torn down. Photographer: C. R. Savage.

The Latter-day Saints occasionally used a mountaintop as their temporary temple, and President Brigham YOUNG dedicated Ensign Peak, a hill just north of Salt Lake City, Utah, as a “natural temple.” Though Brigham Young designated a temple site in Salt Lake Valley on July 28, 1847, just four days after his arrival, the temple took forty years to build. In the meantime, the upper floor of the Council House, Salt Lake City’s first public building, served 2,222 members of the Church as their endowment house between February 21, 1851, and May 5, 1855.

A more permanent endowment house, designed by Truman O. Angell, Church architect, was soon built on the northwest corner of TEMPLE SQUARE. Brigham Young named it “The House of the Lord.” It was dedicated on May 5, 1855, by Heber C. Kimball. The main structure was a two-story building 34 feet by 44 feet, with small one-story extensions on both ends. The first floor had a room for WASHING AND ANOINTING, and also “garden,” “world,” and “terrestrial” rooms. The upper floor was the “celestial room,” with an adjacent SEALING room.

On the average, 25 to 30 endowments were given daily, for a total of 54,170 in the thirty-four years it was used. And an average of 2,500 marriages were also performed annually. In addition, the endowment house served as a place for special PRAYER CIRCLES and the SETTING APART and instruction of newly called MISSIONARIES.

As the SALT LAKE TEMPLE neared completion, the endowment house was torn down in November 1889. The Salt Lake Temple was dedicated April 6, 1893. A long-anticipated holy place for temple ordinances was then permanently established in Salt Lake City.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowan, Richard O. Temples to Dot the Earth. Salt Lake City, 1989.
- Land, A. William. “History of the Salt Lake Endowment House.” IE 39 (Apr. 1936):213.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

ENDURING TO THE END

Enduring to the end, or remaining faithful to the laws and ORDINANCES of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST throughout life, is a fundamental requirement for SALVATION in the KINGDOM OF GOD. This belief distinguishes Latter-day Saints from many other Christian denominations, which teach that salvation is given to all who simply believe and confess that Jesus is the Christ. Latter-day Saints believe that to be saved a person must have faith in Jesus Christ, demonstrate REPENTANCE of sins, submit to BAPTISM by immersion, and receive the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS by those holding the true PRIESTHOOD authority, and then remain faithful to all COVENANTS, continue in RIGHTEOUSNESS, and endure faithfully to the end of mortal life (Heb. 3:6–14; 6:4–15; Mark 13:13). This enduring faithfulness makes it possible for a person to receive fully the GRACE of Christ. The Doctrine and Covenants states, “If you keep my commandments and endure to the end you shall have eternal life, which gift is the greatest of all the gifts of God” (D&C 14:7).

The Book of Mormon prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> taught the principle of enduring to the end as a requirement of salvation: “After ye have repented of your sins, and witnessed unto the Father that ye are willing to keep my commandments, by the baptism of water, and have received the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, . . . and after this should deny me, it would have been better for you not to have known me. . . . He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved” (2 Ne. 31:14–15; cf. Heb. 6:4–6). As Nephi explains, enduring to the end involves having faith, hope, and charity; faithfully following the example of Jesus Christ; and always abounding in good works (cf. Alma 7:23–24): “Unless a man shall endure to the end, in following the example of the Son of the living God, he cannot be saved. . . . Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, . . . ye shall have eternal life” (2 Ne. 31:16, 20).

Enduring to the end includes being willing and prepared to endure faithfully the trials of life, as did Job, Stephen (Acts 7), PAUL (2 Tim. 4:5–7), PETER (1 Pet. 1–4), and MORONI<sup>2</sup> (Moroni 1:1–3). The Lord spoke this reassurance to the Prophet Joseph SMITH after several months of incarceration in LIBERTY JAIL: “My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment; And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over all thy foes” (D&C 121:7–8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashton, Marvin J. “If Thou Endure It Well.” Ensign 14 (Nov. 1984):20–22.
Maxwell, Neal A. “Endure It Well.” Ensign 20 (May 1990):33–35.

JOHN M. MADSEN

ENOCII

[In three parts, this entry discusses Enoch, his visions, prophetic leadership, and significance.]

LDS SOURCES

Enoch holds a prominent place in Latter-day Saint scripture and tradition as a PROPHET, SEER, and builder of ZION. The Bible states that “Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him” (Gen. 5:21–24). In revelations to Joseph SMITH much additional information is given about Enoch, his knowledge of the sanctifying atonement of Christ, the visions he saw of the future of the world, the messages he proclaimed, the wickedness he opposed, the miracles he worked, the priesthood ordinances he performed, and the promises he received from the premortal Lord Jesus Christ (see BOOK OF MOSES). Enoch and his city of Zion are powerful symbols among the Latter-day Saints, affirming that supreme RIGHTEOUSNESS can be attained on earth as it is in heaven.

MOSES 6–7 IN THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE. Enoch was the seventh in a chain of patriarchs extending back to ADAM (Moses 6:10–22). Adam’s grandson Enos had fled with “the residue of the people of God” from a wicked land called Shulon into “a land of promise,” which Enos named after his son, Cainan (6:17). The text implies that Enoch was born in this “land of righteousness” (6:41). Following the example of Adam and Eve, Enoch’s father taught him “in all the ways of God” (6:21, 41; cf. 5:12).

When Enoch was said to be “but a lad” (although he was possibly over 65—Moses 6:25, 31), he was called to preach repentance to the wicked: “The Spirit of God descended out of heaven, and abode upon him” (6:26–30). Like other prophets, Enoch felt profoundly inadequate to the task: “All the people hate me; for I am slow of speech” (6:31–34; cf. 1:25–26; Ex. 4:10–12; Jer. 1:4–10; Isa. 6:1–10). The Lord instructed Enoch to anoint his eyes with clay and wash them, whereupon he saw a vi-

ment for SALVATION in the KINGDOM OF GOD. This belief distinguishes Latter-day Saints from many other Christian denominations, which teach that salvation is given to all who simply believe and confess that Jesus is the Christ. Latter-day Saints believe that to be saved a person must have faith in Jesus Christ, demonstrate REPENTANCE of sins, submit to BAPTISM by immersion, and receive the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST by the LAYING-ON OF HANDS by those holding the true PRIESTHOOD authority, and then remain faithful to all COVENANTS, continue in RIGHTEOUSNESS, and endure faithfully to the end of mortal life (Heb. 3:6–14; 6:4–15; Mark 13:13). This enduring faithfulness makes it possible for a person to receive fully the GRACE of Christ. The Doctrine and Covenants states, “If you keep my commandments and endure to the end you shall have eternal life, which gift is the greatest of all the gifts of God” (D&C 14:7).

The Book of Mormon prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> taught the principle of enduring to the end as a requirement of salvation: “After ye have repented of your sins, and witnessed unto the Father that ye are willing to keep my commandments, by the baptism of water, and have received the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, . . . and after this should deny me, it would have been better for you not to have known me. . . . He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved” (2 Ne. 31:14–15; cf. Heb. 6:4–6). As Nephi explains, enduring to the end involves having faith, hope, and charity; faithfully following the example of Jesus Christ; and always abounding in good works (cf. Alma 7:23–24): “Unless a man shall endure to the end, in following the example of the Son of the living God, he cannot be saved. . . . Wherefore, ye must press forward with a steadfastness in Christ, having a perfect brightness of hope, and a love of God and of all men. Wherefore, if ye shall press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, . . . ye shall have eternal life” (2 Ne. 31:16, 20).

Enduring to the end includes being willing and prepared to endure faithfully the trials of life, as did Job, Stephen (Acts 7), PAUL (2 Tim. 4:5–7), PETER (1 Pet. 1–4), and MORONI<sup>2</sup> (Moroni 1:1–3). The Lord spoke this reassurance to the Prophet Joseph SMITH after several months of incarceration in LIBERTY JAIL: “My son, peace be unto thy soul; thine adversity and thine afflictions shall be but a small moment; And then, if thou endure it well, God shall exalt thee on high; thou shalt triumph over all thy foes” (D&C 121:7–8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashton, Marvin J. “If Thou Endure It Well.” Ensign 14 (Nov. 1984):20–22.
Maxwell, Neal A. “Endure It Well.” Ensign 20 (May 1990):33–35.

JOHN M. MADSEN

ENOCII

[In three parts, this entry discusses Enoch, his visions, prophetic leadership, and significance.]

LDS SOURCES

Enoch holds a prominent place in Latter-day Saint scripture and tradition as a PROPHET, SEER, and builder of ZION. The Bible states that “Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him” (Gen. 5:21–24). In revelations to Joseph SMITH much additional information is given about Enoch, his knowledge of the sanctifying atonement of Christ, the visions he saw of the future of the world, the messages he proclaimed, the wickedness he opposed, the miracles he worked, the priesthood ordinances he performed, and the promises he received from the premortal Lord Jesus Christ (see BOOK OF MOSES). Enoch and his city of Zion are powerful symbols among the Latter-day Saints, affirming that supreme RIGHTEOUSNESS can be attained on earth as it is in heaven.

MOSES 6–7 IN THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE. Enoch was the seventh in a chain of patriarchs extending back to ADAM (Moses 6:10–22). Adam’s grandson Enos had fled with “the residue of the people of God” from a wicked land called Shulon into “a land of promise,” which Enos named after his son, Cainan (6:17). The text implies that Enoch was born in this “land of righteousness” (6:41). Following the example of Adam and Eve, Enoch’s father taught him “in all the ways of God” (6:21, 41; cf. 5:12).

When Enoch was said to be “but a lad” (although he was possibly over 65—Moses 6:25, 31), he was called to preach repentance to the wicked: “The Spirit of God descended out of heaven, and abode upon him” (6:26–30). Like other prophets, Enoch felt profoundly inadequate to the task: “All the people hate me; for I am slow of speech” (6:31–34; cf. 1:25–26; Ex. 4:10–12; Jer. 1:4–10; Isa. 6:1–10). The Lord instructed Enoch to anoint his eyes with clay and wash them, whereupon he saw a vision of “the spirits that God had created; and . . . things which were not visible to the natural eye” (Moses 6:35–36). The word “seer” thus applies to him.

Enoch then went forth preaching in the hills and high places, but the people took offense and considered him “a wild man” (6:37–38). One man named Mahijah was bold enough to ask Enoch who he was and whence he had come. Enoch then explained his vision of heaven and his understanding of the fall of Adam; he taught how humans after the Fall had become carnal and devilish by worshiping Satan, but how according to the plan of salvation they may repent and become “sons of God” through the blood of Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten Son of the Man of Holiness (6:42–7:1).

As Enoch continued his ministry, he told of another vision he had received in which he stood upon a mountain and saw the Lord face to face. The Lord showed Enoch the judgments of war and the barrenness that would come upon the wicked and commanded Enoch again to preach repentance and baptism in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost (7:2–11).

Enoch brought a large body of converts to the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST, but his success did not come without fierce opposition (7:12–13). The enemies of the righteous mobilized against them. The scriptural account describes miracles of extraordinary power. By Enoch’s words, “the earth trembled, and the mountains fled, . . . and rivers of water were turned out of their course” (7:13). Stricken by fear, Enoch’s enemies and the giants of the land stood far off, and “the Lord came and dwelt with his people, and they dwelt in righteousness” (7:17).

Under Enoch’s inspired leadership, the faithful achieved an extraordinary unity of heart and mind. Loving obedience to the laws of Christ was maintained; a state of economic equality was realized, and “there was no poor among them” (7:18). The spiritual unity of Enoch’s people took on physical dimensions through the construction of a city “that was called the City of Holiness, even Zion” (7:19). Their lives were based on “the order of him who was without beginning of days or end of years [Jesus Christ]” (6:67), and “after the order of the covenant which God made with Enoch” (JST Gen. 14:27). This unique community matured over a period of 365 years, after which it was received up into heaven. Fulfilling his covenant to preserve the lineage of Enoch upon the earth, the Lord left behind Enoch’s son, Methuselah, and grandson, Lamech (Moses 8:2, 5). Lamech’s son NOAH was born four years after the city of Enoch was taken into heaven.

In a third vision, Enoch beheld “all the inhabitants of the earth” (7:21). In this panoramic revelation, he witnessed the wickedness and violence in the days of Noah; he saw Satan laughing, with a great chain in his hand, and the Lord weeping over his creations, for mankind had rejected God and had become “without affection” (7:33). Enoch saw the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ (7:47–48) and received a promise that “a remnant of his seed should always be found among all nations” (7:52). Finally, he saw the joyous reunion of his city with a latter-day Zion built in anticipation of Jesus’ second coming (7:63–67).

According to the biblical account, Enoch lived 365 years (Gen. 5:23); according to the book of Moses, 430 years (8:1; i.e., 365 plus 65, which was Enoch’s age when he begat Methuselah and was ordained).

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS 76, 84, 107. Enoch’s rapid rise to spiritual maturity is indicated by the fact that he received the priesthood before his father and grandfather. The priesthood held by Enoch is described in several passages in the Doctrine and Covenants. He was ordained at age twenty-five under the hand of Adam. His priesthood was “after the holiest order of God,” holding “the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God” (D&C 84:15–19). The scriptures confirm that Enoch “saw the Lord, and he walked with him, and was before his face continually” (D&C 107:48–49). Indicative of Enoch’s eternal priesthood station, heirs of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM are described as “priests of the Most High, after the order of Melchizedek, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the Only Begotten Son” (D&C 76:57).

Enoch received two blessings from Adam: one when he was ordained to the priesthood, the other 240 years later at the council of ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN, which seems to be more of a public blessing (D&C 107:48, 53). All the patriarchs in Enoch’s ancestral line were present at this final reunion of Adam’s righteous posterity, and Adam prophesied the future of his descendants “unto the latest generation” (107:56). These prophecies were written in the BOOK OF ENOCH.

ENOCH AND THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS. Latter-day Saints believe that Enoch’s righteousness was grounded on the same gospel principles that apply in all dispensations and eternally. For this reason, Latter-day Saints feel a spiritual kinship with Enoch and his people: Enoch's Zion represents every spiritual ideal for which Latter-day Saints strive. Called to build a modern Zion, the prophet and seer Joseph Smith used the name Enoch as one of the code names for himself in early editions of the Doctrine and Covenants. An economic system designed to promote material and spiritual equality within the Church, the Order of Enoch (see UNITED ORDER), has been implemented at various times in Church history. Church members look toward the day when the righteous will build the counterpart of Enoch's City of Holiness, the New Jerusalem, in Jackson County, Missouri. Missionaries around the world preach repentance, for the earth is to be cleansed by fire, as it was with the flood that followed Enoch's ministry. Church members anticipate the return of Enoch's city from above to be reunited with the Zion beneath (Moses 7:58), when the earth will rest under the millennial reign of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Maxwell, Neal A. Of One Heart: The Glory of the City of Enoch. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- Millet, Robert L. "Enoch and His City (Moses 6, 7)." In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 2, pp. 131-44. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Nibley, Hugh W. Enoch the Prophet. In CWHN 2.
- Ricks, Stephen D. "The Narrative Call Pattern in the Prophetic Commission of Enoch (Moses 6)." BYU Studies 26 (Fall 1986):97-105.

RULON D. EAMES

ANCIENT SOURCES

According to Genesis 5:22-25, "Enoch walked with God after the birth of Methuselah three hundred years, and had other sons and daughters. Thus all the days of Enoch were three hundred and sixty-five years. Enoch walked with God; and he was not, for God took him" (RSV).

Enoch, the father of Methuselah and great-grandfather of Noah, was honored by Jews and Christians because of the following reasons: (1) Genesis 5 says that he lived 365 years, a number attractive to Jews who were arguing for cultic alignment with the solar calendar (1 Enoch). (2) He "walked with God" and therefore pleased God and was perfect (Wisdom of Solomon 4:13). (3) He did not die—"God took him"—and hence would return from heaven (1 Enoch 14:21-24) to bring to fruition God's promises for his people. (4) He was "seventh" (seven is a perfect number) after Adam (Gen. 5; 1 Enoch 93:3; Jude 14). Enoch is declared by "an angel" to be "the Son of man" (1 Enoch 71:14). He alone has seen everything (1 Enoch 19). He will reprimand the fallen angels (1 Enoch 14), reveal everything (1 Enoch 91), intercede for humans (1 Enoch 15:2), and bring eternal peace into the world that is to come, as indicated at creation, since righteousness never forsakes him (1 Enoch 71:14-17).

BOOKS OF ENOCH. It is clear that early Jews and Christians honored the books of Enoch. The most ancient of these are excerpted in what is now called 1 (Ethiopic) Enoch. In the estimation of most experts today, all the documents preserved in 1 Enoch are Jewish and antedate the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. In probable chronological order these books of Enoch are as follows: The Book of Astronomy (1 Enoch 72-82) describes the movement of the sun, the reception of its light by the moon (73:7, 78:10), and the divinely ordained solar calendar. The Book of the Watchers (1 Enoch 1-36) is a composite work consisting of the Parables of Enoch (1-5), the Watchers (6-16), and Enoch's journeys (17-19 and 20-36); the main purpose of this compilation is to explain that evil entered into this world because of the fall of angels (cf. Gen. 6). The Book of Dream Visions (1 Enoch 83-90) contains a Vision of the Deluge (83-84) and an Animal Apocalypse (85-90), which describes the history of the world from before the Flood until the appearance of "one great horn," who is probably Judas Maccabeus. The Epistle of Enoch (1 Enoch 91-105; 106-107 is probably from the lost book of Noah, and 108 is a later addition) is addressed against the affluent sinners (94:8-9; 95:3; 96:4-8; 97:8-10), contains an older review of history (the Apocalypse of Weeks, 1 Enoch 93:1-10, and 91:11-17, which is misplaced), and exhorts the righteous to continue in their hope (104) and to walk in the way of righteousness and avoid the way of wickedness. The Similitudes of Enoch (1 Enoch 36-71) is one of the most brilliant theological documents of Judaism before Jerusalem's destruction in 70 A.D.; it describes the future appearance of the Messiah, the Righteous One, the Elect One, and the Son of Man, and tends to equate them as one figure, who is eventually revealed to be Enoch. Related to the books of Enoch is the Book of the Giants, which is preserved in Qumranic fragments that date from the first century B.C.

2 Enoch is one of the most difficult Jewish writings to date and to understand because it is preserved only in medieval Slavonic manuscripts. It was beloved by the Bogomils, who were shaped by ancient Jewish sources but who also created or reshaped ancient documents. Many scholars trace 2 Enoch back to a Jew who lived before A.D. 100. After an introduction in which he informs his sons of his impending assumption, Enoch describes his ascent through the seven heavens (3–21). Then the Lord reveals secrets to Enoch (22–38), who admonishes his sons (39–66) and is translated into the highest heaven (67; chap. 68 is extant only in the long recension). The apocalypse concludes with a description of Melchizedek's miraculous birth from Sophanina, who has died. He is then taken into paradise by the archangel Michael and will return at the end of time to be the head of the priests (69–73).

3 Enoch in its present form is a medieval Jewish work; but it may go back to an earlier document and certainly preserves very ancient traditions. The forty-eight chapters of 3 Enoch contain cosmological information, especially regarding the heavenly world of God's throne and chariot. The archangel Metatron informs the seer Ishmael that he is Enoch, who has been transformed into an angel.

THE EXIT OF ENOCH. Despite the fact that the author of Jude (verse 9) quoted from 1 Enoch as prophecy and that the Ethiopian church has canonized the book and celebrated numerous other works that interpret it, the books of Enoch fell out of favor in mainstream Judaism and Christianity. With the compilation of the Mishnah by Rabbi Judah around A.D. 200 and the tendency to denigrate apocalypticism, Enoch fell out of favor. Hillel and his school were the norm for rabbis. With the closing of the Christian canon, as a result of the emergence of the Holy Roman Empire in the fourth century, the books of Enoch were branded as extracanonical, and the veneration once given to the wise scribe Enoch was transferred to, or reserved for, Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Black, M., with J. C. VanderKam. The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch: A New English Edition. Leiden, 1985.
 Charles, R. H. The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch. Oxford, 1912.
 Charlesworth, J. H. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. Garden City, N.Y., 1983, 1985. (Contains introductions, translations, and notes to 1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, and 3 Enoch).

Kaibb, M., with E. Ullendorff. The Ethiopic Book of Enoch: A New Edition in the Light of the Aramaic Dead Sea Fragments, 2 vols. Oxford, 1978.

Milik, J. T., with M. Black. The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4. Oxford, 1976.

VanderKam, J. C. Enoch and the Growth of an Apocalyptic Tradition. Washington, D.C., 1984.

JAMES H. CHARLESWORTH

BOOK OF ENOCH

The book of Enoch is one of the ancient writings that Latter-day Saints anticipate receiving sometime in the future (see SCRIPTURE: FORTHCOMING SCRIPTURE). This is not to be confused with the pseudepigraphic books of Enoch, which nevertheless have garnered the interest of some Latter-day Saints since at least 1840 (Pratt, p. 61). In Doctrine & Covenants 107:53–57, reference is made to a meeting of Adam's righteous posterity held at ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN three years before Adam's death. The influence of the Holy Spirit was manifested powerfully in prophecy as Adam blessed his posterity. While these verses give a précis of what happened, many more things were "written in the book of Enoch, and are to be testified of in due time" (D&C 107:57). Speaking of this book in December 1877, Elder Orson Pratt said, "When we get that, I think we shall know a great deal about the ante-diluvians of whom at present we know so little" (JD 19:218). An extract from the prophecy of Enoch was revealed and published in the BOOK OF MOSES (chaps. 6–7), the latter chapter being published in the The Evening and The Morning Star of August 1832 (HC 1:130–31).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pratt, Parley P. "The Apocryphal Book of Enoch." MS 1 (July 1840):61.

LEWIS R. CHURCH

---

ENOS

See: Book of Mormon: Overview

---

ENSIGN

Since 1971 the full title of the official monthly magazine for the English-speaking adult members of the Church is The Ensign of The Church of Jesus

2 Enoch is one of the most difficult Jewish writings to date and to understand because it is preserved only in medieval Slavonic manuscripts. It was beloved by the Bogomils, who were shaped by ancient Jewish sources but who also created or reshaped ancient documents. Many scholars trace 2 Enoch back to a Jew who lived before A.D. 100. After an introduction in which he informs his sons of his impending assumption, Enoch describes his ascent through the seven heavens (3–21). Then the Lord reveals secrets to Enoch (22–38), who admonishes his sons (39–66) and is translated into the highest heaven (67; chap. 68 is extant only in the long recension). The apocalypse concludes with a description of Melchizedek's miraculous birth from Sophanina, who has died. He is then taken into paradise by the archangel Michael and will return at the end of time to be the head of the priests (69–73).

3 Enoch in its present form is a medieval Jewish work; but it may go back to an earlier document and certainly preserves very ancient traditions. The forty-eight chapters of 3 Enoch contain cosmological information, especially regarding the heavenly world of God's throne and chariot. The archangel Metatron informs the seer Ishmael that he is Enoch, who has been transformed into an angel.

THE EXIT OF ENOCH. Despite the fact that the author of Jude (verse 9) quoted from 1 Enoch as prophecy and that the Ethiopian church has canonized the book and celebrated numerous other works that interpret it, the books of Enoch fell out of favor in mainstream Judaism and Christianity. With the compilation of the Mishnah by Rabbi Judah around A.D. 200 and the tendency to denigrate apocalypticism, Enoch fell out of favor. Hillel and his school were the norm for rabbis. With the closing of the Christian canon, as a result of the emergence of the Holy Roman Empire in the fourth century, the books of Enoch were branded as extracanonical, and the veneration once given to the wise scribe Enoch was transferred to, or reserved for, Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Black, M., with J. C. VanderKam. The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch: A New English Edition. Leiden, 1985.
- Charles, R. H. The Book of Enoch or 1 Enoch. Oxford, 1912.
- Charlesworth, J. H. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. Garden City, N.Y., 1983, 1985. (Contains introductions, translations, and notes to 1 Enoch, 2 Enoch, and 3 Enoch).

Kaibb, M., with E. Ullendorff. The Ethiopic Book of Enoch: A New Edition in the Light of the Aramaic Dead Sea Fragments, 2 vols. Oxford, 1978.

Milik, J. T., with M. Black. The Books of Enoch: Aramaic Fragments of Qumrân Cave 4. Oxford, 1976.

VanderKam, J. C. Enoch and the Growth of an Apocalyptic Tradition. Washington, D.C., 1984.

JAMES H. CHARLESWORTH

BOOK OF ENOCH

The book of Enoch is one of the ancient writings that Latter-day Saints anticipate receiving sometime in the future (see SCRIPTURE: FORTHCOMING SCRIPTURE). This is not to be confused with the pseudepigraphic books of Enoch, which nevertheless have garnered the interest of some Latter-day Saints since at least 1840 (Pratt, p. 61). In Doctrine & Covenants 107:53–57, reference is made to a meeting of Adam's righteous posterity held at ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN three years before Adam's death. The influence of the Holy Spirit was manifested powerfully in prophecy as Adam blessed his posterity. While these verses give a précis of what happened, many more things were "written in the book of Enoch, and are to be testified of in due time" (D&C 107:57). Speaking of this book in December 1877, Elder Orson Pratt said, "When we get that, I think we shall know a great deal about the ante-diluvians of whom at present we know so little" (JD 19:218). An extract from the prophecy of Enoch was revealed and published in the BOOK OF MOSES (chaps. 6–7), the latter chapter being published in the The Evening and The Morning Star of August 1832 (HC 1:130–31).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pratt, Parley P. "The Apocryphal Book of Enoch." MS I (July 1840):61.

LEWIS R. CHURCH

---

ENOS

See: Book of Mormon: Overview

---

ENSIGN

Since 1971 the full title of the official monthly magazine for the English-speaking adult members of the Church is The Ensign of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Printed in ten regular issues and two general conference issues (May and November), the Ensign is the publication link between Church headquarters and its adult members and friends, serving as a general-interest magazine, house organ, and instructional guide. It replaced the Improvement Era, Instructor, and the Relief Society Magazine in serving members of the Church eighteen years and older.

The word “ensign” is rich in meaning. The King James Bible translators used it to mean a signal, sign, identifying symbol, standard, or banner. Hence, we read the biblical prophecy that in the last days the Lord would “set up an ensign for the nations” (Isa. 11:12), a standard to which Israel and the righteous of all nations might gather in preparation for the Millennium (Isa. 5:26; 18:3; 31:6–9; 49:22; 62:10; Zech. 9:16). In latter-day scriptures, “ensign” symbolizes such “standards” as the new and everlasting covenant (D&C 45:9), the gospel of salvation (D&C 49:8–9; 2 Ne. 29:2), the latter-day ZION (D&C 64:41–43), and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (D&C 115:4–6).

The Ensign magazine proposes to strengthen the faith of members of the Church, to promulgate gospel truths, and to keep members abreast of Church policies, programs, and happenings. In addition to publishing the conference issues, it provides a monthly First Presidency message, used also in HOME TEACHING; a monthly Relief Society VISITING TEACHING message; articles on scripture, doctrine, and member experiences and testimonies; and support articles for individuals, couples, parents, and local Church leaders and teachers.

Circulation in 1971 was 300,000; in 1990 it was 615,000, nearly a 4 percent annual gain, reflecting Church growth trends. All its editors since Doyle L. Green (1971–1976) have been general authorities: Dean L. Larsen (1976–1978), James E. Faust (1978–1979), M. Russell Ballard (1979–1984), Carlos E. Asay (1984–1986), Joseph B. Wirthlin (1986), Hugh W. Pinnock (1987–1989), and Rex D. Pinegar (1989–). Jay M. Todd has been the managing editor since 1972.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Editorial. Ensign 1 (Jan. 1971):97.

Green, Doyle L. “The Church and Its Magazines.” Ensign 1 (Jan. 1971):12–15.

JAY M. TODD

EPHRAIM

Ephraim was the son of Joseph and Asenath and the younger brother of Manasseh (Gen. 41:50–52). According to the Bible, when Joseph brought his two sons to his father, Jacob, for a blessing, Ephraim received the birthright blessing in place of Manasseh (Gen. 48:13–20), one of the departures noted in the Bible from the custom of bestowing on the firstborn son the special privileges that belonged to him by right of primogeniture. The Lord continued to acknowledge Ephraim’s blessing centuries later when he said, “I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn” (Jer. 31:9; cf. 1 Chr. 5:1–2). Ephraim’s descendants will continue in significant roles. The Book of Mormon records that Joseph of old “obtained a promise of the Lord, that out of the fruit of his loins the Lord God would raise up a righteous branch unto the house of Israel . . . to be remembered in the covenants of the Lord” (2 Ne. 3:5). Further, a “choice seer” would arise from Joseph’s descendants who would “do a work for the fruit of [Joseph’s] loins, his brethren, which shall be of great worth unto them, even to the bringing of them to the knowledge of the covenants which I [the Lord] have made with thy fathers” (2 Ne. 3:7). Many Latter-day Saints believe that they are of the branch of Ephraim, of whom Joseph prophesied (2 Ne. 3:5–16; D&C 133:30–34) and that the Prophet Joseph SMITH is the “choice seer” (3 Ne. 3:6).

Because of their rebellion against the Lord many centuries ago, Ephraim’s descendants were scattered among the Gentile nations, along with members of the other tribes, beginning with the fall of the northern kingdom of Israel c. 722 B.C. (2 Kgs. 17:5–6; see also ISRAEL: SCATTERING OF ISRAEL and ISRAEL: LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL).

In the LAST DAYS, Ephraim’s descendants have the privilege and responsibility to hear the message of the RESTORATION of the gospel to the world and to gather scattered Israel (D&C 113:3–6). “We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion (the New Jerusalem) will be built upon the American continent” (A of F 10; cf. Deut. 4:27–31; 28; 29; 30; 3 Ne. 20–21). The keys of gathering Israel were committed to the Prophet Joseph Smith by MOSES on April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE (D&C 110:11). Many of Ephraim’s descendants are being gathered first, for they have the responsibility of preparing the way for the gathering of

Christ of Latter-day Saints. Printed in ten regular issues and two general conference issues (May and November), the Ensign is the publication link between Church headquarters and its adult members and friends, serving as a general-interest magazine, house organ, and instructional guide. It replaced the Improvement Era, Instructor, and the Relief Society Magazine in serving members of the Church eighteen years and older.

The word “ensign” is rich in meaning. The King James Bible translators used it to mean a signal, sign, identifying symbol, standard, or banner. Hence, we read the biblical prophecy that in the last days the Lord would “set up an ensign for the nations” (Isa. 11:12), a standard to which Israel and the righteous of all nations might gather in preparation for the Millennium (Isa. 5:26; 18:3; 31:6–9; 49:22; 62:10; Zech. 9:16). In latter-day scriptures, “ensign” symbolizes such “standards” as the new and everlasting covenant (D&C 45:9), the gospel of salvation (D&C 49:8–9; 2 Ne. 29:2), the latter-day ZION (D&C 64:41–43), and The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (D&C 115:4–6).

The Ensign magazine proposes to strengthen the faith of members of the Church, to promulgate gospel truths, and to keep members abreast of Church policies, programs, and happenings. In addition to publishing the conference issues, it provides a monthly First Presidency message, used also in HOME TEACHING; a monthly Relief Society VISITING TEACHING message; articles on scripture, doctrine, and member experiences and testimonies; and support articles for individuals, couples, parents, and local Church leaders and teachers.

Circulation in 1971 was 300,000; in 1990 it was 615,000, nearly a 4 percent annual gain, reflecting Church growth trends. All its editors since Doyle L. Green (1971–1976) have been general authorities: Dean L. Larsen (1976–1978), James E. Faust (1978–1979), M. Russell Ballard (1979–1984), Carlos E. Asay (1984–1986), Joseph B. Wirthlin (1986), Hugh W. Pinnock (1987–1989), and Rex D. Pinegar (1989–). Jay M. Todd has been the managing editor since 1972.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Editorial. Ensign 1 (Jan. 1971):97.
Green, Doyle L. “The Church and Its Magazines.” Ensign 1 (Jan. 1971):12–15.

JAY M. TODD

EPHRAIM

Ephraim was the son of Joseph and Asenath and the younger brother of Manasseh (Gen. 41:50–52). According to the Bible, when Joseph brought his two sons to his father, Jacob, for a blessing, Ephraim received the birthright blessing in place of Manasseh (Gen. 48:13–20), one of the departures noted in the Bible from the custom of bestowing on the firstborn son the special privileges that belonged to him by right of primogeniture. The Lord continued to acknowledge Ephraim’s blessing centuries later when he said, “I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn” (Jer. 31:9; cf. 1 Chr. 5:1–2). Ephraim’s descendants will continue in significant roles. The Book of Mormon records that Joseph of old “obtained a promise of the Lord, that out of the fruit of his loins the Lord God would raise up a righteous branch unto the house of Israel . . . to be remembered in the covenants of the Lord” (2 Ne. 3:5). Further, a “choice seer” would arise from Joseph’s descendants who would “do a work for the fruit of [Joseph’s] loins, his brethren, which shall be of great worth unto them, even to the bringing of them to the knowledge of the covenants which I [the Lord] have made with thy fathers” (2 Ne. 3:7). Many Latter-day Saints believe that they are of the branch of Ephraim, of whom Joseph prophesied (2 Ne. 3:5–16; D&C 133:30–34) and that the Prophet Joseph SMITH is the “choice seer” (3 Ne. 3:6).

Because of their rebellion against the Lord many centuries ago, Ephraim’s descendants were scattered among the Gentile nations, along with members of the other tribes, beginning with the fall of the northern kingdom of Israel c. 722 B.C. (2 Kgs. 17:5–6; see also ISRAEL: SCATTERING OF ISRAEL and ISRAEL: LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL).

In the LAST DAYS, Ephraim’s descendants have the privilege and responsibility to hear the message of the RESTORATION of the gospel to the world and to gather scattered Israel (D&C 113:3–6). “We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion (the New Jerusalem) will be built upon the American continent” (A of F 10; cf. Deut. 4:27–31; 28; 29; 30; 3 Ne. 20–21). The keys of gathering Israel were committed to the Prophet Joseph Smith by MOSES on April 3, 1836, in the KIRTLAND TEMPLE (D&C 110:11). Many of Ephraim’s descendants are being gathered first, for they have the responsibility of preparing the way for the gathering of the other tribes (D&C 113). "And they [others of the tribes of Israel] shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants . . . and there shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim, and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy" (D&C 133:30–33; see also ISRAEL: GATHERING OF ISRAEL).

One of the tools to be used in the gathering is the Book of Mormon, also known among Latter-day Saints as the stick of Joseph or the stick of Ephraim (Ezek. 37:15–19; 2 Ne. 3:12; D&C 27:5). It is to play an important part in convincing LAMANITES, Jews, and Gentiles that Jesus is the MESSIAH and that God does remember his covenant people (see BOOK OF MORMON: TITLE PAGE).

For Latter-day Saints, identification of a person's lineage in latter-day COVENANT ISRAEL is made under the hands of inspired PATRIARCHS through PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS that declare lineage. Elder John A. Widtsoe, an Apostle, declared, "In giving a blessing the patriarch may declare our lineage—that is, that we are of Israel, therefore of the family of Abraham, and of a specific tribe of Jacob. In the great majority of cases, Latter-day Saints are of the tribe of Ephraim, the tribe to which has been committed the leadership of the Latter-day work. Whether this lineage is of blood or adoption it does not matter" (p. 73; cf. Abr. 2:10).

The patriarchal blessings of most Latter-day Saints indicate that they are literal, blood descendants of ABRAHAM and of Israel. Those who are not literal descendants are adopted into the family of Abraham when they receive BAPTISM and CONFIRMATION (see LAW OF ADOPTION). They are then entitled to all the rights and privileges of heirs (TPJS, pp. 149–50). This doctrine of adoption was understood by ancient prophets and apostles (e.g., Rom. 11; 1 Ne. 10:14; Jacob 5; cf. D&C 84:33–34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness of the Articles of Faith, pp. 541–75. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS 3:244–64.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 72–77. Salt Lake City, 1943.

BRIAN L. SMITH

EPISTEMOLOGY

Epistemology is the branch of philosophy dealing with the nature and scope of knowledge. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has no uniform position on the classical issues of epistemology, such as the relationship of the sources of knowledge, theories of truth, and modes of verification, but the superiority of knowing by revelation from God is commonly cited from the scriptures.

The word "knowledge" is used in different ways and has different meanings in different cultures. Different kinds of knowledge may be independent of each other.

The Western philosophical tradition, like Western thought generally, emphasizes knowledge in the sense of knowing facts. But this emphasis may not be appropriate, especially from a gospel perspective. Some scriptures teach that other kinds of knowledge may be more important. Thus, Jesus prays, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3). This is knowledge by acquaintance more than "knowledge about" (cf. JST Matt. 7:32–33). There are also indications that factual knowledge alone is not sufficient for salvation: "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only" (James 1:22). At the request of President Spencer W. KIMBALL, a prophet, the words in a LDS children's hymn were changed from "Teach me all that I must know" to "Teach me all that I must do," because it is not enough just to know; one must do the will of the Lord.

A related gospel theme is that knowing comes from doing. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself" (John 7:17). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught, "We cannot keep all the commandments without first knowing them, and we cannot expect to know all, or more than we now know unless we comply with or keep those we have already received" (TPJS, p. 256).

In formal philosophy, "knowing," in the sense of knowing facts, is often defined to mean true belief together with good reasons. In other words, a person knows some statement X if and only if that person believes X, and if X is true, and if the person has good reasons for believing X. The European-American philosophical tradition recognizes two kinds of reasons that support the claim to the other tribes (D&C 113). "And they [others of the tribes of Israel] shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim, my servants . . . and there shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim, and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy" (D&C 133:30–33; see also ISRAEL: GATHERING OF ISRAEL).

One of the tools to be used in the gathering is the Book of Mormon, also known among Latter-day Saints as the stick of Joseph or the stick of Ephraim (Ezek. 37:15–19; 2 Ne. 3:12; D&C 27:5). It is to play an important part in convincing LAMANITES, Jews, and Gentiles that Jesus is the MESSIAH and that God does remember his covenant people (see BOOK OF MORMON: TITLE PAGE).

For Latter-day Saints, identification of a person's lineage in latter-day COVENANT ISRAEL is made under the hands of inspired PATRIARCHS through PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS that declare lineage. Elder John A. Widtsoe, an Apostle, declared, "In giving a blessing the patriarch may declare our lineage—that is, that we are of Israel, therefore of the family of Abraham, and of a specific tribe of Jacob. In the great majority of cases, Latter-day Saints are of the tribe of Ephraim, the tribe to which has been committed the leadership of the Latter-day work. Whether this lineage is of blood or adoption it does not matter" (p. 73; cf. Abr. 2:10).

The patriarchal blessings of most Latter-day Saints indicate that they are literal, blood descendants of ABRAHAM and of Israel. Those who are not literal descendants are adopted into the family of Abraham when they receive BAPTISM and CONFIRMATION (see LAW OF ADOPTION). They are then entitled to all the rights and privileges of heirs (TPJS, pp. 149–50). This doctrine of adoption was understood by ancient prophets and apostles (e.g., Rom. 11; 1 Ne. 10:14; Jacob 5; cf. D&C 84:33–34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness of the Articles of Faith, pp. 541–75. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. DS 3:244–64.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 72–77. Salt Lake City, 1943.

BRIAN L. SMITH

EPISTEMOLOGY

Epistemology is the branch of philosophy dealing with the nature and scope of knowledge. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has no uniform position on the classical issues of epistemology, such as the relationship of the sources of knowledge, theories of truth, and modes of verification, but the superiority of knowing by revelation from God is commonly cited from the scriptures.

The word "knowledge" is used in different ways and has different meanings in different cultures. Different kinds of knowledge may be independent of each other.

The Western philosophical tradition, like Western thought generally, emphasizes knowledge in the sense of knowing facts. But this emphasis may not be appropriate, especially from a gospel perspective. Some scriptures teach that other kinds of knowledge may be more important. Thus, Jesus prays, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3). This is knowledge by acquaintance more than "knowledge about" (cf. JST Matt. 7:32–33). There are also indications that factual knowledge alone is not sufficient for salvation: "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only" (James 1:22). At the request of President Spencer W. KIMBALL, a prophet, the words in a LDS children's hymn were changed from "Teach me all that I must know" to "Teach me all that I must do," because it is not enough just to know; one must do the will of the Lord.

A related gospel theme is that knowing comes from doing. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself" (John 7:17). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught, "We cannot keep all the commandments without first knowing them, and we cannot expect to know all, or more than we now know unless we comply with or keep those we have already received" (TPJS, p. 256).

In formal philosophy, "knowing," in the sense of knowing facts, is often defined to mean true belief together with good reasons. In other words, a person knows some statement X if and only if that person believes X, and if X is true, and if the person has good reasons for believing X. The European-American philosophical tradition recognizes two kinds of reasons that support the claim to know: rational argument and empirical evidence. Within the Church these are tacitly accepted as sources of knowledge, sometimes even of religious knowledge. For example, after reviewing the traditional arguments for the existence of God, James E. Talmage observed that some were “at least strongly corroborative” of God’s existence (AF, p. 29).

However, there is a continuing tradition, based on the scriptures and reinforced by modern Church leaders, that specifically religious knowledge requires a different and distinctively spiritual source. “We believe that no man can know that Jesus is the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost. We believe in [the gift of the Holy Ghost] in all its fulness, and power, and greatness, and glory” (TPJS, p. 243; D&C 76:114–16). It is widely accepted by Latter-day Saints that gospel knowledge must ultimately be obtained by spiritual rather than exclusively rational or empirical means (e.g., 1 Cor. 12:3). Thus, in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, there is no clear counterpart to the Roman Catholic tradition of natural theology.

One of the most suggestive and frequently cited scriptures in LDS teaching makes the point: “And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things” (Moro. 10:4–5). This scripture is usually taken to apply to all knowledge. This suggests that both rational argument and empirical evidence, the two traditional approaches to knowledge, can be either supplanted by or encompassed within spiritual knowledge. Of course, the scripture does not say that knowledge comes only by the Holy Ghost. Yet, within the Church, it is often held that what might be thought of as secular learning, for example, modern scientific knowledge, is directly associated with the RESTORATION of the gospel and is rooted in divine inspiration throughout the world.

[See also Faith in Jesus Christ; Prophets; Reason and Revelation; Science and Religion.]

K. CODELL CARTER

EQUALITY

Equality among persons is understood by Latter-day Saints as essential to divine LOVE, which explains and justifies all other ethical virtues and principles (Matt. 22:37–40). All persons are of equal value in the sight of God. Each person (of every nation and every race) is as precious to him as another (2 Ne. 26:33; Alma 26:37). From God all people will receive equivalent opportunities through Jesus Christ to attain ETERNAL LIFE, his greatest blessing (1 Ne. 17:33–35; Hel. 14:17; D&C 18:10–12). All who are worthy to become HEIRS of Christ will enjoy equality with him and with each other in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 88:106–107).

Latter-day Saints believe that when people love as God requires them to love (John 15:9–12), having full and equal regard for one another, they can form a ZION society as directed by the Lord and enjoy in this world the type of equality that defines relations between persons in the celestial world (D&C 78:4–8; 105:4–5). References to equality in latter-day SCRIPTURES primarily concern the building of Zion and living according to celestial LAW. In Zion the people have “all things common among them” (3 Ne. 26:19; 4 Ne. 1:3; cf. D&C 82:17–18; 104:70). They have equal chances to develop their abilities and equal opportunity to realize them in the work of Zion, all contributing according to their individual strengths and talents (D&C 82:17–18; Alma 1:26). A Zion people labor together as equals by organizing themselves according to the principle of “equal power” (D&C 76:94–95; 78:5–7; 105:4–6). For example, on the local level “all things” are done according to the “counsel” and “consent” of the community (D&C 104:21). Each member has an equal role in giving counsel and an equal vote in giving consent (see COMMON CONSENT). But equality of power also defines the relations between members so that each is the center of decision and action in performing an individual stewardship within the community (D&C 82:17; 104:70–76).

Celestial law also requires that persons receive as equals that which is essential to survival and contributes to well-being. Consequently, in Zion there are “no poor among them” (Moses 7:18; 4 Ne. 1:3). This does not mean that every person receives the same amount. The “needs,” “wants,” and “circumstances” of individuals vary so that treatment of them must also vary to be equal in effect (D&C 51:3, 8; 42:33). Still, it is “not given that one should possess that which is above another.” When such inequality exists, “the world lieth in sin” (D&C 49:20; cf. Alma 5:53–54), and know: rational argument and empirical evidence. Within the Church these are tacitly accepted as sources of knowledge, sometimes even of religious knowledge. For example, after reviewing the traditional arguments for the existence of God, James E. Talmage observed that some were “at least strongly corroborative” of God’s existence (AF, p. 29).

However, there is a continuing tradition, based on the scriptures and reinforced by modern Church leaders, that specifically religious knowledge requires a different and distinctively spiritual source. “We believe that no man can know that Jesus is the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost. We believe in [the gift of the Holy Ghost] in all its fulness, and power, and greatness, and glory” (TPJS, p. 243; D&C 76:114–16). It is widely accepted by Latter-day Saints that gospel knowledge must ultimately be obtained by spiritual rather than exclusively rational or empirical means (e.g., 1 Cor. 12:3). Thus, in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, there is no clear counterpart to the Roman Catholic tradition of natural theology.

One of the most suggestive and frequently cited scriptures in LDS teaching makes the point: “And by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things” (Moro. 10:4–5). This scripture is usually taken to apply to all knowledge. This suggests that both rational argument and empirical evidence, the two traditional approaches to knowledge, can be either supplanted by or encompassed within spiritual knowledge. Of course, the scripture does not say that knowledge comes only by the Holy Ghost. Yet, within the Church, it is often held that what might be thought of as secular learning, for example, modern scientific knowledge, is directly associated with the RESTORATION of the gospel and is rooted in divine inspiration throughout the world.

[See also Faith in Jesus Christ; Prophets; Reason and Revelation; Science and Religion.]

K. CODELL CARTER

EQUALITY

Equality among persons is understood by Latter-day Saints as essential to divine LOVE, which explains and justifies all other ethical virtues and principles (Matt. 22:37–40). All persons are of equal value in the sight of God. Each person (of every nation and every race) is as precious to him as another (2 Ne. 26:33; Alma 26:37). From God all people will receive equivalent opportunities through Jesus Christ to attain ETERNAL LIFE, his greatest blessing (1 Ne. 17:33–35; Hel. 14:17; D&C 18:10–12). All who are worthy to become HEIRS of Christ will enjoy equality with him and with each other in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 88:106–107).

Latter-day Saints believe that when people love as God requires them to love (John 15:9–12), having full and equal regard for one another, they can form a ZION society as directed by the Lord and enjoy in this world the type of equality that defines relations between persons in the celestial world (D&C 78:4–8; 105:4–5). References to equality in latter-day SCRIPTURES primarily concern the building of Zion and living according to celestial LAW. In Zion the people have “all things common among them” (3 Ne. 26:19; 4 Ne. 1:3; cf. D&C 82:17–18; 104:70). They have equal chances to develop their abilities and equal opportunity to realize them in the work of Zion, all contributing according to their individual strengths and talents (D&C 82:17–18; Alma 1:26). A Zion people labor together as equals by organizing themselves according to the principle of “equal power” (D&C 76:94–95; 78:5–7; 105:4–6). For example, on the local level “all things” are done according to the “counsel” and “consent” of the community (D&C 104:21). Each member has an equal role in giving counsel and an equal vote in giving consent (see COMMON CONSENT). But equality of power also defines the relations between members so that each is the center of decision and action in performing an individual stewardship within the community (D&C 82:17; 104:70–76).

Celestial law also requires that persons receive as equals that which is essential to survival and contributes to well-being. Consequently, in Zion there are “no poor among them” (Moses 7:18; 4 Ne. 1:3). This does not mean that every person receives the same amount. The “needs,” “wants,” and “circumstances” of individuals vary so that treatment of them must also vary to be equal in effect (D&C 51:3, 8; 42:33). Still, it is “not given that one should possess that which is above another.” When such inequality exists, “the world lieth in sin” (D&C 49:20; cf. Alma 5:53–54), and

"the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit [are] withheld" (D&C 70:14).

A. D. SORENSEN

ETERNAL LIFE

The scriptures clearly state that eternal life comes from God through his son Jesus Christ (John 3:16; 14:6; Heb. 5:9; 2 Ne. 31:20–21; Alma 11:40; Ether 3:14; D&C 45:8), and is the "greatest of all the gifts of God" (D&C 14:7; see also EXALTATION; GODHOOD). To Latter-day Saints the phrase "eternal life" refers not only to everlasting life but also and more particularly to the quality of life God lives. Eternal life is available to all people who have lived on earth who accept this gift by their obedience to God's laws and ordinances.

God's work, and the source of his glory, is bringing to pass "the immortality and eternal life" of his children (Moses 1:39). In other words, God works to enable his children's return to his presence so that they may both live with him and live as he lives.

So allied is Christ with the Father that the scriptures sometimes define eternal life as "knowing" them: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3; D&C 132:24).

Knowing Christ in this world comes by receiving him and his law (D&C 132:23–24). Jeremiah spoke for the Lord: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. . . . And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour . . . saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me" (Jer. 31:33–34). As stated in the Gospel of John, one begins to know Christ and his will by searching the scriptures, for, as Jesus affirmed, "they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39).

Having the law written in one's heart implies an acceptance that prompts action; indeed, the scriptures mention many actions that one must take in order to receive the gift of eternal life. To enter the path leading toward eternal life, one must exercise faith in Christ (John 3:36; 6:47; Moro. 7:41), repent, be baptized for the remission of one's sins (2 Ne. 31:17–18), and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. The scriptures state that once on the path, the believer must strive to keep the

COMMANDMENTS (2 Ne. 31:19–20; Alma 7:15–16)—that is, to do the works of RIGHTEOUSNESS (D&C 59:23), primary among which is charity (1 Cor. 13; Matt. 25:34–36). The believer must also ENDURE TO THE END (2 Ne. 31:20–21; D&C 50:5; cf. Paul's phrase "patient continuance in well doing," Rom. 2:7), and make covenants in connection with TEMPLE ORDINANCES (D&C 124:55; 128:12).

While in mortality, individuals may come to a stage of knowing the Father and the Son that allows the Lord to promise them eternal life. This occurrence is described in scripture as receiving the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE (D&C 88:3–4) and the Second Comforter (John 14:16; D&C 88:2–4; see also JESUS CHRIST, SECOND COMFORTER); having the more sure word of prophecy (D&C 131:5); and having one's CALLING AND ELECTION made sure (2 Pet. 1:10; D&C 131:5).

God invites all people to seek and ask earnestly for eternal life, and reassures all who do so that they will not be given a stone (cf. Matt. 7:7–11). They are promised "revelation upon revelation, knowledge upon knowledge," which brings an understanding of "peaceable things—that which bringeth joy, that which bringeth life eternal" (D&C 42:61). Those who will receive eternal life in its fullest come forth in the first RESURRECTION (Mosiah 15:21–25) and inherit the highest degree of glory in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 76:50–59; 88:4; 101:65).

The Prophet Joseph Smith was at a loss for words to capture the eternal splendor of God the Father and of his son Jesus Christ, "whose brightness and glory defy all description" (JS—H 1:17). Language can describe the glories of eternal life only inadequately through metaphors of overwhelmingly bright light or fire (Ex. 24:17; Acts 26:13–15; Rev. 21:23; 1 Ne. 1:8–10; D&C 110:1–4; cf. "shine as the brightness of the firmament," Dan. 12:3); pure truth (John 14:6; Ether 4:12; D&C 84:45–48; 93:36; Moses 7:29–40); glass or crystal (Rev. 4:6; D&C 130:9); and timelessness (Ps. 90:4; 2 Pet. 3:8; Rev. 10:6; Alma 40:8; D&C 88:110). Paul points out how far eternal life exceeds the descriptive ability of language when he says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

[See also Immortality and Eternal Life.]

"the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit [are] withheld" (D&C 70:14).

A. D. SORENSEN

ETERNAL LIFE

The scriptures clearly state that eternal life comes from God through his son Jesus Christ (John 3:16; 14:6; Heb. 5:9; 2 Ne. 31:20–21; Alma 11:40; Ether 3:14; D&C 45:8), and is the "greatest of all the gifts of God" (D&C 14:7; see also EXALTATION; GODHOOD). To Latter-day Saints the phrase "eternal life" refers not only to everlasting life but also and more particularly to the quality of life God lives. Eternal life is available to all people who have lived on earth who accept this gift by their obedience to God's laws and ordinances.

God's work, and the source of his glory, is bringing to pass "the immortality and eternal life" of his children (Moses 1:39). In other words, God works to enable his children's return to his presence so that they may both live with him and live as he lives.

So allied is Christ with the Father that the scriptures sometimes define eternal life as "knowing" them: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3; D&C 132:24).

Knowing Christ in this world comes by receiving him and his law (D&C 132:23–24). Jeremiah spoke for the Lord: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. . . . And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour . . . saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me" (Jer. 31:33–34). As stated in the Gospel of John, one begins to know Christ and his will by searching the scriptures, for, as Jesus affirmed, "they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39).

Having the law written in one's heart implies an acceptance that prompts action; indeed, the scriptures mention many actions that one must take in order to receive the gift of eternal life. To enter the path leading toward eternal life, one must exercise faith in Christ (John 3:36; 6:47; Moro. 7:41), repent, be baptized for the remission of one's sins (2 Ne. 31:17–18), and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. The scriptures state that once on the path, the believer must strive to keep the

COMMANDMENTS (2 Ne. 31:19–20; Alma 7:15–16)—that is, to do the works of RIGHTEOUSNESS (D&C 59:23), primary among which is charity (1 Cor. 13; Matt. 25:34–36). The believer must also ENDURE TO THE END (2 Ne. 31:20–21; D&C 50:5; cf. Paul's phrase "patient continuance in well doing," Rom. 2:7), and make covenants in connection with TEMPLE ORDINANCES (D&C 124:55; 128:12).

While in mortality, individuals may come to a stage of knowing the Father and the Son that allows the Lord to promise them eternal life. This occurrence is described in scripture as receiving the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE (D&C 88:3–4) and the Second Comforter (John 14:16; D&C 88:2–4; see also JESUS CHRIST, SECOND COMFORTER); having the more sure word of prophecy (D&C 131:5); and having one's CALLING AND ELECTION made sure (2 Pet. 1:10; D&C 131:5).

God invites all people to seek and ask earnestly for eternal life, and reassures all who do so that they will not be given a stone (cf. Matt. 7:7–11). They are promised "revelation upon revelation, knowledge upon knowledge," which brings an understanding of "peaceable things—that which bringeth joy, that which bringeth life eternal" (D&C 42:61). Those who will receive eternal life in its fullest come forth in the first RESURRECTION (Mosiah 15:21–25) and inherit the highest degree of glory in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 76:50–59; 88:4; 101:65).

The Prophet Joseph Smith was at a loss for words to capture the eternal splendor of God the Father and of his son Jesus Christ, "whose brightness and glory defy all description" (JS—H 1:17). Language can describe the glories of eternal life only inadequately through metaphors of overwhelmingly bright light or fire (Ex. 24:17; Acts 26:13–15; Rev. 21:23; 1 Ne. 1:8–10; D&C 110:1–4; cf. "shine as the brightness of the firmament," Dan. 12:3); pure truth (John 14:6; Ether 4:12; D&C 84:45–48; 93:36; Moses 7:29–40); glass or crystal (Rev. 4:6; D&C 130:9); and timelessness (Ps. 90:4; 2 Pet. 3:8; Rev. 10:6; Alma 40:8; D&C 88:110). Paul points out how far eternal life exceeds the descriptive ability of language when he says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

[See also Immortality and Eternal Life.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Monson, Thomas S. Pathways to Perfection. Salt Lake City, 1976.

CATHERINE CORMAN PARRY

ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE

“Eternal lives” is a term that refers to the right and power to beget children after the resurrection, granted to those who are exalted in the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. This is an aspect of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. “In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage]; And if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase” (D&C 131:1–4).

This distinctive doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was taught by Joseph SMITH and was especially articulated on May 16–17, 1843, at Ramus, Illinois, where he often visited and preached. Conversing on spiritual topics with a small party of friends, the Prophet Joseph Smith shed light on the concept of eternal increase: “Except a man and his wife enter into an everlasting covenant and be married for eternity, while in this probation, by the power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, they will cease to increase when they die; that is, they will not have any children after the resurrection. But those who are married by the power and authority of the priesthood in this life, and continue without committing the sin against the Holy Ghost, will continue to increase and have children in the celestial glory” (TPJS, pp. 300–301). Doctrine and Covenants, section 131, is largely concerned with this subject, and was first included in 1876.

A husband and wife who are married in the new and everlasting covenant and sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE under the proper PRIESTHOOD authority are promised that they shall inherit “thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers,” and their “glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever” (D&C 132:19). They are likened to gods, having no end. They share in the promises of eternal posterity made to ABRAHAM and SARAH: “Both in the world and out of the world should they continue as innumerable as the stars” (D&C 132:30).

Brigham YOUNG, in 1862, spoke of eternal lives, stating that the opportunity to become heirs to all things, and to become a “King of kings and Lord of lords, . . . is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives. . . . There will be no end to the increase of the faithful” (JD 10:5). He described such a situation as a pleasing one, creating happiness beyond mortal comprehension. In 1864 he elaborated: “In like manner, every faithful son of God, becomes, as it were, Adam to the race that springs from his loins, when they are embraced in the covenants and blessings of the Holy Priesthood . . . in the progress of eternal lives. . . . We have not yet received our kingdoms, neither will we, until we have finished our work on the earth, passed through the ordeals, are brought up by the power of the resurrection, and are crowned with glory and eternal lives” (JD 10:355).

Latter-day Saints believe that all worthy men and women, through righteous living and being sealed by the power of the priesthood, will in ETERNAL LIFE inherit, with ADAM and EVE, Abraham and Sarah, and all the faithful, those same blessings and enjoy a continuation of seeds forever, or eternal increase.

SHIRLEY S. RICKS

ETERNAL PROGRESSION

The principle of eternal progression cannot be precisely defined or comprehended, yet it is fundamental to the LDS worldview. The phrase “eternal progression” first occurs in the discourses of Brigham YOUNG. It embodies many concepts taught by Joseph SMITH, especially in his KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE. It is based on the proposition that “there is no such thing as principle, power, wisdom, knowledge, life, position, or anything that can be imagined, that remains stationary—they must increase or decrease” (Young, JD 1:350).

Progression takes many forms. In one sense, eternal progression refers to everything that people learn and experience by their choices as they progress from PREMORTAL LIFE, to MORTALITY, to postmortal spirit life, and to a resurrected state in the presence of God. Personal progression is possible in each of these states, but not the same kind of

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Monson, Thomas S. Pathways to Perfection. Salt Lake City, 1976.

CATHERINE CORMAN PARRY

ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE

“Eternal lives” is a term that refers to the right and power to beget children after the resurrection, granted to those who are exalted in the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. This is an aspect of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. “In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage]; And if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase” (D&C 131:1–4).

This distinctive doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was taught by Joseph SMITH and was especially articulated on May 16–17, 1843, at Ramus, Illinois, where he often visited and preached. Conversing on spiritual topics with a small party of friends, the Prophet Joseph Smith shed light on the concept of eternal increase: “Except a man and his wife enter into an everlasting covenant and be married for eternity, while in this probation, by the power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, they will cease to increase when they die; that is, they will not have any children after the resurrection. But those who are married by the power and authority of the priesthood in this life, and continue without committing the sin against the Holy Ghost, will continue to increase and have children in the celestial glory” (TPJS, pp. 300–301). Doctrine and Covenants, section 131, is largely concerned with this subject, and was first included in 1876.

A husband and wife who are married in the new and everlasting covenant and sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE under the proper PRIESTHOOD authority are promised that they shall inherit “thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers,” and their “glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever” (D&C 132:19). They are likened to gods, having no end. They share in the promises of eternal posterity made to ABRAHAM and SARAH: “Both in the world and out of the world should they continue as innumerable as the stars” (D&C 132:30).

Brigham YOUNG, in 1862, spoke of eternal lives, stating that the opportunity to become heirs to all things, and to become a “King of kings and Lord of lords, . . . is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives. . . . There will be no end to the increase of the faithful” (JD 10:5). He described such a situation as a pleasing one, creating happiness beyond mortal comprehension. In 1864 he elaborated: “In like manner, every faithful son of God, becomes, as it were, Adam to the race that springs from his loins, when they are embraced in the covenants and blessings of the Holy Priesthood . . . in the progress of eternal lives. . . . We have not yet received our kingdoms, neither will we, until we have finished our work on the earth, passed through the ordeals, are brought up by the power of the resurrection, and are crowned with glory and eternal lives” (JD 10:355).

Latter-day Saints believe that all worthy men and women, through righteous living and being sealed by the power of the priesthood, will in ETERNAL LIFE inherit, with ADAM and EVE, Abraham and Sarah, and all the faithful, those same blessings and enjoy a continuation of seeds forever, or eternal increase.

SHIRLEY S. RICKS

ETERNAL PROGRESSION

The principle of eternal progression cannot be precisely defined or comprehended, yet it is fundamental to the LDS worldview. The phrase “eternal progression” first occurs in the discourses of Brigham YOUNG. It embodies many concepts taught by Joseph SMITH, especially in his KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE. It is based on the proposition that “there is no such thing as principle, power, wisdom, knowledge, life, position, or anything that can be imagined, that remains stationary—they must increase or decrease” (Young, JD 1:350).

Progression takes many forms. In one sense, eternal progression refers to everything that people learn and experience by their choices as they progress from PREMORTAL LIFE, to MORTALITY, to postmortal spirit life, and to a resurrected state in the presence of God. Personal progression is possible in each of these states, but not the same kind of

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Monson, Thomas S. Pathways to Perfection. Salt Lake City, 1976.

CATHERINE CORMAN PARRY

ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE

“Eternal lives” is a term that refers to the right and power to beget children after the resurrection, granted to those who are exalted in the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. This is an aspect of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. “In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage]; And if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase” (D&C 131:1–4).

This distinctive doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was taught by Joseph SMITH and was especially articulated on May 16–17, 1843, at Ramus, Illinois, where he often visited and preached. Conversing on spiritual topics with a small party of friends, the Prophet Joseph Smith shed light on the concept of eternal increase: “Except a man and his wife enter into an everlasting covenant and be married for eternity, while in this probation, by the power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, they will cease to increase when they die; that is, they will not have any children after the resurrection. But those who are married by the power and authority of the priesthood in this life, and continue without committing the sin against the Holy Ghost, will continue to increase and have children in the celestial glory” (TPJS, pp. 300–301). Doctrine and Covenants, section 131, is largely concerned with this subject, and was first included in 1876.

A husband and wife who are married in the new and everlasting covenant and sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE under the proper PRIESTHOOD authority are promised that they shall inherit “thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers,” and their “glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever” (D&C 132:19). They are likened to gods, having no end. They share in the promises of eternal posterity made to ABRAHAM and SARAH: “Both in the world and out of the world should they continue as innumerable as the stars” (D&C 132:30).

Brigham YOUNG, in 1862, spoke of eternal lives, stating that the opportunity to become heirs to all things, and to become a “King of kings and Lord of lords, . . . is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives. . . . There will be no end to the increase of the faithful” (JD 10:5). He described such a situation as a pleasing one, creating happiness beyond mortal comprehension. In 1864 he elaborated: “In like manner, every faithful son of God, becomes, as it were, Adam to the race that springs from his loins, when they are embraced in the covenants and blessings of the Holy Priesthood . . . in the progress of eternal lives. . . . We have not yet received our kingdoms, neither will we, until we have finished our work on the earth, passed through the ordeals, are brought up by the power of the resurrection, and are crowned with glory and eternal lives” (JD 10:355).

Latter-day Saints believe that all worthy men and women, through righteous living and being sealed by the power of the priesthood, will in ETERNAL LIFE inherit, with ADAM and EVE, Abraham and Sarah, and all the faithful, those same blessings and enjoy a continuation of seeds forever, or eternal increase.

SHIRLEY S. RICKS

ETERNAL PROGRESSION

The principle of eternal progression cannot be precisely defined or comprehended, yet it is fundamental to the LDS worldview. The phrase “eternal progression” first occurs in the discourses of Brigham YOUNG. It embodies many concepts taught by Joseph SMITH, especially in his KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE. It is based on the proposition that “there is no such thing as principle, power, wisdom, knowledge, life, position, or anything that can be imagined, that remains stationary—they must increase or decrease” (Young, JD 1:350).

Progression takes many forms. In one sense, eternal progression refers to everything that people learn and experience by their choices as they progress from PREMORTAL LIFE, to MORTALITY, to postmortal spirit life, and to a resurrected state in the presence of God. Personal progression is possible in each of these states, but not the same kind of progression. Progression apparently occurred in the premortal life, for most spirits there chose to follow Christ and some were noble and great, while others chose to follow Lucifer. Entering mortality affords opportunities for further progression. Obtaining a PHYSICAL BODY is a crucial step, enabling a person to experience physical sensations of all kinds and to progress in knowledge and understanding, all of which will rise with the person in the Resurrection (D&C 130:18). Brigham Young taught that even in mortality, "We are in eternity" (JD 10:22), and the object of this existence is "to learn to enjoy more, and to increase in knowledge and experience" (JD 14:228). "When we have learned to live according to the full value of the life we now possess, we are prepared for further advancement in the scale of eternal progression—for a more glorious and exalted sphere" (JD 9:168).

Life is never static. "One must progress or retrograde. One cannot stand still. Activity is the law of growth, and growth, progress, is the law of life" (A. Bowen, in Christ's Ideals for Living, O. Tanner, ed., Salt Lake City, 1980, p. 368). A person's attitude about "'eternal progression' will largely determine his philosophy of life . . . exalting, increasing, expanding and extending broader and broader until we can know as we are known, see as we are seen" (Young, JD 16:165).

At the Resurrection and Judgment, people will be assigned a DEGREE OF GLORY. Further progress is believed possible within each degree. Marriage and family life, however, continue only in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, allowing "eternal increase" through having spirit children (see ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE). "All this and more that cannot enter into our hearts to conceive is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives" (Young, JD 10:5).

No official Church teaching attempts to specify all the ways in which God progresses in his exalted spheres; "there is no end to [His] works, neither to [His] words" (Moses 1:38). God's glory and power are enhanced as his children progress in glory and power (see Moses 1:39; Young, JD 10:5). Ideas have been advanced to explain how God might progress in knowledge and still be perfect and know all things (see FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD; OMNIPOTENT GOD).

The concept of eternal progression is a salient feature of the gospel of Jesus Christ, readily distinguishable from traditional Christian theology. The philosophical views of the Middle Ages were basically incompatible with such a concept, and the idea of progress that emerged in the eighteenth-century Enlightenment was that of social evolution (Bury, The Idea of Progress, London, 1932). The traditional Christian view has held that those in heaven enter "a state of eternal, inactive joy. In the presence of God they would worship him and sing praises to him eternally, but nothing more" (Widtsoe, p. 142). Latter-day Saints, however, constantly seek personal and righteous improvement not only by establishing ZION in this world, but by anticipating the continuation of progression eternally.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Widtsoe, John A. "Is Progress Eternal or Is There Progress in Heaven?" IE 54 (Mar. 1951):142; see also Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 179–85, Salt Lake City, 1960.

LISA RAMSEY ADAMS

---

ETHER

See: Book of Mormon: Book of Ether

---

ETHICS

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is typically involved in three levels of ethical concern: the theory of values; the foundations of moral decision; and the integration of personal and professional codes of ethics, such as those relating to medical, military, or governmental service. The inner dynamism of the Church and its increasing involvement with a confluence of cultures point beyond closed ethical systems. Latter-day Saints espouse an ethic of divine approbation; to discern the will of God and receive assurance that one is acting under God's approval are the ceaseless quest of DISCIPLESHIP. This may be called Spirit-guided morality.

The scriptures affirm that questions of the good and the right are intertwined with questions of the holy and with the primal Jewish-Christian imperative "Be ye holy for I am holy" (1 Pet. 1:16; cf. Lev. 11:44). Daily tensions between the sacred and the secular are part of the ethical dilemma,

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Monson, Thomas S. Pathways to Perfection. Salt Lake City, 1976.

CATHERINE CORMAN PARRY

ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE

“Eternal lives” is a term that refers to the right and power to beget children after the resurrection, granted to those who are exalted in the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM. This is an aspect of ETERNAL PROGRESSION. “In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this order of the priesthood [meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage]; And if he does not, he cannot obtain it. He may enter into the other, but that is the end of his kingdom; he cannot have an increase” (D&C 131:1–4).

This distinctive doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was taught by Joseph SMITH and was especially articulated on May 16–17, 1843, at Ramus, Illinois, where he often visited and preached. Conversing on spiritual topics with a small party of friends, the Prophet Joseph Smith shed light on the concept of eternal increase: “Except a man and his wife enter into an everlasting covenant and be married for eternity, while in this probation, by the power and authority of the Holy Priesthood, they will cease to increase when they die; that is, they will not have any children after the resurrection. But those who are married by the power and authority of the priesthood in this life, and continue without committing the sin against the Holy Ghost, will continue to increase and have children in the celestial glory” (TPJS, pp. 300–301). Doctrine and Covenants, section 131, is largely concerned with this subject, and was first included in 1876.

A husband and wife who are married in the new and everlasting covenant and sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE under the proper PRIESTHOOD authority are promised that they shall inherit “thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers,” and their “glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever” (D&C 132:19). They are likened to gods, having no end. They share in the promises of eternal posterity made to ABRAHAM and SARAH: “Both in the world and out of the world should they continue as innumerable as the stars” (D&C 132:30).

Brigham YOUNG, in 1862, spoke of eternal lives, stating that the opportunity to become heirs to all things, and to become a “King of kings and Lord of lords, . . . is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives. . . . There will be no end to the increase of the faithful” (JD 10:5). He described such a situation as a pleasing one, creating happiness beyond mortal comprehension. In 1864 he elaborated: “In like manner, every faithful son of God, becomes, as it were, Adam to the race that springs from his loins, when they are embraced in the covenants and blessings of the Holy Priesthood . . . in the progress of eternal lives. . . . We have not yet received our kingdoms, neither will we, until we have finished our work on the earth, passed through the ordeals, are brought up by the power of the resurrection, and are crowned with glory and eternal lives” (JD 10:355).

Latter-day Saints believe that all worthy men and women, through righteous living and being sealed by the power of the priesthood, will in ETERNAL LIFE inherit, with ADAM and EVE, Abraham and Sarah, and all the faithful, those same blessings and enjoy a continuation of seeds forever, or eternal increase.

SHIRLEY S. RICKS

ETERNAL PROGRESSION

The principle of eternal progression cannot be precisely defined or comprehended, yet it is fundamental to the LDS worldview. The phrase “eternal progression” first occurs in the discourses of Brigham YOUNG. It embodies many concepts taught by Joseph SMITH, especially in his KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE. It is based on the proposition that “there is no such thing as principle, power, wisdom, knowledge, life, position, or anything that can be imagined, that remains stationary—they must increase or decrease” (Young, JD 1:350).

Progression takes many forms. In one sense, eternal progression refers to everything that people learn and experience by their choices as they progress from PREMORTAL LIFE, to MORTALITY, to postmortal spirit life, and to a resurrected state in the presence of God. Personal progression is possible in each of these states, but not the same kind of progression. Progression apparently occurred in the premortal life, for most spirits there chose to follow Christ and some were noble and great, while others chose to follow Lucifer. Entering mortality affords opportunities for further progression. Obtaining a PHYSICAL BODY is a crucial step, enabling a person to experience physical sensations of all kinds and to progress in knowledge and understanding, all of which will rise with the person in the Resurrection (D&C 130:18). Brigham Young taught that even in mortality, "We are in eternity" (JD 10:22), and the object of this existence is "to learn to enjoy more, and to increase in knowledge and experience" (JD 14:228). "When we have learned to live according to the full value of the life we now possess, we are prepared for further advancement in the scale of eternal progression—for a more glorious and exalted sphere" (JD 9:168).

Life is never static. "One must progress or retrograde. One cannot stand still. Activity is the law of growth, and growth, progress, is the law of life" (A. Bowen, in Christ's Ideals for Living, O. Tanner, ed., Salt Lake City, 1980, p. 368). A person's attitude about "'eternal progression' will largely determine his philosophy of life . . . exalting, increasing, expanding and extending broader and broader until we can know as we are known, see as we are seen" (Young, JD 16:165).

At the Resurrection and Judgment, people will be assigned a DEGREE OF GLORY. Further progress is believed possible within each degree. Marriage and family life, however, continue only in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, allowing "eternal increase" through having spirit children (see ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE). "All this and more that cannot enter into our hearts to conceive is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives" (Young, JD 10:5).

No official Church teaching attempts to specify all the ways in which God progresses in his exalted spheres; "there is no end to [His] works, neither to [His] words" (Moses 1:38). God's glory and power are enhanced as his children progress in glory and power (see Moses 1:39; Young, JD 10:5). Ideas have been advanced to explain how God might progress in knowledge and still be perfect and know all things (see FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD; OMNIPOTENT GOD).

The concept of eternal progression is a salient feature of the gospel of Jesus Christ, readily distinguishable from traditional Christian theology. The philosophical views of the Middle Ages were basically incompatible with such a concept, and the idea of progress that emerged in the eighteenth-century Enlightenment was that of social evolution (Bury, The Idea of Progress, London, 1932). The traditional Christian view has held that those in heaven enter "a state of eternal, inactive joy. In the presence of God they would worship him and sing praises to him eternally, but nothing more" (Widtsoe, p. 142). Latter-day Saints, however, constantly seek personal and righteous improvement not only by establishing ZION in this world, but by anticipating the continuation of progression eternally.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Widtsoe, John A. "Is Progress Eternal or Is There Progress in Heaven?" IE 54 (Mar. 1951):142; see also Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 179–85, Salt Lake City, 1960.

LISA RAMSEY ADAMS

---

ETHER

See: Book of Mormon: Book of Ether

---

ETHICS

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is typically involved in three levels of ethical concern: the theory of values; the foundations of moral decision; and the integration of personal and professional codes of ethics, such as those relating to medical, military, or governmental service. The inner dynamism of the Church and its increasing involvement with a confluence of cultures point beyond closed ethical systems. Latter-day Saints espouse an ethic of divine approbation; to discern the will of God and receive assurance that one is acting under God's approval are the ceaseless quest of DISCIPLESHIP. This may be called Spirit-guided morality.

The scriptures affirm that questions of the good and the right are intertwined with questions of the holy and with the primal Jewish-Christian imperative "Be ye holy for I am holy" (1 Pet. 1:16; cf. Lev. 11:44). Daily tensions between the sacred and the secular are part of the ethical dilemma,